IT has been observed before, That the Ancients comprized their whole Service under Two General Heads, to which they gave the distinguishing Names of Missa Catechumenorum, and Missa Fidelium, the Service of the Catechumens, and the Service of Communicants or Believers; that is, as we would now term them, The Ante-Communion Service, and the Communion Service. The Service of the Catechumens was that part of Divine Worship, at which the Catechumens, and all others who were not perfect and full Communicants, were allowed to be present; and it consisted of Psalmody, Reading the Scriptures, Preaching, and Prayers for such particular Orders of Men, as were not admitted to participate of the holy Mysteries: And under these several Heads we must now consider it.

The Service usually began with Reading or Singing of Psalms, as appears from that of St. Jerom [a], describing the Service of the Egyptian Monks: They meet at nine a-clock, and then the Psalms are sung, and the Scriptures are read, and after Prayers they all sit down, and the Father preaches a Sermon to them. And so Cassian represents it [b]: That first the Psalms were sung, and then followed two Lessons, one out of the Old Testament, and the other out of the New. Only on the Lord's Day and the fifty Days of Pentecost, and the Sabbath or Saturday, they read one Lesson out of the Acts of the Apostles, or the Epistles, and the other out of the Gospels. But probably there might be a Difference in the Order of Reading in different Churches. And that may reconcile the different Opinions of learned Men concerning the Order of their Service. For some think they began with Reading the Scriptures, and others with a Prayer of Confession. The Author of the Constitutions, it is certain, preſcribes [c] firſt the reading of the Old Teſtament, and then the Pſalms, and after that the Acts of the Apoſtles and Epiſtles, and laſt of all the Goſpels. So that the Pſalms were intermingled with the Leſſons, according to the Rules and Preſcriptions which that Author had obſerved in ſome Churches. St. Baſil [d] ſpeaks of a Confeſſion made to God upon their Knees, after which they roſe up, and betook themſelves to ſing Pſalms to God. But that was in their Vigils or Morning Prayers before Day, and moſt probably only a private Confeſſion, which every Man made ſilently by himſelf, before they began the publick Service. But if we take it for a publick Confeſſion, as the learned Hamon Leſtrange [e] does, then it will argue, That the Eaſtern Churches began their Morning Antelucan Service with a Prayer of Confeſſion, and ſo went on to their Pſalmody, which was the great Exerciſe and Entertainment of their Nocturnal Vigils. And indeed it was their Exerciſe at all Times in the Church, as St. Auſtin [f] notes, to fill up all Vacuities, when neither the Reading of the Scriptures, nor Preaching, nor Prayers, interpoſed to hinder them from it. All other Spaces were ſpent in ſinging of Pſalms, than which there could not be any Exerciſe more uſeful and edifying, or more holy and pious, in his Opinion. And upon this Account (if the Obſervation of Leſtrange be rightly made out [g] of Chryſoſtom) the People were uſed to entertain the Time with ſinging of Pſalms, before the Congregation was complete and fully aſſembled. I take no Notice here of their Pſalmody at other Times, at their Meals, at their Labours, and in their private Devotions: Becauſe, though this is frequently mentioned by the Ancients with great and large Encomiums, yet it differed in many reſpects from the common Pſalmody, and we can draw little Light or Argument from that to explain the publick Service.

[a] Hieron. Ep. 22. ad Eustoch. cap. 15. Post horam nonam in commune concurritur, Psalmi resonant, Scripturæ recitantur ex more. Et completis Orationibus, cunctisque residentibus, medius, quem Patrem vocant, incipit disputare, &c. [b] Cassian. Institut. lib. 2. cap. 6. Quibus (Psalmis) Lectiones geminas adjungentes, id est, unam Veteris & aliam novi Testamenti, &c. In die vero Sabbati vel Dominico utrasque de novo recitant Testamento, id est, unam de Apostolo, vel Actibus Apostolorum, & aliam de Evangeliis. Quod etiam totis Quinquagesimæ diebus faciunt

SECT. II. The Pſalms intermixed with Leſſons and Prayers in ſome Churches.

As to the publick Pſalmody of the Church, though we take it for the firſt and leading Part of the Service, yet we are not ſo to underſtand it, as if it was all performed at once in one continued Courſe of Repeating many Pſalms together without Intermiſſion, but rather with ſome Reſpite, and a Mixture of other Parts of Divine Service, to make the whole more agreeable and delightful. At leaſt, it was apparently ſo in the Practice of ſome Churches. For the Council of Laodicea made a Decree [h], That the Pſalms ſhould not be ſung one immediately after another, but that a Leſſon ſhould come between every Pſalm. And St. Auſtin plainly intimates, that this was the Practice of his own Church. For in one of his Homilies [i] he takes notice firſt of the reading of the Epiſtle, then of ſinging the xcvth Pſalm, O come let us worſhip, and fall down, and kneel before the Lord our Maker, and after that of a Leſſon read out of the Goſpel. And in another Homily [k] he ſpeaks of them in the ſame Order. In the Leſſon out of the Epiſtle, ſays he, Thanks are given to God for the Faith of the Gentiles. In the Pſalm we ſaid, Turn us again, Thou Lord God of Hoſts, ſhew the Light of thy Countenance, and we ſhall be whole. In the Goſpel we were called to the Lord's Supper. By comparing theſe two places of St. Auſtin together, we may obſerve, that it was not any particular Pſalm that was appropriated to come between the Epiſtle and Goſpel, but the Pſalm that was in the ordinary Courſe of Reading. For the xcvth is mentioned in one Place, and the lxxxth Pſalm in the other. Mabillon has obſerved the ſame Practice in the French Churches, out of the Collation between the Catholicks and Arians in the Reign of Gundobadus King of Burgundy, An. 499. For in the Relation of that Conference [l] it is ſaid, That on the Vigil before the Day of Diſputation, in celebrating the Divine Offices, it happened that the firſt Leſſon that was out of the Pentateuch, had thoſe Words, I will harden Pharaoh's Heart, &c. After which the Pſalms were ſung, and then another Leſſon was read out of Iſaiah, in which were theſe Words, Go and tell this People, Hearing ye ſhall hear, and ſhall not underſtand. After the Pſalms were ſung again, another Leſſon was read out of the Goſpel, wherein were thoſe Words of our Saviour upbraiding the Jews with their Infidelity, Wo unto thee Chorazin, &c. And laſt of all the Epiſtle was read, containing thoſe Words, Deſpiſeſt thou the Riches of his Goodneſs, &c. Where it is eaſy to obſerve, that as there were four Leſſons read out of the Old and New Teſtament, ſo there were Pſalms ſung between each Leſſon, except the laſt which is not mentioned.

SECT. III. Which Pſalms were called by a peculiar Name Pſalmi Reſponſorii.

THESE Pſalms were ſtyled by a peculiar Name, Reſponſoria, and Pſalmi Reſponſorii, the Reſponſories; which was not a Name affixed to any particular Pſalms, [c] Conſtit. lib. 2. cap. 57. lib. 5. cap. 19. [d] Baſil. Ep. 63. ad Neocæſar. t. 3. p. 96. [e] Leſtrange, Alliance of Div. Offic. cap. 3. p. 75. [f] Aug. Ep. 119. ad Januar. cap. 18. Quando non eſt tempus, cum in Eccleſia fratres congregantur, ſancta cantandi, niſi cum legitur, aut diſputatur, aut antiſtites clara voce deprecantur, aut communis Oratio voce Diaconi indicitur? [g] Leſtrange, Alliance of Div. Offic. cap. 3. p. 77. [h] Conc. Laodic. Can. 17. [i] Aug. Serm. 10. de Verbis Apoſtoli. p. 112. Hoc de Apoſtolica Lectione percepimus. Deinde cantavimus Pſalmum, exhortantes nos invicem una voce, una corde dicentes, Venite adoremus, &c. Poſthæc Evangelica Lectio decem leproſos mundatos nobis oſtendit. [k] Aug. Hom. 33. de Verb. Domini. p. 49. In Lectione Apoſtolica gratiæ aguntur Deo de fide gentium. In Pſalmo diximus, Deus virtutum converte nos, &c. In Evangelio ad cœnam vocati ſumus, &c. [l] Collat. &c. ap. Mabillon. de curſu Gallicano. p. 399. Evenit autem ut ea nocte, cum Lector ſecundum morem inciperet Lectionem à Moyſe, incidit in ea Verba Domini, Sed ego indurabo cor ejus, &c. Deinde cum poſt Pſalmos decantatos recitaret ex Prophetis, occurrerunt Verba Domini ad Eſaiam dicentis, Vade & dices populo huic Audite audientes, &c. Cumque adhuc Pſalmi fuiſſent decantati, & legeret ex Evangelio; incidit in Verba, quibus Salvator exprobrat Judæis Incredulitatem, Væ tibi Chorazin, &c. Denique cum Lectio fieret ex Apoſtolo, &c.

but

but was given to all ſuch as happened to fall in here, in the common courſe of Reading. The fourth Council of Toledo is to be underſtood of ſuch Pſalms, when it ſpeaks of Reſponſories [m], blaming ſome for neglecting to uſe the Gloria Patri, after them. And Gregory Turonenſis [n] often mentions them more expreſly under the Name of Pſalmi Reſponſorii, making it a Part of the Deacon's Office to repeat them. The antient Ritualiſts are not agreed about the Reaſon of the Name, why they were called Reſponſoria: Some ſaying [o] they were ſo called, becauſe one ſinging, the whole Quire did anſwer them: Whilſt others [p] ſay, they had their Name becauſe they anſwered to the Leſſons, being ſung immediately after them. Which ſeems to be the more likely Reaſon.

SECT. IV. Some Pſalms appropriated to particular Services.

BUT we are not to imagine, that theſe were the only Pſalms which the Ancients uſed in their Pſalmody. For ſome Pſalms were of conſtant Uſe in the Church, as being appropriated to particular Services. We have ſeen [*] before, that the lxiiid Pſalm, O God, my God, early will I ſeek Thee, was peculiarly ſtyled the Morning Pſalm, becauſe it was always ſung at Morning Service, as the xcvth Pſalm is now in our Liturgy. And the cxliſt Pſalm, Let my Prayer be ſet forth in thy Sight as the Incenſe, and let the lifting up of my Hands be an Evening Sacrifice, was always ſung [†] at Evening Service. They had alſo ſome proper Pſalms adapted to the Nature of their Communion Service, and their Funeral Offices, as we ſhall ſee hereafter. And in the French Church, from the Time that Muſæus Presbyer of Marſeilles compoſed his Lectionarium, or Order of reading the Pſalms and Leſſons, at the Inſtance of Venerius his Biſhop, the Reſponſory Pſalms were all adapted to their proper Times and Leſſons, as Gennadius [q] informs us. And this, ſome learned Men [r] think, was at firſt peculiar to the Gallican Office, and a ſingular Uſage of the French Church. Which may be true as to the appropriating the ſeveral Pſalms to their proper Leſſons in the general Courſe of the Year: But it cannot be true, if it be meant only of particular and ſolemn Occaſions. For the Church had not only proper Leſſons, but proper Pſalms read upon greater Feſtivals, ſuitable to the Occaſion; and that long before the Time of Muſæus's compoſing his Kalendar for the Gallican Church. For St. Auſtin [s] plainly informs us, that the xxiid Pſalm, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me, &c. was always read upon the Day of our Saviour's Paſſion in the African Church, and he ſeems to intimate, that the Donatiſts did the ſame, though they were ſo ſtony-hearted as not to make a juſt Application of it. And there is little queſtion to be made, but that as they had proper Pſalms for this Occaſion, ſo they had for all the other ſolemn Feſtivals.

SECT. V. Others ſung in the ordinary Courſe as they lay, without being appropriated to any Time or Day.

THE other Pſalms were ſung in the ordinary Courſe of Reading from End to End, in the ſame Order as they lay in the Book, without being appropriated to any Times, or Leſſons, or Days, except thoſe particular Pſalms, which were appointed as proper for each Canonical Hour. Caſſian obſerves [t], That in Egypt, at the firſt Beginning of the Monaſtick Life, there were almoſt as many Types, Rules, or Orders about this Matter, as there were Monaſteries, ſome ſinging eighteen Pſalms immediately one after another, others twenty, and ſome more. But at laſt by common Conſent, the Number for Morning and Evening Service was reduced to twelve, which were read in one continued Courſe [u], without any Leſſons coming between them: For they had only two Leſſons, one out of the Old Teſtament, and the other out of the New, and thoſe read only when all the Pſalms were ended. He tells us alſo, That in ſome Places they ſung ſix Pſalms [x] every Canonical Hour, and ſome proportioned the Number of Pſalms to the Hour at which they met at their Devotions: So that at the third Hour they had only three Pſalms, but ſix at the Sixth, and nine at the ninth Hour; 'till upon more mature Deliberation they came at laſt to this Reſolution, to have only thee Pſalms at every diurnal Hour of Prayer [y], reſerving the greater Number of twelve for the more ſolemn Aſſemblies at Morning and Evening Prayer. Though the Cuſtom of conforming the Number of Pſalms to the Number of Hours continued in Uſe in ſome Parts of France, or elſe was taken up in the Time of the ſecond Council of Tours, An. 567, as appears from a ſingular Canon of that Council [z], which I have recited at large before in the laſt Book [‡].

SECT. VI. And ſome Appointed occaſionally at the Diſcretion of the Biſhop or Precentor.

BESIDES theſe, it was uſual for the Biſhop or Precentor to appoint any Pſalm to be ſung occaſionally in any Part of the Service at Diſcretion: As now our Anthems in Cathedrals are left to the Choice of the Precentor, and the Pſalms in Metre to the Diſcretion of the Miniſter, to chuſe and appoint what Pſalms he pleaſes, and what Times he thinks moſt proper in Divine Service. Thus Athanaſius tells us he appointed his Deacon to ſing an Occaſional Pſalm [a] when his Church was beſet with the Arian Soldiers. And St. Auſtin [b] ſometimes ſpeaks of a particular Pſalm, which he ordered the Reader to repeat, intending himſelf to preach upon it: And it once happened, that the Reader miſtaking one of theſe Pſalms, read another in its Stead; which put St. Auſtin upon an Extempore Diſcourſe upon the Pſalm that was read by Miſtake to the People. And when we conſider that they ſometimes ſpent whole Days and Nights almoſt in Pſalmody; as when St. Ambroſe's Church was beſet with the Arian Soldiers, the People within continued the whole Night and Day [c] in Singing of Pſalms; it will eaſily be imagined that at ſuch Times they did not ſing appropriated Pſalms, but entertained themſelves with ſuch as the Biſhop then occaſionally appointed, or left them at large to their own Choice, to ſing at Liberty and Diſcretion. Sometimes the Reader himſelf pitched upon a Pſalm as the Neceſſity of Affairs would allow him, or his own Diſcretion direct him. Thus St. Auſtin tells us in one of his Homilies [d], That he had preached upon a Pſalm, not which he appointed the Reader to ſing, but what God put into his Heart to read, which determined his Sermon to the Subject of Repentance, being the fifty firſt or Penitential Pſalm, which the Reader ſung of his own Accord, or rather as St. Auſtin words it, by God's Direction. Sulpicius Severus tells a remarkable Story to the ſame purpoſe in the Life of St. Martin [e]. He ſays, when St. Martin was to be elected Biſhop, one whoſe Name was Defenſor among the Biſhops, was a great Stickler againſt him. Now it happened, that in the Tumult, the Reader, whoſe Courſe it was to ſing the Pſalm that Day, could not come at his Place in due Time, and therefore another read the firſt Pſalm that he lighted upon when he opened the Book, which happened to be the viiith Pſalm, wherein were thoſe Words, Out of the Mouths of Babes and Sucklings Thou haſt perfected Praiſe, becauſe of thine Enemies, that thou mighteſt deſtroy the Enemy and Defenſor, as the Gallican Verſion then read it, Ut deſtruas inimicum & Defenſorem. And this, though it ſeemingly were but a chance Thing, was looked upon as providential by the People, to overthrow the Machinations of Defenſor.

[m] Conc. Tolet. 4. Can. 15. Sunt quidam qui in fine Reſponſoriorum, Gloria non dicunt, &c. [n] Greg. Turon. de Vitis Patrum. cap. 8. Diaconus Reſponſorium Pſalmum canere cœpit. It. Hiſt. Francor. lib. 8. cap. 3. Jubet Rex ut Diaconum noſtrum, qui ante diem ad Miſſas Pſalmum Reſponſorium dixerat, canere juberem. [o] Iſidor. de Offic. lib. 1. cap. 8. [p] Rupert. de Offic. lib. 1. cap. 15. [*] Book XIII. Chap. x. n. 1. [†] See Book XIII. Chap. xi. n. 2. [q] Gennad. de Scriptor. cap. 79. Reſponſoria etiam Pſalmorum Capitula Tempori & Lectionibus congruentia excerpſit. [r] Stillingfleet, Orig. Britan. chap. 4. p. 218. [s] Aug. in Pſal. 21. in Præf. Serm. 2. p. 43. [t] Caſſian. Inſtit. lib. 2. cap. 2. [u] Caſſian. ibid cap. 4. Per univerſam Ægyptum & Thebaidem duodenarius Pſalmorum numerus tam Veſpertinis quam Nocturnis ſolennitatibus cuſtoditur, ita duntaxat ut poſt hunc numerum duæ Lectiones, Veteris ſcilicet ac novi Teſtamenti ſingulæ ſubſequantur. [x] Ibid. cap. 2. Sunt quibus in ipſis quoque Diurnis Orationum Officiis, id eſt, Tertia, Sexta, Nonaque id viſum eſt, ut ſecundum horarum modum, in quibus hæc Domino redduntur obſequia, Pſalmorum etiam & Orationum putarent numerum coæquandum: Nonnullis placuit ſenarium numerum ſingulis diei Conventibus deputari. [y] Caſſian. lib. 3. cap. 3. [z] Conc. Turon. 2. Can. 19. [‡] Book XIII. Chap. ix. n. 9.

SECT. VII. Prayers in ſome Places between every Pſalm, inſtead of a Leſſon.

IN ſome Places, inſtead of Leſſons between every Pſalm, they allowed a ſhort Space for private Prayer to be made in Silence, and a ſhort Collect by the Miniſter, which Caſſian [f] ſays, was the ordinary Cuſtom of the Egyptian Fathers. For they reckoned, that frequent ſhort Prayers were more uſeful [g] than long continued ones, both to ſollicit God more earneſtly by frequent Addreſſes, and to avoid the Temptations of Satan, drawing them into Laſſitude and Wearineſs, which was prevented by their ſuccinct Brevity. And therefore they divided the longer Pſalms into two or three Parts [h], interpoſing Prayers, between every Diſtinction.

SECT. VIII. The Gloria Patri added at the End of every Pſalm in the Weſtern, but not in the Eaſtern Churches.

IN all the Weſtern Churches, except the Roman, it was cuſtomary alſo at the End of every Pſalm for the Congregation to ſtand, and ſay, Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghoſt: But in the Eaſtern Churches it was otherwiſe: For, as I have noted before [*] out of Caſſian [†], in all the Eaſt they never uſed this Glorification, but only at the End of the laſt Pſalm, which they called their Antiphona or Allelujah, which was one of thoſe Pſalms which had Allelujah prefixed to it, and which they repeated by way of Antiphona or Reſponſal, and then added, Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghoſt. But in the Weſtern Churches, he ſays, it was uſed at the End of every Pſalm. And ſo we are to underſtand thoſe Canons [i] of the Council of Toledo, which order, Glory and Honour be to the Father, and Son, and Holy Ghoſt, to be ſaid at the End of the Pſalms and Reſponſories: But the Decretal of Vigilius [k], which orders the ſame at the End of the Pſalms, muſt be taken according to the Cuſtom of the Roman Church, to be uſed only at the Concluſion of all. Other Differences relating to the Uſe of this Doxology and its Original, ſhall be conſidered in the next Chapter in their proper Place.

SECT. IX. The Pſalms ſometimes ſung by one Perſon only.

AS to the Perſons concerned in this Service of ſinging the Pſalms publickly in the Church, we may conſider them in four different Reſpects, according to the different

[a] Athan. Apol. p. 2. 717. [b] Aug. in Pſal. 138. p. 650. Pſalmum nobis brevem paraveramus, quem mandaveramus cantari à Lectore: Sed ad horam, quantum videtur, perturbatus, alterum pro altero legit. Malumus nos in errore Lectoris ſequi voluntatem Dei, quàm noſtram in noſtro Propoſito. Vid. Aug. Præfat. in Pſal. 31. [c] Ambroſ. Epiſt. 33. ad Marcellinam Sororem. [d] Aug. Hom. 27. ex 50. T. 10. p. 175. Proinde aliquid de Pœnitentiâ dicere divinitus jubemur. Neque enim nos iſtum Pſalmum cantandum Lectori imperavimus: Sed quod ille cenſuit vobis eſſe utile ad audiendum, hoc cordi etiam puerili imperavit. [e] Sulpic. Vit. Martin. cap. 7. p. 225. [f] Caſſian. Inſtit. lib. 2. cap. 5. Undecim Pſalmos orationum interjectione diſtinctos, &c. [g] Ibid. cap. 10. Utilius cenſent breves quidem Orationes, ſed creberrimas fieri, &c. [h] Ibid cap. 11. Et idcirco ne Pſalmos quidem ipſos, quos in Congregatione decantant, continuata ſtudent pronunciatione concludere: Sed eos pro numero verſuum duabus vel tribus interceſſionibus, cum orationum interjectione diviſos, diſtinctim particulatimque conſummant, &c. [*] Book XIII. Chap. x. n. 14. [†] Caſſian. Inſtit. lib. 2. cap. 8. Strabo de Reb. Eccleſ. cap. 25. [i] Conc. Tolet. 4. Can. 14, & 15. [k] Vigil. Ep. 1. ad Eutherum. cap. 2. In fine Pſalmorum ab omnibus Catholicis ex more dicatur, Gloria Patri, & Filio, & Spiritui Sancto.

Ways

Ways of Pſalmody. 1. Sometimes the Pſalms were ſung by one Perſon alone, the reſt hearing only with Attention. 2 Sometimes they were ſung by the whole Aſſembly joining all together. 3. Sometimes alternately by the Congregation divided into diſtinct Quires, the one Part repeating on Verſe, and the other another. 4. Sometimes one Perſon repeated the firſt Part of the Verſe, and the reſt joyned all together in the Cloſe of it. The firſt of theſe Ways, Caſſian notes as the common Cuſtom of the Egyptian Monaſteries. For he ſays, Except him [l] who roſe up to ſing, all the reſt ſat by on low Seats in Silence, giving Attention to him that ſang. And though ſometimes four ſang the twelve Pſalms in one Aſſembly, yet they did it not all together, but in Courſe one after another [m], each ſinging three Pſalms, and the reſt keeping Silence till the laſt Pſalm, which they all ſang by way of Antiphona or alternate Song, adding the Gloria Patri in the Cloſe.

SECT. X.
Sometimes by the whole Aſſembly joining all together.

SOMETIMES again the whole Aſſembly joined together, Men, Women and Children, united with one Mouth and one Mind in ſinging Pſalms and Praiſes to God. This was the moſt antient and general Practice, till the way of alternate Pſalmody was brought into the Church. Thus Chriſt and his Apoſtles ſung the Hymn at the laſt Supper, and thus Paul and Silas at Midnight ſung Praiſes unto God. Bellarmin [n] indeed, and ſome other Writers of the Romiſh Church, ſay, this Cuſtom was not in Uſe till the Time of St. Ambroſe: But they plainly miſtake the Introduction of the alternate way of ſinging Pſalms for this more antient way, which derives its Original from the Foundation of the Church. Thus St. Hilary, who lived before St. Ambroſe, takes Notice [o] that the People all prayed, and all ſang Hymns together. And St. Chryſoſtom comparing the Apoſtolical Times with his own, ſays [p], antiently they all met together, and all ſang in common. And ſo do we at this Day. And again [q], Women and Men, old Men and Children differ in Sex and Age, but they differ not in the Harmony of ſinging Hymns: For the Spirit tempers all their Voices together, making one Melody of them all. After the ſame manner St. Auſtin ſometimes [r] ſpeaks of ſinging the Pſalms between the Leſſons with united Voices, though before his time the way of alternate Pſalmody was become very common in all Parts of the Church.

SECT. XI.
Sometimes alternately, by the Congregation divided into two Parts.

THIS way of ſinging the Pſalms alternately was, when the Congregation dividing themſelves into two Parts, repeated the Pſalms by Courſes, Verſe for Verſe one after another, and not, as formerly, all together. As the other, for its common Conjunction of Voices, was properly called Symphony: So this, for its Diviſion into two Parts, and alternate Anſwers, was commonly called Antiphony, and ſometimes Reſponſoria, the ſinging by Reſponſals. This is plain from that noted Iambick [s] of Gregory Nazianzen, σύμφωνον, ἀντίφωνον ἀγγέλων ϛάσιν, where the Symphony denotes their Singing alternately Verſe for Verſe by Turns. Socrates [t] calls it ἀντίφωνον ὑμνωδίαν, the Antiphonal Hymnody; and St. Ambroſe [u] Reſponſoria, ſinging by way of Reſponſals. For, comparing the Church to the Sea, he ſays, from the Reſponſories of the Pſalms, and Singing of Men, Women, Virgins and Children, there reſults an harmonious Noiſe like the Waves of the Sea. He expreſly mentions Women in other Places [x], as allowed to ſing in Publick, though otherwiſe the Apoſtle had commanded them to keep Silence in the Church. St. Auſtin alſo frequently mentions [y] this way of Singing by Parts or alternately by Reſponſes: And he carries the Original of it in the Weſtern Church no higher than the Time of St. Ambroſe, when he was under the Perſecution of the Arian Empreſs Juſtina, Mother of the younger Valentinian; at which Time both he [z] and Paulinus, who writes [a] the Life of St. Ambroſe, tells us the way of Antiphonal Singing was firſt brought into the Church of Milan, in Imitation of the Cuſtom of the Eaſtern Churches; and that from this Example it preſently ſpread all over the Weſtern Churches. What was the firſt Original of it in the Eaſtern Church, is not ſo certainly agreed upon by Writers either antient or modern. Theodoret ſays [b] that Flavian and Diodorus firſt brought in the way of ſinging David's Pſalms alternately into the Church of Antioch in the Reign of Conſtantius. But Socrates [c] carries the Original of this way of Sing-

[l] Caſſian. Inſtit. lib. 2. cap. 12. Abſque eo qui dicturus in medium Pſalmos ſurrexerit, cuncti ſedilibus humillimis inſidentes, ad vocem Pſallentis omni cordis intentione dependent. [m] Ibid. cap. 5, & 8. [n] Bellarm. de Bonis Operibus. lib. 1. cap. 16. Tom. 4. p. 1077. [o] Hilar. in Pſal. 65. p. 232. Audiat orantis populi conſiſtens quis extra Eccleſiam vocem, ſpectet celebres Hymnorum Sonitus. [p] Chryſ. Hom. 36. in 1 Cor. p. 653. ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ πάντες κοινῇ. [q] Chryſ. in Pſal. 145. p. 824. [r] Aug. de Verb. Apoſt. Serm. 10. p. 112. Cantavimus Pſalmum exhortantes nos invicem una voce, uno corde, dicentes, Venite adoremus, &c. [s] Naz. Carm. 18. de Virtute. inter Iambica. tom. 2. p. 218. [t] Socrat. lib. 6. cap. 8. [u] Ambroſ. Hexamer. lib. 3. cap. 5. Reſponſoriis Pſalmorum, cantu Virorum, Mulierum, Virginum, Parvulorum, conſonans undarum fragor reſultat. [x] Ambroſ. expoſ. Pſal. 1. Mulieres Apoſtolus in Eccleſia tacere jubet: Pſalmum etiam bene clamant, &c. [y] Aug. Serm. in Pſal. 26. in Præfat. Voces iſtæ Pſalmi, quas audivimus, & ex parte cantavimus. Item in Pſal. 46. In hoc Pſalmo, quem cantatum audivimus, cui cantando reſpondimus, ea ſumus dicturi quæ noſtis. [z] Aug. Confeſ. lib. 9. cap. 7. Tunc Hymni & Pſalmi ut canerentur ſecundum morem Orientalium partium, ne populus mœroris tædio contabeſceret, inſtitutum eſt: & ex illo in hodiernum retentum, multis jam ac pene omnibus Gregibus tuis & per ceteras orbis partes imitantibus. [a] Paulin. Vit. Ambroſ. p. 4. Hoc in tempore primo Antiphonæ Hymni & Vigiliæ in Eccleſia Mediolanenſi celebrari cœperunt. &c. [b] Theod. lib. 2. cap. 24. [c] Socrat. lib. 6. cap. 8.

ing

ing Hymns to the Holy Trinity as high as Ignatius. Valesius thinks Socrates was mistaken: But Cardinal Bona [d] and Pagi [e] think both Accounts may be true, taking the one to speak of David's Psalms only, and the other of Hymns composed for the Service of the Church. Some say the Custom was first begun by Ignatius, but destroyed by Paulus Samosatensis, and revived again by Flavian. But Pagi's Conjecture seems most reasonable, that Flavian only introduced this way of Singing the Psalms in the Greek Tongue at Antioch, whereas it had been used in the Syrian Language long before, as he shews out of Theodorus of Mopsuestia, and Valesius himself confirms this out of the same Author, whose Testimony is preserved by Nicetas [f]. However this Matter be as to the first Original of this way of Antiphonal Psalmody, it is certain, that from the time that Flavian either instituted or revived it at Antioch, it prevailed in a short time to become the general Practice of the whole Church. St. Chrysostom [g] encouraged it in the Vigils at Constantinople, in Opposition to the Arians. St. Basil [h] speaks of it in his time, as the received Custom of all the East. And we have seen before, how from the time of St. Ambrose it prevailed over all the West. And it was a Method of Singing so taking and delightful, that they sometimes used it where two or three were met together for private Devotion. As Socrates [i] particularly remarks of the Emperor Theodosius Junior and his Sisters, that they were used to sing alternate Hymns together every Morning in the Royal Palace.

SECT. XII.

Sometimes by a single Præcentor repeating the first part of the Verse, and the People all joining with him in the Close. Where also of Diapsalms, and Acroteleuticks and Acrosticks in Psalmody.

BESIDES all these there was yet a fourth way of Singing, of pretty common Use in the fourth Age of the Church: Which was, when a single Person (whom that Age called a Phonascus, ὑποφάλτης, or Præcentor) [*] began the Verse, and the People joined with him in the Close. This the Greeks called ὑπηχεῖν, and ὑπακούειν, and the Latins Succinere. And it was often used for Variety in the same Service with alternate Psalmody. Thus St. Basil describing the different Manners of their Morning Psalmody, tells us, they one while divided themselves into two Parts, and sung alternately, answering to one another; and then again let one begin the Psalm, and the rest joined with him [k] in the Close of the Verse. This was certainly in Use at Alexandria in the time of Athanasius, as I have observed in the last Book [†]. For both he himself [l] and all the Historians [m] who relate the Story after him, in speaking of his Escape out of the Church when it was beset with the Arian Soldiers, tell us he avoided the Assault by setting the People to Psalmody, which Psalmody was of this kind: For he commanded the Deacon to read the Psalm, and the People ὑπακούειν, to repeat this Clause after him, For his Mercy endureth for ever. The common Translations of Athanasius make this ὑπακούειν to signify no more than the Peoples attending to what the Deacon read: But Epiphanius Scholasticus, the antient Author of the Historia Tripartita, having Occasion to relate this very Passage [n] of Athanasius, rightly renders ὑπακούειν by Respondere. The Deacon read, and the People answered in these Words, For his Mercy endureth for ever. Valesius [o] thinks it should be read ὑπηχεῖν, instead of ὑπακούειν, in all those Places of Athanasius and the Historians after him: But there is no need of that critical Correction; for both the Words among the Greeks are of the same Import, and signify to make Answer or Responses, as Cotelerius a judicious Critick has [p] observed. And so the Word ὑπακούειν is used both by Theocritus [q] and Homer. So that there is no Reason to dispute the Use of it in this Sense in Ecclesiastical Writers. St. Chrysostom uses the Word ὑπηχεῖν [r] when he speaks of this Practice. The Singer sings alone, and all the rest answer him in the Close, as it were with one Mouth and one Voice. And elsewhere he says [s] the Priests began the Psalm, and the People followed after in their Responses. Sometimes this way of Psalmody was called singing Acrosticks. For though an Acrostick commonly signifies the Beginning of a Verse, yet sometimes it is taken for the End or Close of it. As by the Author [t] of the Constitutions, when he orders one to sing the Hymns of David, and the People to sing after him the Acrosticks or Ends of the Verses. This was otherwise called Hypopsalma and Diapsalma, and ἀκροτελεύτιον, and ἐφύμνιον, which are all Words of the same Signification. Only we must observe, that they do not always denote precisely the End of a Verse, but sometimes that which was added at the End of a Psalm, or something that was repeated frequently in the Middle of it, as the Close of the several Parts of it. Thus St. Austin composed a Psalm for the common People to learn against the Donatists, and in Imitation of the cxixth [d] Bona de Psalmod. cap. 16. Sect. 10. n. 1. [e] Pagi Critic. in Baron. an. 400. n. 10. [f] Nicet. Thesaur. Orthod. Fid. lib. 5. cap. 30. [g] Socrat. lib. 6. cap. 8. [h] Basil. Ep. 63. ad Neocæsar. [i] Socrat. lib. 7. cap. 22. [*] See Book III. Chap. vii. n. 3. & Sidon. Apollin. lib. 4. Ep. 11. Psalmorum hic modulator & Phonascus. [k] Basil. Ep. 63. ad Neocæsar. Νῦν μὲν διχῇ διανεμηθέντες, ἀνὰ μέλεσιν ἀλλήλοις· ἔπειτα πάλιν ἐπτρέψαντες ἐνὶ καλάρχειν τὰ μέλεσι, οἱ λοιποὶ ὑπηχῶσι. [†] Book XIII. Chap. v. n. 6. [l] Athanas. Apol. 2. p. 717. [m] Theodor. lib. 2. cap. 13. Socrat. lib. 2. cap. 11. Sozom. lib. 3. cap. 6. [n] Hist. Tripart. lib. 5. cap. 2. Præcepi ut Diaconus Psalmum legeret, Populi responderent, &c. [o] Vales. Not. in Theod. lib. 2. cap. 13. [p] Coteler. Not. in Constit. Apost. lib. 2. cap. 57. p. 262. [q] Theocrit. Idyl. 14. de Hyla. τεὶς δ' ἀῤ' ὁ παῖς ὑπάκουσεν. Ter puer respondit. Vid. Homer. Odyss. 4. & Stephani Lexicon. [r] Chrys. Hom. 36. in 1 Cor. p. 655. Ὁ μὲν ἄλλων ἄλλα μόνος, καὶ παῖδες ἀπηχῶσιν (leg. ὑπηχῶσιν) ὡς ἐξ ἑνὸς στόματος ἡ φωνὴ φέρεται. Vid. Hom. 11. in Mat. p. 108. ὑπηχήσαντες. &c. [s] Chrys. in Psal. 137. p. 518. Μετὰ τῶν ἱερέων καλαρχομένων, προσηυξάμην ἔγωμαι, καὶ ἀκολουθήσω, καὶ ἄδω σοι, &c. [t] Constit. lib. 2. cap. 57. ὁ λαὸς τὰ ἀκροστίχια ὑπαλλέτω.

Psalm

Pſalm he divided it into ſo many Parts according to the Order of the Letters in the Alphabet (whence ſuch Pſalms were called Abecedarii) each Part having its proper Letter at the Head of it, and the Hypopſalma (as he calls it [u]) or Anſwer, to be repeated at the End of every Part of it, in theſe Words, Omnes qui gaudetis de Pace, modo verum judicate; as the Gloria Patri is now repeated not only at the End of every Pſalm, but at the End of every Part of the cxixth Pſalm. And in this reſpect the Gloria Patri it ſelf is by ſome antient Writers called the Hypopſalma, or Epode, and Acroteleutick to the Pſalms, becauſe it was alwas uſed at the End of the Pſalms. Thus Sozomen, giving an Account of the Arians Management of their Pſalmody at Conſtantinople in their Morning Proceſſions, ſays, they divided themſelves into Parts, and ſung after the manner of Antiphona, or alternate Song, adding in the Cloſe their Acroteleuticks [x], framed and modelled after their own way of Glorification. Where, as Valeſius rightly obſerves, 'tis plain, Acroteleutick is but another Name for the Gloria Patri, which they added at the End of the Pſalms, but perverſely modelled to favour their own Hereſy; not ſaying, Glory be to the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt; but Glory be to the Father, by the Son, and in the Holy Ghoſt. Again Sozomen, ſpeaking of the Pſalmody with which the Chriſtians brought the Body of the Martyr Babylas from Daphne to Antioch in the time of Julian, ſays, they who were beſt skilled, began the Pſalms, and the Multitude anſwered them with one harmonious Conſent, making theſe Words the Epode of [y] their Pſalmody, Confounded be all they that worſhip graven Images, and boaſt themſelves in Images or Idol-gods. Meaning that this Sentence was frequently repeated in the ſeveral Pauſes of their Pſalmody; which the Ancients, we ſee, ſometimes called an Epode or Diapſalm, like that of the cviith Pſalm, O that Men would therefore praiſe the Lord for his Goodneſs, and declare the Wonders that he doth for the Children of Men! Which in the diſtinct Parts of that one Pſalm is four times repeated.

SECT. XIII. An Anſwer to an Objection made againſt the Peoples bearing a Part in Pſalmody.

FROM all this, it is as clear as the Sun at Noon-day, that the People generally had a Share in the Pſalmody of the antient Church; and that this was not an Exerciſe ſtrictly confined to the Canonical Singers, or any particular Order in the Church; but that Men, Women, and Children were all allowed to bear a Part in it, under the Direction and Conduct of Precentors, or thoſe who preſided in this and all other Offices of the Church. Therefore the Reflexion which I have formerly made upon Cabaſſutius [*], I cannot chuſe but here again repeat, who charges this way of Singing as a mere Novelty and Proteſtant-whim, becauſe it differs from the preſent practice of his own Church; though it be exactly agreeable to the Practice of the antient Church in all its ſeveral Methods, and in all Ages ſince the Apoſtles. Neither is there any one Thing can be objected againſt it, ſave a ſingle Canon of the Council of Laodicea [z], which forbids all others to ſing in the Church, except only the Canonical Singers, who went up into the Ambo or Reading-Desk, and ſung out of a Book. This I have explained to be only a Temporary Proviſion of a Provincial Council, deſigned to reſtore or revive the antient Pſalmody, when it might be in ſome meaſure corrupted or neglected, and not intended to abridge or deſtroy the primitive Liberty of the People. Or if any thing more was intended by it, it was an Order that never took place in the Practice of the Church: It being evident, beyond all Contradiction, from what has now been ſaid, that the People always enjoyed their antient Privilege of joining in this Divine Harmony, and were encouraged in it by the greateſt Luminaries of the Church.

SECT. XIV. Pſalmody always performed in the ſtanding Poſture.

TO proceed then: We are to conſider farther, that Pſalmody was always eſteemed a conſiderable Part of Devotion, and upon that Account was uſually, if not always, performed by thoſe that were ingaged in it, in the ſtanding Poſture. Caſſian indeed ſeems to make an Exception in the Way of the Monaſteries of Egypt: But his Exception helps to clear the contrary Rule, and ſhews alſo that their Devotion was in the main performed in the ſtanding Poſture. For he ſays, though by reaſon of their continual Faſtings and Labour Night and Day, they were unable to ſtand all the time, while twelve Pſalms were reading, yet they that read in Courſe, always ſtood [a] up to read: And at the laſt Pſalm, they all ſtood up [b] and repeated it alternately, adding the Gloria Patri at the End. In other Places it was always the Cuſtom to ſtand, as is plain not only from this Exception, but from the Teſtimony of St. Auſtin [c], who ſpeaks of the Pſalmody as an Act of Devotion, which all the People performed ſtanding in the Church.

SECT. XV. Of the Uſe of plain Song, and its Commendation among the Ancients.

AS to the Voice or Pronunciation uſed in Singing, it was of two Sorts, the plain Song, and the more artificial and elaborate Tuning of the Voice to greater variety of Sounds and Meaſures. The plain Song was only with a little gentle Inflexion, and agreeable Turn of the Voice, with a proper Accent, not much different from Reading, and much reſembling the muſical way of Reading the Pſalms now in our Cathedral Churches. This was the way of Singing at Alexandria in the time of Athanaſius. For St. Auſtin ſays [d], he ordered the Reader to ſing the Pſalm with ſo little Inflexion or Variation of the Tone, that it looked more like Reading than Singing. And this, St. Auſtin [e] ſeems to intimate to have been the common way of the African Churches, as moſt agreeable to the ſlow Genius of the African People. Whence ſome of the warmer Donatiſts made it a Matter of Objection, that the Catholicks ſung the Divine Hymns of the Prophets ſoberly in the Church, whilſt they ſung their own Pſalms of human Compoſition in a ranting way, and even trumpeted out, like Men that were drunk, their own Exhortations. St. Auſtin does not ſpeak this, as if he wholly diſapproved the other more artificial and melodious way of Singing, but only as it was intemperately abuſed by many, and particularly by the Donatiſts. For otherwiſe he commends this way of Singing, as very uſeful to raiſe the Affections, when performed with a clear Voice [f] and a convenient Sweetneſs of Melody: And ſays, it was that that melted him into Tears, when he firſt heard it in the Beginning of his Converſion, in the Church of St. Ambroſe.

[u] Vid. Aug. Pſalmum contra partem Donati. tom. 7. p. 1. Et Retract. lib. 1. cap. 20. [x] Sozom. lib. 8. cap. 8. Καὶ τὸν ὑπὲρ ἀνθρώπων τρόπον ἐφάλλον, ἀκεσταλάτια συνῳδεῖσες πρὸς τὴν αὐτῶν δόξαν πεποιημένα. [y] Sozom. lib. 5. cap. 19. ξυνεπῆχε τὸ πλῆθος ἐν συμφωνίᾳ καὶ ταυτην τὴν ῥῆσιν ἐπῆδεν. &c. [*] Book III. Chap. vii. n. 2.

[z] Conc. Laodic. Can. 15. [a] Caſſian. Inſtit. lib. 2. cap. 12. Abſque eo qui dicturus in medium Pſalmos ſurrexerit, cuncti ſedilibus humillimis inſidentes, &c. [b] Caſſ. ibid. cap. 8. [c] Aug. Serm. 3. in Pſal. 36. p. 122. Certe verum eſt quod cantavi, certe verum eſt quod in Eccleſia ſtans tam devota voce perſonui, &c.

SECT. XVI.

Artificial and melodious Tuning of the Voice allowed in Singing, when managed with Sobriety and Diſcretion.

THIS plainly implies, that the artificial and melodious way of Singing, with Variety of Notes for greater Sweetneſs, was uſed and allowed, as well as plain Song, in the Italick Churches: And they miſtake St. Auſtin, who think he ſpeaks in Commendation of the one, to the Derogation of the other. For he profeſſes to admire both Ways for their Uſefulneſs, and particularly the more melodious way, for this, Ut per Oblectamenta aurium infirmior animus in affectum Pietatis aſſurgat, that weaker Minds may be raiſed to Affections of Piety, by the Delight and Entertainment of their Ears. And whilſt it kept within due Bounds, there is nothing plainer than that it had the general Approbation of pious Men throughout the Church.

SECT. XVII.

No Objection made againſt Plaſms and Hymns of human Compoſition, barely as ſuch.

NEITHER was it any Objection againſt the Pſalmody of the Church, that She ſometimes made uſe of Pſalms and Hymns of human Compoſition, beſides thoſe of the ſacred and inſpired Writers. For though St. Auſtin, as we have juſt heard before, reflects upon the Donatiſts for their Pſalms of human Compoſition, yet it was not merely becauſe they were human, but becauſe they preferred them to the divine Hymns of Scripture, and their indecent way of Chanting them, to the grave and ſober Method of the Church. St. Auſtin himſelf made a Pſalm of many Parts, in Imitation of the cxixth Pſalm, as has been obſerved above in this Chapter, n. 12. And this he did for the Uſe of his People, to preſerve them from the Errors of Donatus. And it would be abſurd to think, that he who made a Pſalm himſelf for the People to ſing, ſhould quarrel with other Pſalms merely becauſe they were of human Compoſition. It has been demonſtrated in the fifth Chapter of the laſt Book, that there were always ſuch Pſalms, and Hymns, and Doxologies compoſed by pious Men, and uſed in the Church from the firſt Foundation of it; nor did any, but Paulus Samoſatenſis, except againſt the Uſe of them: Which he did not neither becauſe they were of human Compoſition, but becauſe they contained a Doctrine contrary to his own private Opinions. St. Hilary and St. Ambroſe made many ſuch Hymns, which when ſome muttered againſt in the Spaniſh Churches, becauſe they were of human Compoſition, the fourth Council of Toledo [g] made a Decree to confirm the Uſe of them, together with the Doxology, Glory be to the Father, &c. and Glory be to God on high: Threatning Excommunication to any that ſhould reject them. The only thing of Weight to be urged againſt all this, is a Canon of the Council of Laodicea [h], which forbids all ἰδιωτικὰς ψαλμὰς, all private Pſalms, and all uncanonical Books to be read in the Church. For it might ſeem, that by private Pſalms, they mean all Hymns of human Compoſition. But it was intended rather to exclude Apocryphal Pſalms, ſuch as went under the Name of Solomon, as Balzamon and Zonaras underſtand it; or elſe ſuch as were not approved by publick Authority in the Church. If it be extended farther, it contradicts the current Practice of the whole Church beſides, and cannot in Reaſon be conſtrued as any more than a private Order for the Churches of that Province, made upon ſome particular Reaſons unknown to us at this Day. Notwithſtanding therefore any Argument to be drawn from this Canon, it is evident the Ancients made no ſcruple of uſing Pſalms or Hymns of human [d] Aug. Confeſ. lib. 10. cap. 33. Tam modico flexu vocis faciebat ſonare Lectorem Pſalmi, ut pronuncianti vicinior eſſet quam canenti. [e] Aug. Ep. 119. ad Januar. cap. 18. Pleraque in Africa Eccleſiæ membra pigriora ſunt: Ita ut Donatiſtæ nos reprehendant, quod ſobrie Pſallimus in Eccleſia divina cantica Prophetarum, cum ipſi ebrietates ſuas ad canticum Pſalmorum humano ingenio compoſitorum quaſi tubas Exhortationis inflamment.

[f] Aug. Confeſ. lib. 10. cap. 33. Veruntamen cum reminiſcor lachrymas meas, quas fudi ad cantus Eccleſiæ tuæ ——— Et nunc ipſo commoveor ——— Cum liquida Voce & convenientiſſima Modulatione cantantur, magnam Inſtituti hujus utilitatem agnoſco.
[g] Conc. Tolet. 4. Can. 12. Quia à nonnullis hymni humano ſtudio compoſiti eſſe noſcuntur in laudem Dei, & Apoſtolorum ac Martyrum triumphos, ſicut hi quos beatiſſimi Doctores Hilarius atque Ambroſius ediderunt, quos tamen quidam ſpecialiter reprobant, pro eo quod de Scripturis ſanctorum Canonum, vel Apoſtolica Traditione non exiſtunt: Reſpuant ergo & illum Hymnum, quem quotidie publico privatoque Officio in fine omnium Pſalmorum dicimus, Gloria & Honor Patri, &c. ——— Sicut ergo Orationes, ita & Hymnos in laudem Dei compoſitos nullus noſtrum ulterius improbet, ſed pari modo in Gallicia Hiſpaniaque celebrent, Excommunicatione plectendi, qui Hymnos rejicere fuerint auſi.
[h] Conc. Laodic. Can. 59.

Compoſition, provided they were pious and Orthodox for the Subſtance, and compoſed by Men of Eminence, and received by juſt Authority, and not brought in clandeſtinely into the Church.

SECT. XVIII. But two Corruptions ſeverely inveighed againſt: Firſt, Over great Niceneſs and Curioſity in Singing, in Imitation of the Modes and Muſick of the Theatre.

BUT there were ſome Diſorders and Irregularities always apt to creep into this Practice, and corrupt the Pſalmody and Devotions of the Church: And againſt theſe the Fathers frequently declaim with many ſharp and ſevere Invectives. Chiefly they complain of the Lightneſs and vain Curioſity which ſome uſed in Singing, who took their Meaſures from the Mean and Practice of the Theatres, introducing from thence the Corruptions and Effeminacy of ſecular Muſick into the grave and ſolemn Devotions of the Church. We have heard St. Chryſoſtom before [*] complaining of Mens uſing theatrical Noiſe and Geſtures both in their Prayers and Hymns. And here I ſhall add the Reflection which St. Jerom makes upon thoſe Words of the Apoſtle, Epheſ. v. Singing, and making Melody in your Hearts to the Lord. Let young Men hear this, let thoſe hear it, who have the Office of Singing in the Church, that they ſing not with their Voice, but with their Heart to the Lord; not like Tragedians phyſically preparing their Throat and Mouth, that they may ſing after the Faſhion of the Theatre in the Church. He that has but an ill Voice, if he has good Works, is a ſweet Singer before God.

SECT. XIX. And 2dly, Pleaſing the Ear, without raiſing the Affections of the Soul.

THE other Vice complained of, was the regarding more the Muſick of the Words, and Sweetneſs of the Compoſure, than the Senſe and Meaning of them; pleaſing the Ear, without raiſing the Affections of the Soul, which was the true Reaſon for which Pſalmody and Muſick was intended. St. Jerom takes Notice of this Corruption in the ſame place [i], giving this Caution againſt it: Let the Servant of Chriſt ſo order his Singing, that the Words that are read, may pleaſe more than the Voice of the Singer: That the Spirit that was in Saul, may be caſt out of them, who are poſſeſſed with it, and not find Admittance in thoſe who have turned the Houſe of God into a Stage and Theatre of the People. St. Auſtin [k] confeſſes he was for ſome time thus moved to a faulty Complacency in the Sweetneſs of the Song, more than the Matter that was ſung, and then he rather wiſhed not to have heard the Voice of the Singer. St. Iſidore of Peluſium brings the Charge of theſe Abuſes more eſpecially againſt Women, and goes ſo far as to ſay, that though the Apoſtle had allowed them to ſing in the Church, yet the perverſe and licentious Uſe they made of this Liberty, was a ſufficient Reaſon [l] why they ſhould be totally debarred from it. And ſome are of Opinion, that it was Abuſes of this Kind, in Exceſs, and not in Defect, that made the Council of Laodicea forbid all but the Canonical Singers to ſing in the Church; as thinking, that they might be better regulated and reſtrained from ſuch Abuſes by the immediate Dependence they had upon the Rulers of the Church. But the Experience of later Ages rather proves, that this was not the true way to reform ſuch Abuſes; ſince there are greater Complaints made by conſidering Men, of the Exceſſes committed in Church Muſick after it was wholly given up to the Management of Canonical Singers, than there were before. Witneſs the Complaints made by Polydore Virgil [m], Maldonat [n], Durantus [o] and others in the Romiſh Church, and Biſhop Wettenhal [p] in the Proteſtant Communion, which it is none of my Buſineſs in this place any farther to purſue.

CHAP. II.

A Particular Account of ſome of the moſt noted Hymns in Uſe in the Service of the antient Church.

SECT. I. Of the leſſer Doxology, Glory be to the Father, &c.

BUT there is one Thing more may be of Uſe for the better underſtanding the Pſalmody of the antient Church, which is, to give a diſtinct Account of the moſt noted Hymns that made a Part of her Service. Among theſe, one the moſt antient and common was that which was called the leſſer Doxology, Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghoſt. Concerning which we are to note in the firſt place, that it was ſomething ſhorter than it is now: For the moſt antient Form of it was only a ſingle Sentence without a Reſponſe, running in theſe Words, Glory be to [*] Book XIII. Chap. viii. n. 11. [i] Hieron. in Epheſ. 5. Sic cantet Servus Chriſti, ut non vox canentis, ſed verba placeant quæ leguntur: Ut Spiritus qui erat in Saule, ejiciatur ab iis, qui ſimiliter ab eo poſſidentur, & non introducatur in eos, qui de Domo Dei ſcenam fecere populorum. [k] Aug. Confeſ. lib. 10. cap. 33. Cum mihi accidit, ut me amplius Cantus, quam res quæ canitur moveat, pœnaliter me peccare confiteor, & tunc mallem non audire cantantem. [l] Iſidor. lib. 1. Ep. 90. [m] Polyd. Virgil. de Rer. Invent. lib. 6. cap. 2. p. 359. [n] Maldonat. de 7 Sacramentis. t. 2. p. 238. [o] Durant. de Ritibus, lib. 2. cap. 21. n. 11. [p] Wettenhal, Gift of Singing. Chap. i. p. 277 & 247.

the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghoſt, World without End. Amen. Part of the latter Clauſe, As it was in the Beginning, is now, and ever ſhall be, was inſerted ſome time after the firſt Compoſition. This appears from the moſt antient Form uſed both in the Greek and Latin Church without thoſe Words in it. The fourth Council of Toledo, An. 633, reads it thus [a]: Glory and Honour be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghoſt, World without End. Amen. Where we may obſerve, that not only the Words, As it was in the Beginning, &c. are omitted, but the Word Honour is added to Glory, according [b] to another Decree made in that Council; that it ſhould not be ſaid, as heretofore ſome did, Glory be to the Father, but, Glory and Honour be to the Father: For as much as the Prophet David ſays, Bring Glory and Honour to the Lord, Pſal. xxviii. 2. And John the Evangeliſt in the Reveiations, heard the Voice of the heavenly Hoſt, ſaying, Honour and Glory be to our God, who ſitteth on the Throne, Rev. v. 13. From whence they conclude, that it ought to be ſaid on Earth as it is ſung in Heaven. The Mozarabick Liturgy, which was uſed in Spain a little after this time, has it in the very ſame [c] Form: Glory and Honour be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghoſt, World without End. Amen. Which ſhews, that that was the received way of uſing this Hymn in the Spaniſh Churches. The Greek Church alſo for ſeveral Ages uſed it after the ſame manner, only they did not inſert the Word Honour, which ſeems to be peculiar to the Spaniſh Church. Athanaſius, or whoever was the Author of the Treatiſe of Virginity among his Works [d], repeats it thus, Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghoſt, World without End. Amen. And Strabo [e] ſays of the Greeks in general, that they omitted thoſe Words in the latter Clauſe, As it was in the Beginning. So that it is not eaſy to tell what time they firſt began to be uſed in it. Some ſay, the Council of Nice ordered them to be inſerted againſt Arius: Others, that the Church by common Conſent admitted them, in compliance with the Doctrine of that Council, to confront the Arian Tenet, which aſſerted, that the Son was not in the Beginning, and that there was a time, when He was not. But if ſo, it is ſtrange we ſhould not hear of this additional Part of the Hymn in any Greek or Latin Writer for above two whole Centuries after. The firſt expreſs mention that is made of it, is in the ſecond Council of [f] Vaiſon, An. 529, which ſays, it was then ſo uſed at Rome, and in Italy, and Africk, and all the Eaſt, and therefore is now ſo ordered to be uſed in the French Churches. Whence it is plain, it was not in the French Churches before. And there is Reaſon to conjecture, that the Eaſt is here put for the Weſt, by a Miſtake of ſome Tranſcriber, ſince it appears from Strabo, that in his time the Cuſtom of the Greek Church was ſtill otherwiſe: And how long it had been the Cuſtom of the Weſtern Churches before the time of this Council, is uncertain. The Spaniſh Churches, as we have ſeen, did not admit it till afterwards.

There goes an Epiſtle indeed under the Name of St. Jerom to Pope Damaſus, which, if it were genuine, would make this Addition more antient, than now it can be allowed to be: For there he adviſes Damaſus to order, that in the Roman Church at the End of every Pſalm there ſhould be added, Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghoſt: As it was in the Beginning, is now, and ever ſhall be World without End. Amen [g]. But this Epiſtle is rejected as ſpurious by learned Men of all Sides, Bellarmin, Baronius, Bona, and others of the Romaniſts, as well as Proteſtants in general, becauſe it contradicts the known Practice of the Roman Church in another Particular: For at Rome they did not uſe the Gloria Patri at the End of every Pſalm long after this, in the time of Walafridus Strabo [h], neither do they now by the Rubricks of the Roman Breviary at this Day: Whereas, if Damaſus had made thoſe Orders, as this Epiſtle directs, the Gloria Patri would have been uſed at Rome at the End of every Pſalm; which it was not, either there or in any of the Eaſtern Churches, but only in France and ſome few other Churches, as we have heard before in the laſt Chapter.

There was another ſmall Difference in the Uſe of this antient Hymn, which yet made no Diſpute among Catholicks, till the Riſe of the Arian Hereſy, and then it occaſioned no ſmall Diſturbance. The Catholicks themſelves of old were wont to ſay, ſome, Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghoſt; Others, Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, with the Holy Ghoſt; and others, Glory be to the Father, in or by the Son, and by the Holy Ghoſt. Now theſe different ways of expreſſing, were all allowed, ſo long as no heterodox Opinion was ſuſpected to be couched under them, as Valeſius [i] has obſerved in his Notes upon Socrates and Theodoret, and St. Baſil [k] ſhews more at large in his Book De Spiritu Sancto. But when Arius had broached his Hereſy in the World, his Followers would uſe no other Form of Glorification but the laſt, and made it a diſtinguiſhing Character of their

[a] Conc. Toler. 4. Can. 12. In fine omnium Pſalmorum dicimus, Gloria & Honor Patri, & Filio, & Spiritui ſancto in ſæcula ſæculorum. Amen. [b] Ibid. Can. 14. In fine Pſalmorum, non ſicut à quibuſdam huc uſque, Gloria Patri, ſed Gloria & Honor Patri, dicatur, &c. [c] Miſſa Mozarab. in Nativ. Chriſti. ap. Mabillon. de Liturg. Gallic. p. 453. Gloria & Honor Patri, & Filio, & Spiritui ſancto in ſæcula ſæculorum. Amen. [d] Athan. de Virgin. p. 1051. [e] Strabo. de Reb. Eccleſ. cap. 25. [f] Conc. Vaſion. 2. Can. 5. Quia non ſolum in ſede Apoſtolica, ſed etiam per totum Orientem & totam Africam vel Italiam, propter hæreticorum aſtutiam, qua Dei Filium non ſemper cum Patre fuiſſe, ſed à tempore fuiſſe blaſphemant, in omnibus clauſulis poſt, Gloria Patri, &c. ſicut erat in principio, dicitur, etiam & nos in univerſis Eccleſiis noſtris hoc ita eſſe dicendum decrevimus. [g] Hieron. Ep. ad Damaſum. 53. & inter Decreta Damaſi ap. Crab. Conc. tom. 1. p. 383. Iſtud carmen laudis omni Pſalmo conjungi præcipias, &c. [h] Strabo de Reb. Eccleſ. cap. 25. [i] Valeſ. Not. in Socrat. lib. 1. cap. 21. & Theod. lib. 2. cap. 24. [k] Baſil de Spir. Sanct. cap. 7, 25, & 29.

Party,

Party, to say, Glory be to the Father, in or by the Son, and Holy Ghost: Intending hereby to denote, that the Son and Holy Ghost were inferior to the Father in Substance, and, as Creatures, of a different Nature from him, as Sozomen [l] and other antient Writers inform us. And from this time it became scandalous, and brought any one under the Suspicion of Heterodoxy, to use it, because the Arians had now, as it were, made it the Shibboleth of their Party. Philostorgius indeed says [m], that the usual Form of the Catholicks was a Novelty, and that Flavian at Antioch was the first that brought in this Form of saying, Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost; whereas all before him said either, Glory be to the Father, by the Son, in the Holy Ghost: Or, Glory be to the Father, in the Son and in the Holy Ghost. But this is no more than what one might expect from the Partiality of an Arian Historian, and it is abundantly confuted by the antient Testimonies which St. Basil produces [n] in his own Vindication against some, who charged him with the like Innovation; in answer to which, he says, he did no more than what was done before by Irenæus, Clemens Romanus, the two Dionysii of Rome and Alexandria, Eusebius of Cæsarea, Origen, Africanus, Athenogenes, Gregory Thaumaturgus, Firmilian and Meletius, and what was done in the Prayers of the Church, and with the Consent of all the Eastern and Western Churches. Which would make a Man amazed to hear Cardinal Bona [o] charging St. Basil as Blame-worthy, for displeasing the Catholicks in using the Form of the Heterodox Party; when it is plain, it was the Heterodox Party that quarrelled with him for using the Catholick Form of the Church. And yet though he blames St. Basil without Grounds, telling us, That a Catholick Doctor ought to be without Rebuke, and abstain from Terms that have a suspected Sense, and offend pious Ears; yet he has nothing to say to Pope Leo, who, if either, was more certainly liable to his Censure, for using the Arian Form of Doxology, though in a Catholick Sense, in one of his Christmas Sermons, which he thus words, Let us give Thanks, Beloved, to the Father [p] by his Son, in the Holy Ghost. St. Basil never used this suspected Form (though he says it might be used with an Orthodox Meaning) but always, Glory be to the Father, with the Son and Holy Ghost. For which he was charged by some Heterodox Men as an Innovator; but there was no room for Bona's Censure.

Having thus stated the antient Form and Modification of this Hymn in its first Original, and subsequent Progress that it made in the Church, we are next to see to what Use it was applied, and in what Parts of Divine Service. And here we may observe, that it was an Hymn of most general Use, and a Doxology offered to God in the Close of every solemn Office. The Western Church repeated it at the End of every Psalm, and the Eastern Church at the End of the last Psalm, as we have seen in the former Chapter. Many of their Prayers were also concluded with it, as we shall find in various Instances in the following Parts of this and the next Book; particularly the solemn Thanksgiving or Consecration-Prayer at the Eucharist, to which Irenæus [q] and Tertullian [r] refer, when they mention the Close of it ending in these Words, ἀιῶνας τῶν αἰώνων, World without End. Amen. The whole Doxology commonly running thus: To Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, be all Glory, Worship, Thanksgiving, Honour and Adoration, now and for ever, throughout all Ages, World without End. Amen. As it is in the Constitutions [s]. Or, if the Prayer ended, by the Intercession of Christ, then it was, To whom with Thee, or, with whom unto Thee and the Holy Spirit, be all Honour, Glory, &c. World without End. [t]. Amen. This was also the ordinary Conclusion of their Sermons, That we may obtain eternal Life through Jesus Christ, To whom with the Father, and the Holy Ghost, be all Glory and Power, World without End: As may be seen in the Homilies of Chrysostom, Austin, Leo, and all others, of which more in the fourth Chapter of this Book.

SECT. II. Of the Great Doxology, Glory be to God on High.

ANOTHER Hymn of great Note in the antient Church, was that which they commonly called, The Angelical Hymn, or Great Doxology, beginning with those Words which the Angels sung at our Saviour's Birth, Glory be to God on High, &c. This was chiefly used in the Communion-Service, as it is now in our Church; and there we shall speak of it again in its proper Place. It was also used at Morning Prayer daily at Mens private Devotions, as I have shewed before out of Athanasius and the Constitutions [*], where the Reader may find it repeated at length under the Title of προσευχὴ ἑωθινὴ, the Morning Prayer. In the Mozarabick Liturgy it is appointed to be sung in publick before the Lessons on Christmas-Day. St. Chrysostom [u] often mentions it, and in one Place particularly observes [x] of those who retired from the World to lead an Ascetick Life, that they met together daily to sing their Morning Hymns with one Mouth to God, among which they sung this Angelical Hymn with the Angels in Heaven. But I have observed before, that this was not the common Practice of all Churches, to sing it every Day at Morning Prayer, but only in the Communion-Service; or at least only upon Sundays, and Easter-day, and such greater Festivals of the Church. Who first composed this Hymn, adding the remaining Part [l] Sozom. lib. 3. cap. 20. ἐδόξαζον πατέρα ἐν υἱῷ, διὰ τοῦ ἁγίου πνεύματος. [m] Philostorg. lib. 3. cap. 13. [n] Basil. de Spir. sanct. cap. 29. [o] Bona, Rer. Liturg. lib. 2. cap. 3. n. 2. [p] Leo. Serm. 1. de Nativ. Agamus, dilectissimi, gratias Deo Patri, per Filium ejus, in Spiritu sancto.

[q] Irenæ. lib. 1. cap. 1. [r] Tertul. de Spectac. cap. 25. [s] Constit. lib. 8. cap. 12. [t] Ibid. cap. 13. [*] See Book XIII. Chap. x. n. 9. [u] Chrys. Hom. 3. in Colos. p. 1337. Hom. 9. in Colos. p. 1380. [x] Chrys. Hom. 68. vel 69. in Mat. p. 600.

to the Words ſung by the Angels, is uncertain. Some ſuppoſe [y] it to be as antient as the time of Lucian, who lived in the beginning of the ſecond Century, and is thought to mean it in one of his Dialogues, where he ſpeaks of the Hymn with many Names, πολυώνυμον ᾠδήν, as uſed by the Chriſtians: Others take it for the Gloria Patri; which is a Diſpute as difficult to be determined, as it is to find out the firſt Author and Original of this Hymn. And all I ſhall ſay farther of it, is only what was ſaid heretofore by the fourth Council of Toledo [z] againſt ſome, who rejected the Hymns of St. Hilary and St. Ambroſe and others, becauſe they were of human Compoſition: That by the ſame Reaſon they might have rejected both the leſſer Doxology, Glory and Honour be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghoſt, which was compoſed by Men; and alſo this greater Doxology, part of which was ſung by the Angels at our Saviour's Birth, Glory be to God on High, and on Earth Peace to Men of good Will (ſo they read it, as many other Greek and Latin Writers did;) but the reſt that follows, was compoſed and added to it by the Doctors of the Church.

SECT. III. Of the Triſagion or Cherubical Hymn, Holy, Holy, Holy, &c.

A third Hymn of great Note in the Church was the Cherubical Hymn, or the Triſagion, as it was called, becauſe of the thrice repeating, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Hoſts, in Imitation of the Seraphims in the Viſion of Iſaiah. The Original Form of this Hymn was in theſe Words, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Hoſts, Heaven and Earth are full of thy Glory, who art Bleſſed for ever. Amen. Thus it is in the Conſtitutions [a], and frequently in St. Chryſoſtom [b], who ſays always, that it was in the ſame Words that the Seraphims ſung it in Iſaiah. Afterward the Church added ſome Words to it, and ſung it in this Form, ἅγιος ὁ Θεός, ἅγιος ἰσχυρός, ἅγιος ἀθάνατος, ἐλέησον ἡμᾶς, Holy God, Holy Mighty, Holy Immortal, have Mercy upon us. This Form is aſcribed by ſome to Proclus Biſhop of Conſtantinople and Theodoſius Junior, An. 446. And in this Form not long after we find it uſed by the Fathers of the Council of Chalcedon [c] in their Condemnation of Dioſcorus. Which is alſo noted by Damaſcen [d], who ſays, the Church uſed this Form to declare her Faith in the Holy Trinity, applying the Title of Holy God to the Father, and Holy Mighty to the Son, and Holy Immortal to the Holy Ghoſt: Not as excluding any of the three Perſons from each of the Titles, but in Imitation of the Apoſtle, who ſays, To us there is but one God the Father, of whom are all Things, and we by him; and one Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom are all Things, and we by him. And thus this Hymn continued to be applied to the whole Trinity, till Anaſtaſius the Emperor, as ſome [e] ſay, or as others relate [f], Peter Gnapheus Biſhop of Antioch, cauſed the Words, ὁ ſταυρωθεὶς δι' ἡμᾶς, that was crucified for us, to be added to it. Which was intended to bring in the Hereſy of the Theopaſchites, who aſſerted that the Divine Nature it ſelf ſuffered upon the Croſs, and was in effect to ſay, that the whole Trinity ſuffered, becauſe this Hymn was commonly applied to the whole Trinity. To avoid this Inconvenience, one Calandio Biſhop of Antioch, in the time of Zeno the Emperor, made another Addition to it, of the Words, Chriſt our King, reading it thus, Holy God, Holy Mighty, Holy Immortal, Chriſt our King, that was crucified for us, have Mercy on us, as Theodorus Lector [g] and other Hiſtorians inform us. Theſe laſt Additions occaſioned great Confuſion and Tumults in the Eaſtern Church, whilſt the Conſtantinopolitans and Weſtern Churches ſtifly rejected them; and ſome of the European Provinces, the better to confront them and maintain the old Way of applying it to the whole Trinity, inſtead of the Words, crucified for us, expreſly ſaid, Holy Trinity, have Mercy on us, as we find it in Ephrem Antiochenus [h] recorded in Photius.

This is the ſhort Hiſtory and Account of the Riſe and Progreſs of this celebrated Hymn in the Service of the Church, and of the heretical Corruptions and Interpolations that were intended to be made upon it. As to its Uſe, it was chiefly ſung in the Middle of the Communion-Service, as we ſhall ſee more expreſly hereafter in the next Book: But it was ſometimes uſed upon other Occaſions, as we have heard in the Council of Chalcedon before: And ſome Greek Ritualiſts [i] tell us, that it was always ſung before the Reading of the Epiſtle, which was antiently a Part of the Service of the Catechumens. But then they diſtinguiſh between the Triſagion and Epinicion or Triumphal Hymn; calling the ſimple Form, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Hoſts, the Epinicion, which was ſung in the Communion-Service; and the other, the Triſagion, which was ſung in the Service of the Catechumens: But the more antient Writers do not obſerve this Diſtinction; and therefore I have here put both Forms under the common Name of the Triſagion. He that would ſee this Hiſtory more at large, may conſult Chriſtianus Lupus [k] upon the Council of Trullo, and Mr. Allix [l] who has written a peculiar Treatiſe upon the Subject.

[y] Smith's Account of the Greek Church, p. 226. [z] Conc. Tolet. 4. Can. 12. Nam & ille Hymnus, quem nato in carne Chriſto, angeli cecinerunt, Gloria in excelſis Deo, & in terra Pax hominibus bonæ voluntatis, reliquaque quæ ibi ſequuntur, Eccleſiaſtici Doctores compoſuerunt. [a] Conſt. lib. 8. cap. 12. p. 402. [b] Chryſ. Hom. 1. de Verb. Eſai. t. 3. p. 834. Hom. 6. in Seraphim. ibid p. 890. Hom. 21. ad Pop. Antioch. t. 1. p. 266. & paſſim. Vid. Cyril. Catech. Myſt. 5. n. 5. Conc. Vaſens. 2. can. 4. [c] Conc. Chalced. Act. 1. p. 310. t. 4. Labbe. [d] Damaſcen. de Orthod. Fide, lib. 3. cap. 10. [e] Evagr. lib. 3. cap. 44. [f] Damaſcen. ibid. [g] Theod. Lect. lib. 2. p. 566. Cedren. an. 16. Zenonis. [h] Phot. Bibliothec. Cod. 228. p. 773. [i] German. Theoria Eccleſ. Bibl. Patr. Gr. Lat. tom. 2. p. 145. [k] Lupus, Not. in Can. 81. Trullan. [l] Alix de Triſagio.

SECT. IV. Of the Allelujah and Alleluatick Pſalms.

NEXT to the Triſagion there is frequent mention made among the antient Writers of ſinging the Allelujah. By which they ſometimes mean the Repetition of this ſingle Word, which ſignifies, Praiſe the Lord: Which they did in imitation of the Heavenly Hoſt, ſinging and ſaying, again and again, Allelujah, Rev. xix. Sometimes they mean one of thoſe Pſalms, which were called Alleluatick Pſalms [m], becauſe they had the Word Allelujah prefixed before them in the Title, ſuch as the cxlvth, and thoſe that follow to the End. The ſinging of theſe, was ſometimes called ſinging the Allelujah, as has been obſerved out of Caſſian [n] more than once in the foregoing Parts of this and the former Book. But the more common Acceptation of Allelujah, is for the ſinging of the Word itſelf by a frequent ſolemn Repetition of it upon certain Days, and in ſpecial Parts of Divine Service; it being a ſort of Invitatory, or mutual Call to each other to praiſe the Lord. Therefore, as St. Auſtin [o] obſerves, they always uſed it in the Hebrew Language, becauſe that was the known Signification of it: And ſo it was in our firſt Liturgy, though now we ſay, Praiſe ye the Lord, with a Reſponſe of the People, The Lord's Name be praiſed. Antiently there was no Diſpute about the Lawfulneſs of the Hymn itſelf, but ſome Variation and ſome Diſpute there was about the Times of uſing it. St. Auſtin ſays, in ſome Churches it was never ſung but upon Eaſter Day, and the fifty [p] Days of Pentecoſt: But in other Churches it was uſed at other Times alſo. Vigilantius contended fiercely [q] againſt St. Jerom, that it ought never to be ſung but only upon Eaſter Day. And in this, he ſeems to have followed the Practice of the Church of Rome, where Sozomen [r] aſſures us, it was never ſung but once a Year, and that was upon Eaſter Day: In ſo much that it was the common Form of an Oath among the Romans, As they hoped to live to ſing Allelujah on that Day. Cardinal Bona [s] and Baronius [t] are very angry at Sozomen for this: But Valeſius [u] honeſtly defends him, for as much as Caſſiodore, who was a Roman, reports the ſame in his Hiſtoria Tripartita. But we muſt note, that antiently in thoſe Churches, where it was moſt frequented, there were ſome Exceptions in point of Time and Seaſon. For in the Time of Lent it was never uſed, as appears from St. Auſtin [x], who ſays, That was a Time of Sorrow, and therefore from the Beginning of Lent till Eaſter Day they always omitted it: The antient Tradition of the Church, being only to uſe it at certain Seaſons. The fourth Council of Toledo [y] forbids the Uſe of it not only in Lent, but upon other Days of Faſting, as particularly upon the firſt of January, which was then kept a Faſt in the Spaniſh Church, becauſe the Heathen obſerved it with great Superſtition of many idolatrous Rites and Practices. In the ſame Council the Allelujah is mentioned under the Name of Laudes [z], and appointed to be ſung after the Reading of the Goſpel; which, as Bona [a] and Mabillon [b] obſerve, was according to the Mozarabick Rite; for in other Churches it was ſung between the Epiſtle and the Goſpel. It was alſo ſung at Funerals, as St. Jerom acquaints us [c] in his Epitaph of Fabiola, where he ſpeaks of the whole Multitude ſinging Pſalms together, and making the golden Roof of the Church ſhake with ecchoing forth the Allelujah. The Author under the Name of Dionyſius [d], ſpeaks of it alſo as uſed in the Confection of the Chriſm, or holy Oil to be uſed in the Unction of Confirmation. St. Auſtin [e] ſays, it was ſung every Lord's Day at the Altar, for the ſame Reaſon that they prayed ſtanding, as a Memorial of Chriſt's Reſurrection, and as a Figure of our future Reſt and Joyfulneſs, to ſignify that our Buſineſs in the Life to come, will be nothing elſe but to praiſe God, according to that of the Pſalmiſt, Bleſſed are they that dwell in Thy Houſe, O Lord, they will be always praiſing Thee. The meaning of Allelujah being nothing elſe but Praiſe the Lord, as both he and others [f] repreſent it. In the ſecond Council of Tours [g] it is appointed to be ſung immediately after the Pſalms both at the ſixth Hour, that is, Noonday, and the twelfth Hour, that is Evening Prayer. But whether they mean the ſhorter Allelujah, or one of thoſe Pſalms called the Alleluatick Pſalms, of which St. Auſtin and Caſſian ſpeak, is not very eaſy to determine. Iſidore [h] ſays, it was ſung every Day in Spain, except upon Faſt-Days: Though it was otherwiſe in the African Churches. St. Jerom [i] ſays, it was uſed in private Devotion: For even the Plow-man at his Labour ſung his Allelujahs. And this was the Signal or Call [m] Aug. in Pſal. 105. p. 505. Pſalmi Alleluatici. It. in Pſal. 118. p. 542. [n] Caſſian. Inſtit. lib. 2. cap. 5 & 11. [o] Aug. Ep. 178. & Hom. 16. ex 50. T. 10. p. 165. [p] Aug. Ep. 119. ad Januar. cap. 17. Ut Alleluia per ſolos dies Quinquaginta cantetur in Eccleſia, non uſquequaque obſervatur. Nam & in aliis diebus varie cantatur alibi atque alibi. Vid. Ep. 86. & Hom. in Pſal. 106. & Serm. 151. de Tempore. [q] Hieron. cont. Vigilant. cap. 1. Exortus eſt ſubito Vigilantius, qui dicat—— nunquam niſi in Paſcha Alleluia cantandum. [r] Sozom. lib. 7. cap. 19. [s] Bona de Pſalmod. cap. 16. §. 7. n. 4. [t] Baron. an. 384. n. 28. [u] Valeſ. in Sozom. lib. 7. cap. 19. [x] Aug. in Pſal. 110. Venerunt dies ut jam cantemus Alleluia, &c. Vid. in Pſal. 106 & 148. [y] Conc. Tolet. 4. Can. 10. In omnibus Quadrageſimæ diebus (quia tempus non eſt gaudii, ſed mœroris) Alleluia non decantetur—— Hoc enim Eccleſiæ univerſalis conſenſio roboravit. In temporibus vero reliquis, id eſt, Kalendis Januarii, quæ propter errorem Gentilitatis aguntur, omnino Alleluia non decantabitur. [z] Ibid. Can. 11. Laudes ideo Evangelium ſequuntur propter gloriam Chriſti, quæ per idem Evangelium prædicatur. [a] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 2. cap. 6. n. 4. [b] Mabil. de Liturg. Gallican. lib. 1. cap. 4. n. 12. [c] Hieron. Ep. 30. cap. 4. Sonabant Pſalmi, aurata tecta templorum reboans in ſublime quatiebat Alleluja. [d] Dionyſ. de Hierarch. Eccleſ. cap. 4. [e] Aug. Ep. 119. ad Januar. cap. 15. Omnibus diebus Dominicis ad Altare ſtantes oramus, & Alleluja canitur, quod ſignificat actionem noſtram futuram non eſſe niſi Laudare Deum, &c. [f] Vid. Juſtin. Quæſt. ad Orthodox. Q. 50. [g] Conc. Turon. 2. Can. 19. Patrum ſtatuta præceperunt, ut ad ſextam, ſex Pſalmi dicantur cum Alleluja; & ad Duodecimam duodecim, itemque cum Alleluja. [h] Iſidor. de Offic. lib. 1. c. 13. In Africanis Eccleſiis non omni tempore, ſed tantum Dominicis diebus & 50 poſt Domini reſurrectionem Alleluja cantatur: Verum apud nos ſecundum antiquam Hiſpaniarum traditionem præter dies Jejuniorum & Quadrageſimæ omni tempore canitur Alleluja. [i] Hieron. Ep. 18. ad Marcellam. Quocunque te verteris, arator ſtivam retinens Alleluia decantat.

among

among the Monks [k] to their Eccleſiaſtical Aſſemblies. For one went about and ſung Alleluiah, and that was the Notice to repair to their ſolemn Meeting. Nay Sidonius Apollinaris ſeems to intimate [l], that the Seamen uſed it as their Signal or Celeuſma at their common Labour, making the Banks eccho while they ſung Alleluiah to Chriſt. I only obſerve farther, That in the Church Alleluiah was ſung by all the People, as appears not only from what is ſaid before by St. Jerom, that the Church ecchoed with the Sound of it; but alſo from that of Paulinus in his Epiſtle to Severus [m], Alleluja novis balat Ovile choris, The whole Sheepfold of Chriſt ſings Alleluiah in her new Choires. And St. Auſtin [n] alluding to this, ſays, it was the Chriſtians ſweet Celeuſma or Call, whereby they invited one another to ſing Praiſes unto Chriſt.

SECT. V. Of the Hoſanna and the Evening Hymn, and Nunc dimittis, or the Song of Simeon.

I do not here inſiſt upon the Hoſannah, or the Evening Hymn, becauſe it does not appear that either of theſe were uſed in the Service of the Catechumens. The Hoſannah was but a Part of the great Doxology, Glory be to God on high, and only uſed in the Communion Service, where we ſhall ſpeak of it hereafter. And the Evening Hymn has been mention'd [*] before in the former Book, where we have given an Account of the daily Evening Service, and ſhewed it to be rather a private Hymn, than any Part of the publick Worſhip of the Church. In it was contained the Nunc dimittis, or Song of Simeon, Lord now letteſt Thou thy Servant depart in Peace according to thy Word, &c. But whether any of this was uſed in publick, or only by Chriſtians in their private Devotions in their Families at their ſetting up of Lights, is what I ingenuouſly confeſs I am not yet able from any antient Records to determine. For though there is frequent mention of the λυχναψία among the Greeks, and of the Lucernarium among the Latins, as of a publick Office, for Veſpers or Evening Prayers; yet I will not aſſert, that this Hymn was a Part of that Office, without clearer Proof, but leave it to farther Diſquiſition and Enquiry. The only Thing we find more of the Nunc dimittis, is in the Life of Maria Ægyptiaca, who died about the Year 525, of whom it is ſaid, that a little before her Death ſhe received the Euchariſt, repeated the Creed and the Lord's Prayer, and ſung the Nunc dimittis, Lord now letteſt Thou thy Servant [o] depart in Peace according to thy Word. But this was only an Act of private Devotion, and whether it was then received into the publick Offices of the Church, remains uncertain.

SECT. VI. Of the Benedicite, or the Song of the three Children.

BUT we are more certain of the Uſe of the Hymn, called Benedicite, or Song of the Three Children in the burning fiery Furnace. For not only Athanaſius [p] directs Virgins to uſe it in their private Devotions, but the fourth Council of Toledo [q] ſays, it was uſed in the Church over all the World, and therefore orders it to be ſung by the Clergy of Spain and Gallicia every Lord's Day, and on the Feſtivals of the Martyrs, under Pain of Excommunication. Leſtrange [r] thinks this is the firſt Time there is any mention made of this Hymn, as of publick Uſe in the Church: But Chryſoſtom lived two hundred Years before this Council, and he makes the ſame Obſervation as the Council does, that it was ſung in all Places [s] throughout the World, and would continue to be ſung in future Generations. The Lectionarium Gallicanum publiſhed by Mabillon [t] appoints this Hymn to be ſung after the Reading of the Prophets, much after the ſame manner as it is now ordered to be ſung between the firſt and ſecond Leſſon in the Liturgy of our Church.

SECT. VII. Of the Magnificat, or Song of the Holy Virgin.

THE Uſe of the Magnificat, or Song of the Holy Virgin, My Soul doth magnify the Lord, &c. is not quite ſo antient: For the firſt Time we meet with it as preſcribed for publick Uſe, is in the Rules of Cæſarius Arelatenſis and Aurelian [u], who order it to be ſung in the French Churches at Morning Service. And that was about the Year 506.

SECT. VIII. When firſt the Creed began to be ſung as an Hymn in the Church.

SOME learned Perſons reckon the ſinging of the Creed into the Pſalmody of the Church, and ſpeak of it as an antient Cuſtom: But herein they miſtake, by ſuffering themſelves to be impoſed upon by modern Authors. Biſhop Wettenhal [x] ſays, it is no improbable Conjecture, that the Hymn which the Primitive Chriſtians are ſaid by Pliny to have ſung to Chriſt as God, was their Creed; and that it is certain, the Nicene Creed has been ſung in the Church in a manner from the very compiling of it. For this he cites Platina in the Life of Pope Mark, who affirms, that it was ordained by that Pope, that on all ſolemn Days immediately after the Goſpel, the Creed ſhould be ſung [k] Id. Ep. 27. Epitaph. Paulæ. cap. 16. Poſt Alleluja cantatum, quo ſigno vocabantur ad Collectam, nulli reſidere licitum erat. [l] Sidon. lib. 2. Ep. 10. Curvorum hinc Chorus helciariorum, Reſponſantibus Alleluja ripis, ad Chriſtum levat amnicum Celeuſma. [m] Paulin. Ep. 12. ad Sever. [n] Aug. de Cantico Novo. cap. 2. Tom. 9. Celeuſma noſtrum dulce cantemus Alleluja. [*] Book XIII. Chap. xi. n. 5 [o] Vita Mariæ Ægypt. ap. Durantum de Ritibus lib. 1. cap. 16. n. 9. [p] Athan. de Virgin. p. 1057. [q] Conc. Tolet. 4. can. 13. Hymnum quoque trium puerorum, in quo univerſa cœli terræque creatura Deum collaudat, & quem Eccleſia Catholica per totum orbem diffuſa celebrat, quidam ſacerdotes in Miſſa Dominicorum dierum & in ſolennitatibus Martyrum canere negligunt. Proinde ſanctum Concilium inſtituit, ut per omnes Hiſpaniæ Eccleſias vel Galliciæ, in omnium Miſſarum ſolennitate idem in publico (al. Pulpito) decantetur, &c. [r] Leſtrange Alliance of Div. Offic. Chap. 3. p. 79. [s] Chryſ. Quod nemo læditur niſi à ſeipſo. tom. 4. p. 593. ὡδὴν παιδαχῆ τῆς ἀικμώσης ἀδομώσην, ἣ ἀεὶ ησομώσην εἰς τὰς μελὰ ταῦτα γενεὰς. [t] Mabillon. de Liturg. Gallic. lib. 2. p. 108. [u] Apud Mabillon. de Curſu Gallican. p. 407. [x] Wettenhal, Gift of Singing, Chap. 3. p. 330.

with a loud Voice by the Clergy and People, in that Form wherein it was explained by the Nicene Council. When yet it is certain on the other hand, that the Creed was never ſo much as barely repeated in the Roman Church in Time of Divine Service, till the Year 1014, when Benedict the eighth brought it into Uſe, to comply with the Practice of the French and Spaniſh Churches, as has been ſhewed at large in a former Book [*], where we have noted, that it was never read publickly in the Greek Church, but once a Year, till Peter Fullo brought it into the Church of Antioch, An. 471; and Timotheus into the Church of Conſtantinople, An. 511. From whoſe Example it was taken by the third Council of Toledo, An. 589, and brought into Cuſtom in the Spaniſh Churches. After which it was four whole Centuries before it gained Admittance in the Church of Rome. So little Reaſon is there to depend upon the Authority of modern Authors, in Caſes where they plainly contradict the Teſtimony of more antient and credible Writers. And this is a good Argument, as Biſhop Stillingfleet [y] well urges it, to ſhew the Differences betwixt the old Gallican and Roman Offices, and that the Church of England did not follow preciſely the Model of the Roman Offices, but thoſe that were more antiently received in the general Practice of the Gallican and Britiſh Churches.

SECT. IX. Of the Author and Original of the Hymn Te Deum.

THERE remains one Hymn more, the Te Deum, which is now in Uſe among us, the Author and Original of which is variouſly diſputed. The common Opinion aſcribes it to St. Ambroſe and St. Auſtin jointly; others to St. Ambroſe ſingly [z], becauſe he is known to have compoſed Hymns for the Uſe of the Church. Two things are chiefly ſaid in Favour of theſe Opinions, which have no real Weight or Force in them. 1. That the Chronicle of Dacius, one of St. Ambroſe's Succeſſors, ſays, He compoſed it. 2. That it is approved as his Hymn in the fourth Council of Toledo, An. 633. But to the firſt it is reply'd by learned Men, That the pretended Chronicon of Dacius is a mere Counterfeit, and altogether ſpurious. Mabillon [a] proves it to be at leaſt 500 Years younger than its reputed Author: Whence the Story that is ſo formally told in it, is concluded to be a mere Fiction and Invention of later Ages. The Story is this, as Spondanus [b], a Favourer of it, reports it out of Dacius: That when St. Auſtin was baptized by St. Ambroſe, whilſt they were at the Font, they ſung this Hymn by Inſpiration, as the Spirit gave them Utterance, and ſo publiſhed it in the Sight and Audience of all the People. But the Authority of the Story reſting merely upon the Foundation of this fabulous Writer, there is no Credit to be given to it. Neither is there any greater Weight to be laid upon what is alledged from the Council of Toledo: For the Council only ſays, That ſome Hymns were compoſed for the Uſe of the Church, by St. Hilary and St. Ambroſe; without any particular mention of this Hymn; ſo that it might as well be aſcribed to St. Hilary, as St. Ambroſe, for any thing that is ſaid in that Council. The Truth of the Matter is, that it was compoſed by a French Writer about an hundred Years after St. Ambroſe's Death, for the Uſe of the Gallican Church. Pagi [c] ſays, Gavantus found it in ſome MSS. aſcribed to St. Abundius; and others have the Name of Siſebutus prefixed to it. Biſhop Uſher [d] found it in two MSS. aſcribed to Nicettus Biſhop of Triers, who liv'd about the Year 535. And he is now by learned Men generally reputed the Author of it. The learned Benedictins, who lately publiſhed St. Ambroſe's Works, judge St. Ambroſe not to be the Author of it: And Dr. Cave, though he was once [e] of a different Judgment; yet upon maturer Conſideration [f] ſubſcribes to their Opinion. Wherefore the moſt rational Concluſion, is that of Biſhop Stillingfleet, [g] That it was compoſed by Nicettus, and that we muſt look on this Hymn as owing its Original to the Gallican Church; ſince not long after the Time of Nicettus it is mentioned in the Rule of St. Benedict, cap. 11. and the Rule of Cæſarius Arelatenſis, cap. 21. and the Rule of Aurelian, where they preſcribe the Uſe of it: But Menardus [h] is confident, there is no mention of this Hymn in any Writers of Credit before them.

SECT. X. The Hymns of St. Ambroſe.

BUT though St. Ambroſe cannot be allowed to be the Author of this Hymn, yet there is no doubt to be made but that he compoſed Hymns for the Uſe of the Church, ſome of which are yet extant. For St. Auſtin [i] mentions one of his Evening Hymns in ſeveral Places, Deus Creator omnium, &c. Which I forbear to relate here at length, becauſe I have done it in the former Book [†]. Again, St. Auſtin in his Retractations [k] ſpeaks of another Hymn compoſed by St. Ambroſe upon the Repentance of Peter after the crowing of the Cock, Part of which he there relates, and ſays, it was uſed to be ſung by many in his Time.

[*] Book X. Chap. iv. n. 17. [y] Stilling. Orig. Britan. chap. 4. p. 237. [z] Comber of Liturgies, p. 180. [a] Mabil. Analecta Veterum. Tom. 1. p. 5. [b] Spondan. an. 388. n. 9. In quibus Fontibus, prout Spiritus ſanctus dabat eloqui illis, Te Deum laudamus, cantantes, cunctis qui aderant audientibus & videntibus, ediderunt. Ex Chronico Dacii, lib. 1. c. 10. [c] Pagi Critic. in Baron. an. 388. n. 11. [d] Uſſer. de Symbolo p. 3. [e] Cave Hiſt. Liter. Vol. 1. p. 215. [f] Id. Hiſt. Liter. Vol. 2. p. 75. Ambroſii eſſe, nullo idoneo teſtimonio probari poteſt, & Fabulam pro origine habere videtur. [g] Stillingfl. Orig. Britan. chap 4. p. 222. [h] Menard. Not. in Gregor. Sacramentar. p. 351. [i] Aug. Confeſs. lib. 9. cap. 12. It. de Muſica lib. 6. cap. 2. & 17. [†] Book XIII. Chap. v. n. 7. [k] Aug. Retract. lib. 1. cap. 21. Cantatur ore multorum in verſibus Beatiſſimi Ambroſii, ubi de gallo gallinaceo ait, Hoc, ipſa Petra Eccleſia, canente, culpam diluit.

Du Pin thinks [l] moſt of thoſe Hymns which are now the daily Office of the Roman Service, are taken from St. Ambroſe, but that the reſt are in a different Style, and owing to other Authors. Particularly that the Hymn, Vexilla Regis prodeunt, is none of his, which is now uſed in the Romiſh Church in the fourth Week of Lent, ſo notorious for their kneeling down to the Croſs, and worſhipping it in theſe Words [m]: Hail, Croſs, our only Hope, in this Time of Paſſion, increaſe the Righteouſneſs of the Pious, and grant Pardon of Sins to the Guilty. We are ſure this could not be the Compoſition of St. Ambroſe, nor any Writer of that Age; being ſo much the reverſe of the Practice of the antient Church, in whoſe Hymns or other Devotions there is not the leaſt Footſtep of worſhipping the Croſs, or any Material Image of God, as has been demonſtrated in a former Part [†] of this Work, where the Hiſtory of Images has been handled ex profeſſo, in conſidering the Way of adorning the antient Churches.

SECT. XI. The Hymns of St. Hilary, Claudianus Mamercus, and others.

THERE were many other Hymns, and ſome whole Books of Hymns compoſed by other Writers of the Church, of which we have little remaining beſides the bare Names, and therefore it will be ſufficient juſt to mention them. St. Jerom ſays [n], St. Hilary Biſhop of Poictiers, compoſed a Book of Hymns: And theſe we are ſure were many Years after his Death of famous Note and Uſe in the Spaniſh Churches, being ratified and confirmed in the fourth Council of Toledo [o]. But none of theſe are come to our Hands, except a Morning Hymn [p] prefixed before his Works, which he ſent with an Epiſtle to his Daughter Abra. It is a Prayer to Chriſt for Preſervation from the Perils of Day and Night, ſavouring of antient Piety, and concluding with the common Glorification of Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt. Sidonius Apollinaris [q] ſays alſo that Claudianus Mamercus collected the Pſalms and Hymns and Leſſons proper for the Feſtivals in the Church of Vienna in France, and made ſome Hymns of his own, one of which he highly [r] commends for its Elegancy, Loftineſs, and Sweetneſs, as exceeding any of the antient Lyricks, in the greatneſs of its Compoſure and Hiſtorical Truth. Savaro ſays in his Notes upon the Place, that it is the ſame which is now in the Roman Breviary; and becauſe it anſwers the Character which Sidonius gives it, and has none of the Superſtition of a modern Compoſure in it (ſuch as the Vexilla Regis, fathered upon St. Ambroſe) I think it not improper to tranſcribe in the Margin here [s], for the Uſe of the learned Reader. And ſay farther, that if every Thing in the Roman Breviary had been in this Strain, it had much more reſembled the Piety and Simplicity of the antient Hymns, and been free from thoſe Marks of Superſtition and Idolatry, which now it labours under, by mixing the Follies of the modern ſuperſtitious Admirers of the Worſhip of the Virgin Mary and the Croſs, which were ſo great a Deviation from the antient Worſhip, and ſtood ſo much in need of Reformation. There were many other Hymns for the Uſe of particular Churches, compoſed by learned Men, as Nepos, and Athenogenes, and Ephrem Syrus, not to mention thoſe ſpoken of by Pliny and Tertullian, and frequently by Euſebius; nor thoſe which Paulus Samoſatenſis cauſed in his Anger to be caſt out of the Church of Antioch; nor thoſe which Sozomen [t] ſays were made upon a ſpecial Occaſion, when the People of Antioch had incenſed Theodoſius by throwing down his Statues; which were both ſung in the Church, and before Theodoſius himſelf by the ſinging Boys as he ſat at Table. Of all which we have no farther Account but only the bare mention of them in their ſeveral Authors. As for thoſe compoſed by Gregory Nazianzen, Paulinus, Prudentius, and other Chriſtian

[l] Du Pin. Bibliothec. Cent. 4. p. 231.

[m] Breviar. Rom. Hebdom. 4. Quadrageſimæ. Die Sabbati.

O Crux ave ſpes unica,
Hoc Paſſionis tempore,
Auge piis juſtitiam,
Reiſque dona veniam.

[†] Book VIII. Chap. viii. n. 6. &c. [n] Hieron. de Scriptor. Eccl. cap. 100. [o] Conc. Tolet. 4. can. 12. [p] Hilar. Epiſt. ad Fil. Abram. Interim tibi Hymnum Matutinum & Serotinum miſi, ut memor mei ſemper ſis. The Hymn begins thus: Lucis Largitor optime, &c. And ends in theſe Words of the Doxology:

Gloria tibi Domino,
Gloria Unigenito,
Cum Spiritu Paracleto
Nunc & per omne ſæculum.

[q] Sidon. lib. 4. Ep. 11. Pſalmorum hic modulator & Phonaſcus, Inſtructas docuit ſonare claſſes. Hic ſolennibus annuis paravit, Quæ quo tempore lecta convenirent. [r] Id. lib. 4. Ep. 3. Jam vero de Hymno tuo ſi percunctere quod ſentiam, commaticus eſt, copioſus, dulcis, elatus, & quoſlibet lyricos Dithyrambos amœnitate poetica & hiſtorica veritate ſupereminet. [s] Breviar. Rom. Dominica 5. Quadrageſimæ, ſive in Paſſione Domini ad Matutinum.

Pange lingua glorioſi
Prælium certaminis,
Et ſuper crucis trophæum
Dic triumphum nobilem,
Qualiter Redemptor orbis
Immolatus vicerit.

De Parentis Protoplaſti
Fraude Factor condolens,
Quando pomi noxialis
Morſu in mortem corruit,
Ipſe lignum tunc notavit,
Damna ligni ut ſolveret.

Hoc opus noſtræ ſalutis
Ordo depopoſcerat,
Multiformis Proditoris
Ars ut artem falleret,
Et medelam ferret inde,
Hoſtis unde læſerat.

Quando venit ergo ſacri
Plenitudo temporis,
Miſſus eſt ab arce Patris
Natus orbis Conditor:
Ac de ventre Virginali
Caro factus prodiit.

Vagit infans inter arcta
Conditus preſepia:
Membra pannis involuta
Virgo mater alligat;
Et manus pedeſque & crura
Stricta cingit faſcia.

Gloria & honor Deo
Uſquequaque altiſſimo,
Una Patri, Filioque,
Inclyto Paraclyto,
Cui Laus eſt & Poteſtas
Per æterna ſæcula. Amen.

[t] Sozom. lib. 7. cap. 23.

Poets,

Poets, they were not designed for publick Use in the Church, but only to antidote Men against the Poison of Heresies, or set forth the Praises of the Martyrs, or recommend the Practice of Virtue in a private way: For which Reason I take no Notice of them in this Place, being only concerned to give an Account of such Hymns as related to the antient Psalmody, as a Part of the publick Service of the Church. And so I have done with the first Part of their Worship in the Missa Catechumenorum, or Service of the Catechumens.

CHAP. III.

Of the Manner of Reading the Scriptures in the publick Service of the Church.

SECT. I. Lessons of the Scripture sometimes mixed with Psalms and Hymns, and sometimes read after them.

NEXT to the Psalmody and Hymns, we are to take a View of their way of Reading the Scriptures, which was another Part of the Service of the Catechumens, at which (as has been observed before) all sorts of Persons were allowed to be present for Instruction. Which is an Argument of it self, sufficient (if there were no other) to prove, that they were always read in a known Tongue: Of which I need say no more here, because it has been so fully evinced by great Variety of Arguments in the last Book. What we are now to observe farther, relates to the Manner and Circumstances of this Service. Where first of all it is proper to remark, that tho' many times the Psalms, and Lessons, and Hymns, were so intermixed (as now they are in our Liturgy) that it is hard to tell which came first in order, or with which the Service began; yet in some Places it was plainly otherwise: For the Psalms were first sung all together, only with short Prayers between them, and then the Lessons were read by themselves, to such a Number as the Rules of every Church appointed. Of which I have given sufficient Proof out of Cassian and St. Jerom in the Beginning of the last Chapter, which may supersede all farther Confirmation in this Place.

SECT. II. The Lessons read both out of the Old and New Testament, except in the Church of Rome, where only Epistle and Gospel were read.

THE next Thing worthy of our Observation, is the Number of the Lessons, which were always two at least, and sometimes three or four, and those partly out of the Old Testament, and partly out of the New. Only the Church of Rome seems to have been a little singular in this Matter: For, as Bishop Stillingfleet observes [a] out of Walafridus Strabo [b] and others of her old Ritualists, for 400 Years, till the Time of Pope Celestine, they had neither Psalms nor Lessons out of the Old Testament read before the Sacrifice, but only Epistle and Gospel. In other Churches they had Lessons out of the Old Testament as well as the New. Cassian [c] says, in Egypt, after the Singing of the Psalms, they had two Lessons read, one out of the Old Testament, and the other out of the New: Only on Saturdays and Sundays, and the fifty Days of Pentecost they were both out of the New Testament, one out of the Acts of the Apostles, or the Epistles, and the other out of the Gospels. The Author of the Constitutions [d] speaks of four Lessons, two out of Moses and the Prophets, besides the Psalms, and then two out of the Epistles or Acts of the Apostles, and the Gospels. Again [e], he mentions the Reading of the Prophets on Sundays. And in another Place [f], the Law and the Prophets, the Psalms and the Gospels. And again, the Law and the Prophets [g], and the Epistles, and the Acts, and the Gospels. So Justin Martyr describing the Business of the Christian Assemblies on the Lord's Day, speaks of the Reading of the Writings of the Prophets, as well as the Apostles [h]. In like manner Chrysostom reproving some who were very negligent at Church, says [i], Tell me what Prophet was read to-day, what Apostle? implying that the one was read as well as the other. Particularly he tells us, that the Book of Genesis was always read in Lent, of which more by and by, in the following Observation. St. Basil in one of his Homilies [k] upon Baptism in Lent, takes notice of the several Lessons that were read that Day, besides the Psalms, whereof one was out of the first of Isaiah, the second out of Acts ii, and the third out of Matthew xi. And in another Homily [l] he speaks of the Psalms, and Proverbs, and Epistles and Gospels, as read that Day. Maximus Taurinensis in one of his Homilies upon the Epiphany [m] says, The Lessons were out of Isaiah lx. Matthew ii. and John i. for that Festival. St. Austin sometimes only mentions Epistle and Gospel. But in other Places he expresly mentions [n] the Reading of the Prophets, and particularly mentions the Prophet Micah, and those Words of the vith Chapter, What doth the Lord require of thee, but to do juſtly, to love Mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God; which were the Theme for his Diſcourſe upon the Leſſon for the Day. In the French Churches there is ſtill more Evidence for this Practice: For Cæſarius Arelatenſis [o], in one of his Homilies cited by Mabillon, uſes this Argument to the People, why they ſhould ſtay the whole Time of Divine Service, becauſe the Leſſons were not ſo properly called Miſſa or Divine Service, as was the Oblation or Conſecration of the Body and Blood of Chriſt: For they might read at Home, or hear others read the Leſſons, whether out of the Prophets, or Apoſtles, or Evangeliſts; but they could not hear or ſee the Conſecration any where elſe but only in the Houſe of God. Where it is plainly implied, that the Leſſons were then read in the Church as well out of the Prophets, as the Epiſtles and Goſpels. And ſo in the Relation of the Conference between the Catholicks and Arians in the Time of Gundobadus King of Burgundy, which we have had Occaſion to mention before [*] out of the ſame learned Writer, it is ſaid, that in the Vigil held the Night before the Conference, four Leſſons were read, one out of Moſes, another out of the Prophet Eſaias, a third out of the Goſpel, and the laſt out of the Epiſtles. And in the old Lectionarium Gallicanum, publiſhed by Mabillon, there is always a Leſſon out of the Old Teſtament before the Epiſtle and Goſpel: And on the Sabbatum ſanctum, or Saturday before Eaſter [p], there are no leſs than Twelve Leſſons appointed out of Geneſis, Exodus, Joſhua, Iſaiah, Ezekiel, Daniel and Jonah, beſide the Epiſtle and Goſpel which follow after. It farther appears from the Canons of the Council of Laodicea [q] and the third Council of Carthage [r], and St. Cyril's Catechetical Diſcourſes [s], that all the Books of the Old Teſtament were then read in the Church, as well as the New. For they give us Catalogues of what Books might, or might not be read in the Church, among which all the Books of the Old Teſtament are ſpecified as ſuch as were then actually read in the publick Service; and Cyril allows his Catechumens to read no other Books in private but the Books of the Old and New Teſtament, which he thought they might ſafely read, becauſe they were both publickly read in the Church.

[a] Stilling. Orig. Britan. chap. 4. p. 215. [b] Strabo de Reb. Eccl. cap. 12. [c] Cassian. Instit. lib. 2. cap. 6. [d] Constit. lib. 2. cap. 57. [e] Idem. lib. 2. cap. 59. [f] Idem lib. 5. cap. 19. [g] Idem. lib. 8. cap. 5. [h] Justin. Apol. 2. p. 98. [i] Chrys. Hom. 24. in Rom. p. 270. Hom. 3. de David & Saul. T. 2. p. 1037. [k] Basil. Hom. 13. de Bapt. T. 1. p. 409. [l] Basil. Hom. 21. in Lacizis. p. 460. [m] Maxim. Taurin. Hom. 4. in Epiphan. [n] Aug. Hom. 237. de Temp. p. 384.

SECT. III. Proper Leſſons for certain Times and Feſtivals.

THE next Obſervation to be made is, upon their Method of reading the Scriptures, which ſeems always to be done by ſome Rule, though this might vary in different Churches. St. Auſtin tells us [t] there were ſome Leſſons ſo fixed and appropriated to certain Times and Seaſons, that no others might be read in their Stead. And he particularly inſtances in the Feſtival of Eaſter, when for four Days ſucceſſively the Hiſtory of Chriſt's Reſurrection [u] was read out of the four Goſpels. On the Day of his Paſſion [x] they read the Hiſtory of his Sufferings out of St. Matthew's Goſpel only. And all the Time between Eaſter and Pentecoſt [y] he ſays, they read the Acts of the Apoſtles. This laſt Particular is frequently mentioned by St. Chryſoſtom, who has a whole Sermon to give an Account of the Reaſons of it. There he takes Notice of many Things together relating to this Matter of Reading the Leſſons by Rule and Order. Firſt he tells us [z] how by the Appointment of the Church, on the Day of our Saviour's Paſſion all ſuch Scriptures were read, as had any Relation to the Croſs; then how on the great Sabbath, or Saturday before Eaſter, they read all ſuch Portions of Scripture as contained the Hiſtory of his being betrayed, crucified, dead and buried. He adds alſo [a], that on Eaſter Day they read ſuch Paſſages as gave an Account of his Reſurrection; and on every Feſtival the Things that related to that Feſtival. But it ſeemed a Difficulty, why then the Acts of the Apoſtles, which contain the Hiſtory of their Miracles done after Pentecoſt, ſhould not rather be read after Pentecoſt, than before it? To this he anſwers, that the Miracles of the Apoſtles, contained in that Book, were the great Demonſtration of our Saviour's Reſurrection: and therefore the Church appointed that Book to be read always between Eaſter and Pentecoſt, immediately after our Saviour's Reſurrection, to give Men the Evidences and Proofs of that holy Myſtery, which was the Completion of their Redemption. So that though the Leſſons for other Feſtivals related the Things that were done at thoſe Feſtivals, yet for a particular Reaſon the Acts of the Apoſtles, which contained the Hiſtory of Things done after Pentecoſt, were read before Pentecoſt, becauſe they were more proper for the Time immediately following our Saviour's Reſurrection. And upon this Account it became a general Rule over the whole Church to read the Acts at this Time, as not only Chryſoſtom teſtifies here, but in many other Places of his Writings. In his Homily upon thoſe Words, Saul yet breathing out Threatnings and Slaughter againſt the Diſciples, Acts ix. he gives this Reaſon why he could not preach in order upon every [o] Cæſar. Arelat. De non recedendo ab Eccleſia, &c. ap. Mabillon de Liturg. Gallic. lib. 1. cap. 4. n. 4. Non tunc fiunt Miſſæ, quando divinæ Lectiones in Eccleſia recitantur, ſed quando munera offeruntur, & Corpus vel Sanguis Domini conſecratur: Nam Lectiones, ſive Propheticas, ſive Apoſtolicas, ſive Evangelicas, etiam in domibus veſtris aut ipſi legere, aut alios legentes audire poteſtis; Conſecrationem vero Corporis & Sanguinis Domini non alibi, niſi in Domo Dei, audire vel videre poteritis [*] Book XIV. Chap i. n. 2. [p] Lectionar. Gallican. ap. Mabillon. de Liturg. Gallic. lib. 2. p. 138. [q] Conc. Laodic. Can. 59, & 60. [r] Conc. Carth. 3. Can. 47. [s] Cyril Catech. 4. n. 22. p. 67. [t] Aug. Expoſ. in 1 Joan. in Præfat. T. 9. p. 235. Interpoſita eſt ſolennitas ſanctorum dierum, quibus certas ex Evangelio Lectiones oportet in Eccleſia recitari, quæ ita ſunt Annuæ, ut aliæ eſſe non poſſint. [u] Vid. Aug. Serm. 139, 140, 141, 144, 148. de Tempore. Item Chryſ. Hom. 88. in Mat. p. 731. [x] Aug. Serm. 144. de Tempore. p. 320. [y] Aug Tract. 6. in Joan. Tom. 9. p. 24. & Hom. 83. de Diverſis. [z] Chryſ. Hom. 63. Cur in Pentecoſte Acta legantur. T. 5. p. 949. [a] Chryſ. ibid. p. 951.

part

Part of that Book [b], becauſe the Law of the Church commanded it to be laid aſide after Pentecoſt, and the Reading of it to conclude with the End of the preſent Feſtival. In another Place [c] he ſays, it was appointed by Law to be read on that Feſtival, and not uſually read in any other Part of the Year. And in another Place [d] he gives this Reaſon why he broke off his Sermons upon Geneſis in the Paſſion Week, becauſe the Intervention of other Solemnities obliged him to preach then upon other Subjects, agreeable to what was read in the Church, as againſt the Traitor Judas, and upon the Paſſion, and our Saviour's Reſurrection, at which Time he took in hand the Acts of the Apoſtles, and preached upon them from Eaſter to Pentecoſt. Caſſian [e] ſays, the ſame Order was obſerved among the Egyptians: And it appears from the antient Lectionarium Gallicanum, that it was ſo in the French Churches: For there almoſt on every Day between Eaſter and Pentecoſt, except the Rogation Days, and ſome few others, two Leſſons are ordered to be read out of the Apocalyps and the Acts of the Apoſtles. Whence it may be concluded farther, that the Reading of the Apocalyps was alſo in a great meaſure appropriated to this Seaſon in the Gallican Church. And ſo it was in the Spaniſh Churches by an Order of the fourth Council of Toledo, which enjoyns the Reading of it [f] in this Interval under Pain of Excommunication. In Lent they uſually read the Book of Geneſis, as is plain from Chryſoſtom, whoſe famous Homilies called ἀνδριάντες, (becauſe they are about the Statues of the Emperor, which the People of Antioch had ſeditiouſly thrown down,) were preached in Lent: And in one of theſe [g] he ſays, he would preach upon the Book that had been read that Day, which was the Book of Geneſis; and the firſt Words, In the Beginning God created Heaven and Earth, were the Subject of his Diſcourſe. In another Sermon [h] preached upon the ſame Text in the Beginning of Lent, he ſays, the Words had been read in the Leſſon that Day. And for this very Reaſon he preached two whole Lents upon the Book of Geneſis, becauſe it was then read of courſe in the Church. For the thirty two firſt of thoſe Homilies were preached at Conſtantinople in Lent in the third Year after he was made Biſhop, an. 400, or 401; but the Feſtivals of the Paſſion, and Eaſter, and Pentecoſt coming on, this Subject was interrupted, and he preached upon other Subjects, as he himſelf [i] tells us, ſuitable to thoſe Occaſions. Afterward he reſumed his former Work, and finiſhed his Comment upon Geneſis in thirty two Sermons more in the Year enſuing. Which makes it plain, that Geneſis was then read in Lent, as the Acts were in Pentecoſt, and that Chryſoſtom conformed his Diſcourſes according to the Order of Reading then eſtabliſhed in the Church. It appears farther from St. Ambroſe, that the Book of Job and Jonah were both read in the Paſſion Week. For ſpeaking of a Sermon which he made to the People at this Time, he ſays [k], Ye have heard, Children, the Book of Job read, which is in Courſe appointed to be read at this Time. And [l] again, ſays he, the Book of Jonah was read. That is, as Pagi [m] critically remarks, on the third Day of the Paſſion Week. And that this was an antient Rule of the Church, appears from Origen's Comment upon Job, which St. Jerom [n] ſays, St. Hilary tranſlated into Latin. For there [o] he not only tells us, that the Book of Job was read in the Church in Paſſion Week, but alſo gives us the Reaſon of it, becauſe it was a Time of Faſting and Abſtinence, a Time in which they that faſted and abſtained, had as it were a ſort of Fellow-Suffering with admirable Job, a Time in which Men by Faſting and Abſtinence followed after the Paſſion of Chriſt Jeſus our Lord: And becauſe the Paſſion of Job was in a great meaſure a Type and Example of the Paſſion and Reſurrection of Chriſt, therefore the Hiſtory of Job's Paſſion was with good Reaſon read and meditated upon in theſe Days of Paſſion, theſe Days of Sanctification, theſe Days of Faſting. Thus far Origen. But in the [p] Lectionarium Gallicanum there is no mention of the Book of Job, but only of Jonah on the Sabbatum magnum, or Saturday before Eaſter Day. [q] St. Jerom ſeems to ſay, that the Prophet Hoſea was alſo read on the Vigil of our Saviour's Paſſion. For he mentions a long Diſcourſe of Pierius, which he had read, made by that Martyr on the Beginning of that Book, in an elegant but extemporary Style, on the Vigil before the Paſſion. St. Chryſoſtom [r] in one of his Homilies upon the Goſpel of St. John, which he was then expounding, adviſes his Auditors to read at Home in the Week-days before, ſuch Portions of the Goſpel as they knew were to be read and expounded on the Lord's Day following in the Church. Which implies ſome certain Rule and Order. So that though we have not any compleat Lectionarium, or Kalendar of Leſſons now remaining, yet we are ſure their Reading of Scripture was ſome Way methodized and brought under Rule, eſpecially for the greater Solemni-

[b] Chryſ. Hom. 47. tom. 5. p. 637. ἅπαξ πατέρων ὁ νόμος κελεύει μετὰ τὴν πεντηκοστὴν ἀποτίθεσθαι τὸ βιβλίον, &c.
[c] Hom. 48. In Inſcriptionem Altaris. Act. 17. t. 5. p. 650. τῇ ἑορτῇ ταύτῃ νενομοθέτηται αὐτὴ ἀναγινώσκεσθαι. &c.
[d] Hom. 33. in Gen. p. 478. [e] Caſſian. Inſtit. lib. 2. cap. 6. [f] Conc. Tolet. 4. can. 16. Si quis Apocalypſin à Paſcha uſque ad Pentecoſten Miſſarum tempore in Eccleſia non prædicaverit, Excommunicationis ſententiam habebit.
[g] Chryſ. Hom. 7. ad Pop. Antioch. t. 1. p. 107. τὸ σήμερον ἡμῖν ἀναγνωσθὲν μεταχειρίσομαι βιβλίον. [h] Serm. 1. in Gen. 1. t. 2. p. 880. ταῦτα γὰρ ἡμῖν ἀνεγνώσθη σήμερον. Vid. Chryſ. Hom. 6. de Pœnitentia in Edict. Latinis.
[i] Chryſ. Hom. 33. in Gen. p. 480. Vid. Severiani Gabalenſis Hom. 1 in Gen. ap. Combefiſ. Auctar. Noviſſ. p. 214. Et Aug. Serm. 71. de Temp. [k] Ambroſ. Ep. 33. ad Marcellin. Soror. p. 160. Audiſtis, Filii, librum legi Job, qui ſolenni & munere eſt decurſus & Tempore. [l] Ibid. p. 162. Sequenti die lectus eſt de more Liber Jonæ. [m] Pagi Critic. in Baron. an. 387. n. 4. [n] Hieron. cont. Vigilant.
[o] Origen in Job. lib. 1. p. 366. In conventu Eccleſiæ in diebus ſanctis legitur Paſſio Job, in diebus Jejunii, in diebus Abſtinentiæ, &c. [p] Lectionar. Gallic. ap. Mabillon. de Liturg. Gallic. p. 139. [q] Hieron. Procem. in Hoſea ad Pammach. Pierii quoque legi Tractatum longiſſimum, quem in exordio hujus Prophetæ die Vigiliarum Dominicæ Paſſionis extemporali & diſerto Sermone profudit. [r] Chryſ. Hom. 10. in Joan. al. 11. edit. Savil. p. 597.

ties and Festivals of the Church. The first Kalendar of this Kind is thought by some to be Hippolytus's Canon Paschalis, which, as I have shewed before [*], no less Men than Scaliger and Gothofred take to be a Rule appointing Lessons proper for the Festivals. But Bucherius and others give another Account of it, which leaves the Matter uncertain. There goes also under the Name of St. Jerom, a Book called his Comes or Lectionarium; but Criticks of the best Rank [s] reckon this a Counterfeit, and the Work of a much later Writer, because it mentions Lessons out of the Prophets and Old Testament, whereas in St. Jerom's Time, as we have noted before, there were no Lessons read besides Epistles and Gospels in the Church of Rome. However, some Time after there were several Books of this kind composed for the use of the French Churches. Sidonius Apollinaris [t] says, Claudianus Mamercus made one for the Church of Vienna, An. 450. And Gennadius [u] says, Musæus made another for the Church of Marseilles about the Year 458. But both these are now lost, and the oldest of this kind is the Lectionarium Gallicanum, which Mabillon lately published from a Manuscript, which he judges by the Hand to be above a thousand Years old, but wrote after the Time of Gregory the Great, because it mentions the Festival of Genouefa [x], who is supposed to live after his Time. But though we have no more antient Kalendar now remaining, yet the Authorities alledged before do indisputably evince the Thing it self, that the Lessons of Scripture were generally appropriated to Times and Seasons, according as the Festivals required: And for the rest, they were either read in order as they lie in the Bible, as Mabillon [y] shews from the Rules of Cæsarius and Aurelian; or else were arbitrarily appointed by the Bishops at Discretion, as sometimes particular Psalms were upon emergent Occasions, according to the Observation that has been made [†] in speaking of that Subject. St. Austin says expresly [z], he sometimes ordered a Lesson to be read agreeable to the Subject of the Psalm upon which he was preaching. And Ferrarius [a] gives several other Instances both out of St. Austin [b] and Chrysologus [c], to the same Purpose, which need not here be repeated.

SECT. IV. By whom the Scriptures were anciently read in the Church.

THE next Question may be concerning the Persons by whom the Scriptures were publickly read in the Church. Which is a Question that has been in some measure answered before, in speaking of the Order of Readers [‡]: Where I shewed, that for the two first Centuries, before the Order of Readers was instituted, it is probable the Scriptures were read by the Deacons, or else in Imitation of the Jewish Church, by such as the Bishop or President for that Time appointed. But in the Time of St. Cyprian it was the peculiar Office of the Readers, which were become an inferior Order of the Clergy, to read all the Lessons of Scripture, and even the Gospel, as well as other Parts, as appears from several [d] of Cyprian's Epistles. Here I must add, that in After-ages the Reading of the Gospel was in some Churches confined to the Office of the Deacons and Presbyters. For so the Author of the Constitutions [e] words it, After the other Lessons are read by the Readers, let a Deacon or a Presbyter read the Gospels. And so St. Jerom reminds Sabinianus [f] the Deacon, how he had read the Gospels in the Church. And Socrates [g] notes the same of Sabbatius, a Presbyter in the Novatian Church. Sozomen says [h], at Alexandria the Gospel was read only by the Archdeacon; in other Places by the Deacons; in others only by the Presbyters; and on the greater Festivals by the Bishop, as at Constantinople on Easter Day. In the French Churches it was the ordinary Office of Deacons, as appears from that Canon of the Council of Vaison, which [i] says, that if the Presbyter was sick, the Deacon might read an Homily, giving this Reason for it, that they who were thought worthy to read the Gospels of Christ, were not unworthy to read the Expositions of the Holy Fathers. Yet in the Spanish Churches the antient Custom continued, that the Readers read the Gospel as well as other Lessons. Which may be collected from that Canon of the first Council of Toledo [k] which allows no one that had done publick Penance, ever to be ordained, unless it were to the Office of a Reader, in case of great Necessity, and then he should read neither the Epistle nor the Gospel. Which implies, that other Readers who were never under Penance, read both the Gospel and all other Lessons, as Albaspinæus [l] in his Notes rightly observes upon it.

SECT. V. Whether the Epistle and Gospel were read twice, first to the Catechumens and then to the Faithful at the Altar.

BUT in one Thing that Learned Person seems to be mistaken, when he supposes that [m] Reading of the Gospel to have been in the Communion-Service. For antiently the Scriptures, and even the Goſpel it ſelf, were only read in the Service of the Catechumens. Cardinal Bona [n] indeed ſays, the antient Cuſtom was to read the Goſpel only to the Faithful, and that the Council of Orange in France [o], and the Council of Valentia in Spain [p], were the firſt that ordered it otherwiſe. But nothing is plainer, than that the Reading of the Goſpel was always before the Sermon, and the Sermon was always before the Communion-Service began, in the Preſence of the Catechumens, and before their Diſmiſſion ordinarily, being deſigned chiefly for their Inſtruction. Therefore though ſome ill Cuſtom might have crept into the Churches of France and Spain, excluding the Catechumens from hearing the Goſpel and the Sermon, which thoſe Councils endeavoured to correct; yet that is far from proving it to be the antient Cuſtom, to confine the Hearing of the Goſpel to the Faithful only: And a Man cannot look into the Homilies of St. Auſtin or St. Chryſoſtom, but he will find this Miſtake every where confuted. For they always ſpeak of reading the Goſpel before the Homily, and the Homily made in the Preſence of the Catechumens: And the contrary Suppoſition is merely owing to a common Prejudice and Conceit, that the antient Service was in all Things like the modern, where the Goſpel is twice read, firſt among the Leſſons, and then with the Epiſtle, by itſelf in the Communion-Service; whereas antiently they were both read in the ordinary Courſe of the Leſſons, in that Part of the Service only, which was properly called the Service of the Catechumens.

[*] Book XIII. chap. v. n. 6. [s] Vid. Stilling. Orig. Britan. chap. 4. p. 229. & Cave Hist. Literar. Vol. 1. p. 225. [t] Sidon. lib. 4. Ep. 11. Hic solennibus annuis paravit, quæ quo tempore lecta convenirent. [u] Gennad. de Scriptor. cap. 79. Excerpsit de Scripturis Lectiones totius anni Festivis diebus aptas; Responsoria Psalmorum Capitula Temporibus & Lectionibus congruentia. [x] Lectionar. Gallic. ap. Mabil. p. 114. [y] Mabil. de Cursu Gallicano. p. 406. [†] Book XIV. chap. i. n. 6. [z] Aug. in Psal. 90. Ser. 2. p. 412. Propterea fecimus ipsam Lectionem Evangelii recitari, ubi Dominus tentatus est, per ea verba Psalmi quæ hic audistis. [a] Ferrar. Ritu Concionum. lib. 1. cap. 17. [b] Aug Ser. 23. de Verbis Domini. Ser. 121. de Diversi. Tract. 12. in Joan. [c] Chrysolog. Ser. 66, & 118. [‡] Book III. Chap. v. [d] Cypr. Ep. 34. al. 39. Ep. 38. [e] Constit. lib. 2. cap. 57. [f] Hieron. Ep. 48. ad Sabinian. Evangelium Christi quasi Diaconus lectitabas. [g] Socrat. lib. 7. cap. 5. [h] Sozom. lib. 7. cap. 19. [i] Conc. Vasens. 2. Can. 2. Si enim digni sunt Diaconi, quæ Christus in Evangelio locutus est, legere, quare indigni judicentur sanctorum Patrum Expositiones publice recitare? [k] Conc. Tolet. 1. Can. 2. Pœnitentes non admittantur ad Clerum, nisi tantum si necessitas aut usus exegerit, & tunc inter Lectores deputentur, ita ut Evangelia aut Apostolum non legant. Vid. Can. 4. ibid. [l] Albaspin. Not. in Conc. Tol. 1. Can. 2. Liquido ex his constat Lectores non Evangelium tantum, sed & Lectiones pronunciasse. [m] Albaspin. Not. in Can. 4. Conc. Carthag. 3.

SECT. VI.

The Solemnity and Ceremonies of Reading the Leſſons. Where firſt of the Salutation, Pax vobis, before Reading.

THE next Thing worthy our Obſervation is the Solemnity and Ceremony, with which the Ancients appointed the Scriptures to be read. The Reader, before he began to read, was commonly uſed to ſay, Pax vobis, Peace be with you, which was the uſual Form of Salutation at the Entrance of all Offices in the Church. St. Cyprian [q] plainly alludes to this, when ſpeaking of a new Reader whom he had ordained to the Office the Lord's Day before, he ſays, Auſpicatus eſt Pacem, dum dedicat Lectionem, he began to uſe the Salutation, Peace be with you, when he firſt began to read. I know none of the Commentators that take Notice of this Cuſtom in Cyprian, or make any Remark upon the Phraſe: But this is evidently the Senſe of it, and ſo the learned Albaſpinæus [r] underſtands it. This Cuſtom ſeems to have continued in Africk, till the third Council of Carthage [†] made an Order to the contrary, that the Readers ſhould no longer ſalute the People. This Form of Salutation, Peace be with you, to which the People uſually anſwered, And with thy Spirit, was commonly the Office of a Biſhop or Presbyter or Deacon in the Performance of their ſeveral Functions in the Church, as is noted by Chryſoſtom [s] in many Places: And therefore this Council took away this Power from the Readers, and put it into the Hands of the Deacons or the other ſuperior Miniſters of the Church. So that as the Reader had uſed to ſay before Reading, Peace be with you, this Canon only ordered that it ſhould be ſaid by ſome other Miniſter. For that it was uſed either by the Reader, or ſome other Miniſter before he began to read, appears from St. Auſtin, who writing againſt the Donatiſts, ſays [t], nothing could be more perverſe than their own Practice, who before the Reader began to read the Epiſtle, ſaid to him, Peace be with thee, and yet ſeparated from the Peace of thoſe Churches to which the Epiſtles were written.

SECT. VII.

This Salutation ſometimes uſed by the Biſhop immediately before the Reader began to read.

ST. Auſtin in another Place mentions the Biſhop's uſing this Form of Salutation as ſoon as he came into the Church, immediately before the Reader began to read the Leſſons, which in Africk in thoſe Days was the firſt Part of the Service, with a Reſponſory Pſalm between every Leſſon. I went to Church, ſays he [u], I ſaluted the People, that is, ſaid Peace be unto you, and then Silence being made, the ſolemn Leſſons of the Holy Scriptures were read in Order. This Cuſtom of ſaluting the People in this Form is alſo mentioned by Chryſoſtom in ſeveral Places. When we are come [x] into the Church, ſays he, we ſay immediately, Peace be unto you, according to this Law, and ye anſwer, And with thy Spirit. Again [y], the Biſhop at his Entrance into the Church ſays always, Peace be unto you, as a proper Salutation when he comes into his Father's Houſe. And in another Place [z], When the Biſhop enters the Church, he immediately ſays, Peace be with you all: When he begins his Sermon, he ſays again, Peace be with you all, &c. Now conſidering that this was the common Salutation at the Beginning of all Offices, and that the Scriptures began to be read as ſoon as the Biſhop came into the Church, it is plain that ſuch a Form of Salutation was always uſed by one or other before the Reading of the Scriptures.

[n] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 2. cap. 7. n. 1. [o] Conc. Arauſican. 1. Can. 18. [p] Conc. Valentin. Can. 1.
[q] Cypr. Ep. 33. al. 38. ad Cler. Carthag. p. 75. [r] Albaſpin. Not. in Conc. Carthag. 3. can. 4. [†] Conc. Carth. 3. can. 4. Ut Lectores Populum non ſalutent. [s] Chryſ. Hom. 18. in 2 Cor. p. 873. Hom. 3. in Coloſ. p. 1337, & 1338.
[t] Aug. Ep. 165. Quid autem perverſius & inſanius, quam Lectoribus eaſdem Epiſtolas legentibus dicere, Pax tecum, & ab earum Eccleſiarum Pace ſeparare, quibus ipſæ Epiſtolæ ſcriptæ ſunt.
[u] Aug. de Civ. Dei. lib. 22. cap. 8. p. 1489. Procedimus ad populum, plena erat Eccleſia, perſonabat vocibus gaudiorum: Deo gratias, Deo Laudes.—— Salutavi populum.—— Facto tandem ſilentio, Scripturarum divinarum ſunt lecta ſolennia. [x] Chryſ. Hom. 33. in Mat. p. 318. κοινὴ πᾶσι τὴν εἰρήνην ἐπιλέγομεν εἰσιόντες εὐθέως κατὰ τὸν νόμον ἐκεῖνον.
[y] Chryſ. Hom. 36. in 1 Cor. p. 653. [z] Chryſ. Hom. 3. in Coloſ. p. 1338.

ST.

SECT. VIII. The Deacon injoined Silence, before the Reader began, and required Attention: As the Reader also did before every Lesson, saying, Thus saith the Lord.

ST. Chrysostom takes Notice of two other Customs relating to this Matter, as introductory to the reading and hearing the Scriptures with greater Advantage: That is, the Deacons enjoining Silence and requiring Attention, and the Reader himself after the naming any Lesson, saying, Thus saith the Lord. The Deacon, says he, who is the common Minister of the Church, first stands up [a] and cries with a loud Voice, προσχωμεν, Let us give Attention: This he repeats several times, and after that the Reader names the Prophet, Isaiah suppose, or any other; and before he begins to read, he also cries aloud, τάδε λέγει κύριος, Thus saith the Lord. So again in another Place [b], When the Reader rises up and says, Thus saith the Lord: and the Deacon stands up, and commands all Men to keep Silence; he does not say this to honour the Reader, but God who speaks to all by him. This enjoining of Silence is spoken of by St. Ambrose [c] and others: But it differed from another Act of the Deacons under the same Name, Silentium indicere, which was calling upon the People to fall to their private Prayers, of which we shall have Occasion to say more in the next Book, Chap. i.

SECT. IX. At the naming of the Prophet or Epistle, the People in some Places said Deo gratias, and Amen, at the End of it.

MABILLON [d] observes, That at the naming of the Lessons out of the Prophets or Epistles the People sometimes said, Deo Gratias, Thanks be to God, as it is in the Mozarabick Liturgy. But we have little Notice of this elsewhere. Only St. Austin says, it was a very common Phrase among the Monks [e] when they met a Brother-Christian, to say, Deo Gratias, Thanks be to God; for which the Circumcellions, or Agonistici, as they called themselves, among the Donatists, were wont to insult them, though they themselves often used to say, Deo Laudes, which in their Mouth was more to be dreaded than the roaring of a Lion. Is appears also from the Acts of Eradius his Election to be his Successor, that it was an usual Acclamation upon many other Occasions: For as soon as he had nominated Eradius to be his Successor, the People cried out [f] for a long Time together, Deo Gratias, Christo Laudes, Thanks be to God, Praise be to Christ. What therefore was so common upon other Occasions, might very probably be said by way of Acclamation at the naming of the Lessons of the Holy Scriptures. Grotius [g] says it was also customary at the End of the Epistle for the People to answer Amen: And that hence it was, that at the End of all St. Paul's Epistles the Word, Amen, was added by the Church. I know not upon what Grounds he asserts this, and therefore I shall let it rest upon the Authority of that learned Man, without affirming or denying his Assertion.

SECT. X. At the reading of the Gospel all stood up, and said in some Places, Glory be to Thee, O Lord.

AT the reading of the Gospel it was a general Custom for all the People to stand up: And some of the middle Age Ritualists take Notice of their saying, Glory be to Thee, O Lord, at the naming of it. The Author of the Homily de Circo vel Hippodromo [h] under the Name of St. Chrysostom, says, When the Deacon goes about to read the Gospel, we all presently rise up, and say, Glory be to Thee, O Lord. But as that Homily is known to be none of Chrysostom's, we cannot certainly say, it was the Custom in his Days. But the Custom of rising up at the reading of the Gospel is certainly as old as Chrysostom: For he speaks of it in one of his Homilies [i] on St. Matthew. If the Letters of a King are read in the Theatre with great Silence: Much more ought we to compose our selves, and stand up with attentive Ears, when the Letters not of an earthly King, but of the Lord of Angels are read to us.

The Author of the Constitutions [k] mentions the same: When the Gospel is read, let the Presbyters and Deacons and all the People stand with profound Silence. And so Isidore of Pelusium [l], When the true Shepherd appears at the opening of the Holy Gospels, then the Bishop himself rises up and lays aside his Pastoral Habit or Authority, signifying thereby, that then the Lord himself, the Author of the Pastoral Function, his God and his Master, is present. This was every where observed, except at Alexandria, where it is noted by Sozomen [m] as a singular Thing in that Church, That the Bishop did not use to rise up, when the Gospel was read. And Cassian [n] observes it as no less singular in the Monks of Egypt, that excepting the Reader who always stood up, the rest sat upon low Seats both when the Psalms and the Lessons out of the Old or New Testament were reading. Which was only indulged them because of their excessive Watchings and Fastings and Labours. In other Places sitting at the Gospel was reckoned a Corruption and Abuse: Insomuch that Philostorgius [o] tells us, That Theophilus the Arian Bishop, who went to the Indies, corrected it as an Indecency that had crept in there against the Rules of the Church. And Anastasius did the same at Rome, as is said in his Life by the Author [p] of the Pontifical. For he made a Decree that as often as the Holy Goſpels were read, the Prieſts ſhould not ſit, but ſtand in a bowing Poſture. In Africk the general Cuſtom was, not only to ſtand at the Goſpel, but at all the other Leſſons out of Scripture: For they gave equal Honour to every Part of the Word of God, inſomuch as that their Sermons and Homilies and whatever was rehearſed in the Church, was heard ſtanding, as we ſhall ſee more in the next Chapter. Here it will be ſufficient to obſerve, that Cyprian's Readers not only ſtood up to read, but that all the People ſtood [q] about them when they read the Scriptures. And in St. Auſtin's Time the Cuſtom was the ſame: For he ſays [r] the longeſt Leſſons were then heard by all Sorts and Sexes ſtanding, except only ſuch as through ſome Infirmity in their Feet or Weakneſs of Body were diſabled, who upon that Account were indulged ſitting, but no others whatſoever. Bona [s] thinks there was no certain Anſwer made, when the Goſpel was ended. For ſome ſaid only, Amen, as it is in the Mozarabick Liturgy and the Rule of St. Benedict. Which Alexander Hales interprets the ſame as ſaying, God grant we may perſevere in the Doctrine of the Goſpel. Others ſaid, Deo Gratias, Thanks be to God; and others Laus tibi Chriſte, Praiſe be to Thee, O Chriſt. But all this is ſaid only out of the Middle-age Writers, whilſt there is a perfect Silence as to this Matter in the more antient Writers of the Church.

[a] Chrys. Hom. 19. in Act. Apost. [b] Chrys. Hom. 3. in 2 Thes. [c] Ambros. Præfat. in Psalmos. Quantum laboratur in Ecclesia ut fiat silentium, cum lectiones leguntur, &c. Vid. Aug. de Civ. Dei, lib. 22. c. 8. [d] Mabil. de Liturg. Gallic. lib. 1. cap. 2. n. 10. [e] Aug. in Psal. 132. p. 630. A quibus plus timetur, Deo Laudes, quam fremitus leonis, hi etiam insultare nobis audent, quia fratres, cum vident homines, Deo gratias, dicunt. [f] Aug. Ep. 110. de Actis Eradii. A populo acclamatum est trigesies sexies; Deo gratias, Christo Laudes. [g] Grot. Annot. in Philem. ver. 25. [h] Chrys. Hom. 52. de Circo. tom. 6. p. 491. [i] Chrys. Hom. 1. in Mat. p. 11. [k] Constit. lib. 2. cap. 57. [l] Isidor. Pelus. lib. 1. Ep. 136. [m] Sozom. lib. 7. cap. 19. [n] Cassian. Instit. lib. 2. cap. 12. [o] Philostorg. lib. 3. c. 5. [p] Pontifical. Vit. Anastas. Hic constituit, ut quotiescunque sancta Evangelia recitarentur, sacerdotes non sederent, sed curvi starent.

SECT. XI. Lights carried before the Goſpel in the Eaſtern Churches.

THERE was one Ceremony more antient, which St. Jerom makes peculiar to the Eaſtern Churches, which was the carrying Lights before the Goſpel when it was to be read. He ſays [t], they had no ſuch Cuſtom in the Weſtern Church, either as burning Candles by Day at the Monuments of the Martyrs (as Vigilantius falſely accuſed them); nor at any other Time, ſave only when they met in the Night, to give Light to their Aſſemblies: But in the Eaſtern Church it was otherwiſe: For without any Regard to the Relicks of the Martyrs, whenever the Goſpel was read, they lighted Candles, partly to demonſtrate their Joy for the good News which the Goſpel brought, and partly by a corporeal Symbol to repreſent that Light of which the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks, Thy Word is a Lamp to my Feet, and a Light unto my Paths. I know no other Author beſide St. Jerom, that mentions this, and as far as his Authority will prevail, it may be credited, and no farther. Dr. Cave [u] judges, it might not be much elder than his Time; however it was, it is no Argument to patronize the burning of Lamps and Wax-Candles, without the ſame Reaſon, in Churches at Noon-day.

SECT. XII. Three or four Leſſons ſometimes read out of the Goſpels on the ſame Day.

IT is farther obſervable, That in ſome Churches, upon ſome ſolemn Occaſions, they had three or four Leſſons read out of the Goſpels on the ſame Day. St. Auſtin [x] ſays, he would have had four Leſſons read out of the four Goſpels on the Day of our Saviour's Paſſion; but the People were diſturbed at it, as what they had not been accuſtomed to, ſo he was forced to wave it. But the Cuſtom prevailed in the French Churches. For in the old Lectionarium Gallicanum publiſhed by Mabillon, the Leſſons of ſeveral Feſtivals are thus appointed: On the Feaſt of Epiphany, there is one Leſſon out of St. Matthew ii. for Morning Service, and three more out of Matthew, Luke and John, for the Communion-Service. So on the Paraſceve or Day of our Saviour's Paſſion, there is one Leſſon of the Goſpel for Morning Service, another for the ſecond, another for the third, another for the ſixth, another for the ninth Hours [y] of Prayer, collected out of the four Goſpels by way of Harmony or Catena. Whence we may obſerve, that the old Gallican Liturgy (from whence our Engliſh Service is thought chiefly to be derived, and not from the Roman [*], by learned Men) had diſtinct Offices for Morning and Communion-Service, and diſtinct Goſpels for each Service on ſolemn Days, as ours now has for all the Feſtivals, which probably were deſigned at firſt for diſtinct Offices, tho' they are now commonly read together in the greateſt Part of our Churches.

SECT. XIII. Of longer and ſhorter Leſſons, and their diſtinct Uſe, according to Durantus.

THERE is another Diſtinction made by ſome between the longer and ſhorter Leſſons. The longer Leſſons are ſaid [z] by Durantus to be uſed at the long Nocturnal or Antelucan Service, and the leſſer at the other Canonical Hours of Prayer. So that this Diſtinction could have no Place till the Canonical Hours were ſettled in the Church. Which was not till the fourth or fifth Century, as has been ſhewed in another [†] Place. Radulphus Tungrenſis [a], whom Durantus cites, ſpeaks ſomewhat of this Diſtinction in his Time, and ſays the leſſer ſort of Leſſons [q] Cypr. Ep. 34. al. 39. p. 78. In loco altiore conſtitui oportet, ubi ab omni populo circumſtante conſpecti, &c. [r] Aug. Hom. 26. ex 50. t. 10. p. 174. Quando Paſſiones prolixæ aut certe aliquæ Lectiones longiores leguntur, qui ſtare non poſſunt, humiliter & cum ſilentio ſedentes, attentis auribus audiant quæ leguntur, &c. Note that this Homily is by Mabillon and the Benedictins in their New Edition aſcribed to Cæſarius Arelatenſis: If it be his, it proves the Cuſtom of ſtanding to hear the Leſſons, to have been according to the Uſage of the French Churches. [s] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 2. cap. 7. n. 4. [t] Hieron. cont. Vigilant. cap. 3. Cereos autem non clara luce accendimus, ſicut fruſtra calumniaris, ſed ut noctis tenebras hoc ſolatio temperemus——— Abſque Martyrum reliquiis per totas Orientis Eccleſias, quum legendum eſt Evangelium, accenduntur Luminaria jam ſole rutilante, non utique ad fugandas tenebras, ſed ad ſignum lætitiæ demonſtrandum, &c. [u] Cave Prim. Chriſt. lib. 1. c. 7. p. 203. [x] Aug. Serm. 144. de Tempore. p. 320. [y] Vid. Mabillon. de Liturg. Gallic. p. 116, & 134. [*] Vid. Stillingfleet. Orig. Britan. chap. 4. [z] Durant. de Ritib. lib. 3. cap. 18. n. 4, & 5. [†] Book XIII. Chap. ix. n. 8. [a] Radulph. de Canon. Obſervant. Propoſ. 8, & 13.

were

were called vulgarly Capitula, Chapters, and designed for the Praise of God. Which makes it more probable, that these lesser Lessons were no other than the Psalms, or Antiphonal Hymns collected out of the Psalms for the Service of the several Hours of Devotion. Which are expressly called Capitella de Psalmis, Chapters out of the Psalms, by the Council of Agde [b], and were the same as Antiphonal Hymns, collected out of the Psalms, and to be said alternately by way of Responses. So that whatever may be said of the middle Ages, there seems to be no Ground for this Distinction of greater and lesser Lessons in the antient Service, save only as we take the Reading of the Psalms for Lessons of Scripture.

SECT. XIV. What might or might not be read by way of Lessons in the Church.

'TIS true indeed, St. Austin in one of his Homilies [c], which Mabillon and the Benedictins in their late Edition ascribe to Cæsarius Bishop of Arles, speaks of longer and shorter Lessons; but it is not in relation to the long Morning Service, and the shorter Service of the Canonical Hours, but upon a quite different Occasion. For there it is supposed, that beside the Lessons of Scripture, sometimes other Lessons were read out of the Homilies of the Fathers, or the Acts of the Martyrs, which because they were sometimes very prolix, an Indulgence was therefore granted to infirm Persons to sit down to hear them read. And this leads us to a new Observation and farther Remark upon the antient Practice, that in some Churches at least other Things were allowed to be read by way of Lesson and Instruction beside the Canonical Scriptures, such as the Passions of the Martyrs on their proper Festivals, and the Homilies of the Fathers, and the Epistles and Tracts of pious Men, and the Letters Communicatory of one Church to another, with other Things of the like nature. That the Passions of the Martyrs were sometimes read among the Lessons in the Church, appears not only from the foresaid Homily of Cæsarius or St. Austin, but from a Rule made in the third Council [d] of Carthage, which forbids all other Books to be read in the Church besides the Canonical Scripture, except the Passions of the Martyrs on their Anniversary-Days of Commemoration. Eusebius probably collected [e] the Passions of the Martyrs for this very Purpose; as Paulinus Bishop of Nola did after him, which Johannes Diaconus [f] says were used to be read in the Churches. Thus Gelasius [g] says the Acts of Pope Sylvester were read in many of the Roman Churches, though not in the Lateran, because they were Apocryphal and written by an unknown Author. And Mabillon [h] gives several other such Instances out of Avitus and Ferreolus; and in the old Lectionarium Gallicanum, which he published, there are frequently Lessons appointed out of St. Austin and others upon the Festivals of St. Stephen and the Holy Innocents, and Julian the Martyr, on Epiphany, and the Festivals of St. Peter and St. Paul. Whence some learned Men [‡] conjecture not improbably, that such sort of Histories and Passions of the Martyrs had particularly the Name of Legenda, Legends: For though now that Name be commonly taken in a worse Sense, for a fabulous History, because many Lives of Saints and Martyrs were written by the Monks of later Ages in a mere fabulous and romantick Way, yet antiently it had a good Signification, and in its original Use denoted only such Acts and Monuments of the Martyrs as were allowed by Authority to be read in the Church. The curious Reader may find frequent References made by St. Austin in his Homilies [†] to such Lessons read out of the Passions of the Martyrs on their Anniversary-Days in the Church: As also in the Homilies of Pope Leo [||] and others, which it is needless to recite in this Place.

But besides the Passions of the Martyrs and Homilies relating to them, there were also many other pious Books read by way of moral Exhortation in many Churches. Thus Eusebius [i] says the Book called Hermes Pastor, was antiently read in the Church. He says the same of Clemens Romanus's first Epistle [k] to the Corinthians, that it was read in many Churches, both in his own Time, and the Ages before him. And Dionysius Bishop of Corinth [l] says, they read not only that Epistle of Clemens, but another written by Soter Bishop of Rome, which they would always continue to read. Sozomen says [m], The Book called the Revelations of Peter, was read once a Year on Good-Friday in many of the Churches of Palestine. Athanasius [n] testifies the same of the Book called Διδαχὴ Ἀποστόλων, The Doctrine of the Apostles. And St. Jerom [o] says, The Homilies of Ephrem Syrus were in such Honour as to be read in the Church after the Reading of the Scriptures. St. Austin [p] assures us, That the Acts of the Collation of Carthage, were read always in the Church in Lent. And in one of his Epistles [q] he desires of Mar- cellinus Comes, that the Acts of the Tryal of the Donatists, who were convict of the Murder of the Catholicks, might be sent him, to be read in all the Churches of his Diocese. And it is remarkable, that in the Accounts we have of the burning of the Bible in the Diocletian Persecution, there is sometimes mention [r] made of burning the Salutary or Communicatory Letters, which were sent from one Church to another. St. Austin adds farther, that when any one received a signal Mercy from God, the Relation of it was many times [s] read publickly in the Church. Of which he gives several Instances in his own and other Churches of Africk. And St. Chrysostom says, sometimes the Emperor's Letters [t] were read in the Church, and heard with great Attention, which he urges as an Argument, why Men should hear with Reverence the Writings of the Prophets, because they come from God, and their Epistles are from Heaven. Such circular Epistles also as were sent from one Church to another, to notify the Time of keeping Easter (which were called Heortastical or Festival Epistles) were generally published [†] in their Churches: But these I mention not as Lessons, but only hint the Custom incidentally, corresponding to that of our reading Briefs for Charity, or the circular Letters of Bishops, or notifying Holidays, or Bans of Marriage, or Things of the like kind relating to the Publick.

[b] Conc. Agathen. can. 30. in conclusione Matutinarum vel Vespertinarum & Missarum, post Hymnos Capitella de Psalmis dici, &c. [c] Aug. Hom. 26. ex 50. quæ est Hom. 300. in Appendice Edit. Benedictin. [d] Conc. Carth. 3. can. 47. Liceat legi Passiones Martyrum cum anniversarii eorum dies celebrantur. [e] Euseb. lib. 5. cap. 4. Speaks of these Collections. [f] Joan. Diac. Præfat. ad Vit. Gregor. Magni. [g] Gelas. Decret. ap. Crab. conc. tom. 1. p. 992. [h] Mabil. de cursu Gallicano. p. 403, & 407. [‡] Vid. Chamier. Panstratia. tom. 1. de Canon. Script. lib. 1. cap. 4. n. 1. p. 101. [†] Vid. Aug. Serm. 12. de Sanctis. p. 408. Serm. 45. de Diversis. p. 508. Item Serm. 63. p. 553. Serm. 93. p. 564. Serm. 101. 103. 105. 109. de Diversis. [||] Leo. Serm. de Maccabæis. [i] Euseb. lib. 3. cap. 3. Hieron. de Scriptor. cap. 10. [k] Euseb. lib. 3. cap. 16. [l] ap. Euseb. lib. 4. cap. 23. [m] Sozom. lib. 7. cap. 19. [n] Athan. Ep. ad Ruffin. tom. 2. p. 39. [o] Hieron. de Scriptor. cap. 115. [p] Aug. de Gestis cum Emerito. t. 7. p. 215. [q] Aug. Ep. 158. Gesta quæ promisit Præstantia tua, vehementer expecto, & in Ecclesia Hipponensi jam jam cupio recitari, ac si fieri potest, per omnes Ecclesias etiam in nostra Diœcesi constituas.

SECT. XV.

Those which we now call Apocryphal Books, were antiently read in some Churches, but not in all.

As to those Books which we now call Apocryphal, they were read in some Churches, but not in all. For in the Church of Jerusalem they were utterly forbidden, as appears plainly from Cyril's Catechisms, where he directs [u] the Catechumens to read no Apocryphal Books, but only such Books as were securely read in the Church: And then he specifies what Books were then read in the Church, viz. all the Canonical Books which are now in our Bibles, except the Revelations, without any mention at all of the Apocryphal Books; which is a certain Argument that they were not allowed to be read in the Church of Jerusalem, as I have more fully demonstrated in another Place [*]. The like Determination was made for some other Churches by the Council of Laodicea [x], which forbids all but the Canonical Books to be read in the Church, and likewise specifies what the means by Canonical Books, viz. Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy, Joshua, Judges, Ruth, Esther, 4 Books of Kings, 2 of Paralipomena or Chronicles, 2 Of Esdras, The Book of 150 Psalms, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Canticles, Job, 12 Prophets, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Lamentations and Epistles of Baruch, Ezekiel, Daniel, the 4 Gospels, The Acts of the Apostles, the 7 Catholick Epistles, 14 Epistles of St. Paul. Where none of the Apocryphal Books nor the Revelations are mentioned, which is a plain Evidence that none of them were read in the Churches of that District. After the same manner the Author of the Constitutions [y] giving Orders about what Books of the Old Testament should be read in the Church, mentions the five Books of Moses, and Joshua and Judges, Kings, Chronicles, Ezra and Nehemiah (which he means by the Histories of their Return from Babylon) the Books of Job and Solomon, the sixteen Prophets and the Psalms: But says nothing of any of the Apocryphal Books; which argues, that he did not find them to be read in the Rituals of those Churches whence he made his Collections.

However in other Churches they were allowed to be read [z] with a Mark of Distinction, as Books of Piety and moral Instruction, to edify the People; but they neither gave them the Name of Canonical Books, nor made Use of them to confirm Articles of Faith. This is expresly said by St. Jerom. And Ruffin [a], who was Presbyter of Aquileia, delivers the same as the antient Tradition and Practice of that Church, when these Books were neither reckoned Canonical, nor yet in the worst Sense Apocryphal, but called Ecclesiastical, because they were read in the Church, but not used to confirm Matters of Faith. Among these he reckons the Wisdom of Solomon, and Ecclesiasticus, and Tobit and Judith and Maccabees, and Hermes Pastor, and the Book called the two Ways, or the Judgment of Peter. Athanasius [b] also ranks these Books, not among the Canonical, but among those that might at least be read to or by the Catechumens, among which he reckons Wisdom and Ecclesiasticus, and Tobit and Judith and Esther, and the Doctrine of the Apostles, and the Shepherd, that is, Hermes Pastor. So in the Lectionarium Gallicanum published by Mabillon, there are Lessons appointed out of Tobit and Judith and Esther, particularly in the Rogation-Week for several Days together.

[r] Gesta Purgationis Felicis & Cæciliani. ad calcem Optati. p. 276. Inde Cathedram tulimus, & Epistolas salutatorias, & ostia omnia comburimus secundum sacrum præceptum. [s] Aug. de Civ. Dei. lib. 22. cap. 8. p. 1489. Libelli eorum, qui beneficia percipiunt, recitantur in populo, &c. [t] Chrys Hom. 3. in Thes. p. 1501. [†] Vid. Cassian. Collat. 10. cap. 2. [u] Cyril. Catech. 4. n. 22. p. 66, & 67. [*] Book X. Chap. i. n. 7. [x] Conc. Laodic. can. 59. [y] Constit. lib. 2. cap. 57. [z] Hieron. Præfat. in Libros Salomonis. Sicut ergo Judith & Tobiæ & Macchabæorum libros legit quidem Ecclesia, sed eos inter Canonicas scripturas non recipit: Sic & hæc duo volumina (Sapientiam & Ecclesiasticum) legit ad ædificationem plebis, non ad auctoritatem Ecclesiasticorum Dogmatum confirmandam. [a] Ruffin. in Symbolum. ad calcem Cypriani. Oxon. p. 26. Sciendum tamen est, quod & alii Libri sunt, qui non Canonici, sed Ecclesiastici a Majoribus appellati sunt; Ut est Sapientia Solomonis, & alia Sapientia quæ dicitur Filii Syrach—— Ejusdem ordinis est Libellus Tobiæ, & Judith, & Maccabæorum libri. In novo vero Testamento Libellus, qui dicitur, Pastoris sive Hermatis, qui appellatur, Duæ Viæ, sive judicium Petri; quæ omnia legi quidem in Ecclesiis voluerunt, non tamen proferri ad auctoritatem ex his fidei confirmandam. [b] Athan. Ep. Heortastic. ad Ruffin. t. 2. p. 39. It. Synops. Scriptur. ib. p. 55.

SECT. XVI. And in some Churches, under the Title of Canonical Scripture, taking that Word in a larger Sense.

IN some Churches these Books were also read under the general Name of Canonical Scripture, taking that Word in a large Sense, for such Books as were in the Rule or Canon or Catalogue of Books authorized to be read in the Church. Thus at least we must understand the Canon of the third Council of Carthage, [c] which ordered that nothing but the Canonical Writings should be read in the Church under the Name of the Divine Scriptures; among which Canonical Scriptures there are reckoned Wisdom and Ecclesiasticus under the Name of Solomon, together with Tobit, Judith, Hester, and the Maccabees. St. Austin seems to have followed this Canon, making all these Books Canonical, but giving Preference to some above the other, as they were more or less generally received by the Churches. In his Book of Christian Doctrine [d] he calls all the Apocryphal Books Canonical, but he does not allow them so great Authority as the rest, because they were not generally received as such by the Churches. He says the Books [e] of Wisdom and Ecclesiasticus were none of Solomon's, but yet received into Authority by the Western Church. By which he must mean the Roman Church, where Pope Innocent had [f] received them. For in the Eastern Church their Canonical Authority was always rejected: And in many of the Western Churches: For neither Ruffin at Aquileia nor Philastrius at Brixia in Italy [g], nor Hilary at Poictiers in France [h] grant them any Authority in the Canon of Scripture. Nay Hilary of Arles [i] expressly told St. Austin, That the Churches of France were offended at him, because he had used a Proof out of the Book of Wisdom, which was not Canonical. And it is remarkable, that at Rome it self Gregory the Great, having Occasion to quote a Text out of Maccabees, makes a Prefatory Excuse for alledging a Text out of a Book that was not Canonical [k], but only published for the Edification of the Church. And even St. Austin himself [l] in answer to the French Divines, pleads no farther for the Divine Authority of the Book of Wisdom, which he had cited as Canonical, but that it was so received by the Christians of Africk before him. Which by his own Rule, laid down before in his Book of Christian Doctrine, did not make it in the highest Sense Canonical, because it was rejected by all the Churches of the East, and a great part of the West, from the Authority of Canonical Scripture. So that though these Books were read in the African Church under the Name of Canonical Scripture, yet they were not esteemed of equal Authority with the rest, because they were reputed by all the World besides as Apocryphal, or as some call them, Ecclesiastical only, being such as were allowed to be read in the Church for Moral Instruction and Edification, but not used to confirm Articles of Faith. And this is the Account which Cajetan himself gave of the Practice of the Church, before the Council of Trent defined a new Canon of Scripture. He says, They are not [m] Canonical, that is, Regular, to confirm Articles of Faith: Yet they may be called Canonical, that is, Regular, for the Edification of the People, as being received and authorized in the Canon of the Bible only for this End. And with this Distinction he thinks we are to understand both St. Austin and the Council of Carthage, all whose sayings are to be reduced to the Rule of St. Jerom. But if any think that St. Austin or the African Church meant more, it may be said, their Authority is of no Weight against the general Consent of the whole Church in all Ages besides, from the first settling of the Canon down to the Council of Trent; the Proof of which Consent is so fully and unanswerably made out by Bishop Cosins in that excellent Book, called his Scholastical History of the Canon of Scripture, where he produces the Testimonies of the Writers of every Age distinctly in their Order, that little more can be added [] to it, and [c] Conc. Carth. 3. can. 47. Præter Scripturas Canonicas nihil in Ecclesia legatur sub nomine Divinarum Scripturarum. Sunt autem Canonicæ scripturæ, id est, Genesis, &c. Salomonis libri quinque ——— Tobias, Judith, Hester, Esdræ libri duo, Maccabæorum libri duo. [d] Aug. de Doctrin. Christ. lib. 2. cap 8. Tenebit hunc modum in scripturis Canonicis, ut eas quæ ab omnibus accipiuntur Ecclesiis, præponat eis quas quædam non accipiunt. In eis vero quæ non accipiuntur ab omnibus, præponat eas quas plures gravioresque accipiunt, eis quas pauciores minorisque authoritatis Ecclesiæ tenent. [e] Aug. de Civ. Dei. lib. 17. cap. 20. Non esse ipsius, non dubitant doctiores, eos tamen in authoritatem maxime Occidentalis antiquitus recepit Ecclesia. [f] Innocent. Ep. 3. ad Exuper. cap. 7. [g] Philastr. de Hæres. cap. 40. de Apocryphis. Et cap. 9. [h] Hilar. Præfat. in Psalmos. [i] Hilar. Arelat. Epist. ad Aug. inter Oper. Aug. t. 7. p. 545. Illud etiam testimonium quod posuisti, Raptus est ne malitia mutaret intellectum ejus, tanquam non Canonicum definiunt omittendum. [k] Greg. Magn. Moral. in Job. lib. 19. cap. 13. Qua de re non inordinate agimus, si ex libris licet non Canonicis, sed tamen ad ædificationem Ecclesiæ editis, testimonium proferamus. [l] Aug. de Prædestin. lib. 1. cap. 14. t. 7. p. 553. Non debuit repudiari sententia libri Sapientiæ, qui meruit in Ecclesia Christi de gradu Lectorum Ecclesiæ Christi tam longa annositate recitari, & ab omnibus Christianis, ab Episcopis usque ad extremos Laicos, Fideles, Pœnitentes, Catechumenos, cum veneratione Divinæ authoritatis audiri. [m] Cajetan. in fine Comment. in Histor. Vet. Test. Ad Hieronymi limam reducenda sunt tam verba Conciliorum quàm Doctorum. Et juxta illius sententiam Libri isti non sunt Canonici, id est, Regulares, ad firmandum ea quæ sunt fidei: possunt tamen dici Canonici, id est, Regulares, ad Ædificationem fidelium, utpote in Canone Bibliæ ad hoc recepti & authorati. Cum hac distinctione discernere poteris dicta Augustini & scripta in Provinciali Concilio Carthaginensi. [] To the Testimonies cited by Bishop Cosins the learned Reader may add this of Franciscus Georgius Venetus, a Franciscan, who lived a little before the Reformation: Problem. in Script. tom. 6. Sect. 5. Problem. 184. Par. 1622. 4°. Cur Raphael venit in comitatum Tobiæ? Respond. Quamvis Historia sit sine certo auctore, nec in Canone habeatur, tamen quia admittitur legenda in Ecclesia tanquam vera, hujus quoque rei rationem assignare conabimur. Here he plainly rejects the Book of Tobit out of the Canon, and speaks of it no otherwise than as of a common History, which was allowed to be read in the Church. Which Words are so displeasing to the Curators of the Roman Index Expurgatorius, that they order it to be struck out, with many other Passages of the same Author where he reflects on the vulgar Translation as corrupt and false, and corrects its Errors from the Original Hebrew, of which he was a considerable Master, though in other Things he had his Failings. Vid. Index Libror. Prohibitorum & Expurgandorum. per Sotomajor. p. 417. Madriti. 1667. Fol.

it

it is wholly needleſs to detain the Reader upon that Subject; it being ſufficient to our preſent Purpoſe, to have obſerved, that theſe Books of controverted Authority were read, either under the Name of Apocryphal, or Eccleſiaſtical, or Canonical, in moſt of the antient Churches.

SECT. XVII. A ſhort Account of the Tranſlations of Scripture uſed in the antient Church.

THERE is one Thing more, which it will not be improper to give a ſhort Account of, before we put an End to this Chapter: That is, of the Tranſlations of Scripture that were commonly uſed in the antient Church. I mean not here to prove again (what has been abundantly done before in the laſt Book) that the Scriptures were tranſlated and read in the vulgar Language in every Church: But the Thing I would obſerve in this Place, is only this: That they generally read the Tranſlations of the Septuagint, where Greek was the vulgar Language, or elſe ſuch Tranſlations into other Languages, as was derived from it. For they had no Tranſlation of the Bible from the Hebrew, till the time of St. Jerom in the Latin Church, but only ſuch as were made from the Greek Tranſlation of the Septuagint. The Septuagint was uſed all over the Greek Church, except perhaps that Part of Syria where Syriack was the moſt vulgar Language, that is, in Oſdroene and Meſopotamia, where they had a Syriack Tranſlation made from the Hebrew not long after the time of the Apoſtles. This was called the old Tranſlation, in oppoſition to another, which was made from the Septuagint in After-ages. In all other Parts of the Eaſt the Septuagint was the common Tranſlation. But this by Tract of Time and Variety of Copies was much corrupted, upon which Account it was reviſed and corrected by ſeveral Learned Men, which laboured in this Work, particularly by Origen, and Heſychius the Egyptian, and Lucian of Antioch, two Martyrs who ſuffered in the Diocletian Perſecution. Hence, as St. Jerom [n] informs us, there came to be three famous Exemplars or Editions of the Septuagint uſed in the Eaſtern Churches. Alexandria and Egypt followed the Copy reviſed by Heſychius. Conſtantinople and all the Aſiatick Churches as far as Antioch uſed that of Lucian: The Churches of Paleſtine and Arabia read the Copy corrected by Origen and publiſhed by Euſebius and Pamphilus. And ſo between theſe three Editions, the whole World was divided. Origen did two Things farther in this Matter. 1. He publiſhed an Edition of the Bible, which he called his Hexapla, becauſe it was in ſix Columns, the firſt was the Hebrew in Hebrew Characters [o], the ſecond the Hebrew in Greek Characters, the third the Tranſlation of Aquila the Jew, the fourth the Tranſlation of Symmachus, the fifth the Tranſlation of the Septuagint, and the ſixth the Tranſlation of Theodotion the Ebionite. To theſe he afterward added two other Tranſlations found at Nicopolis and Jericho, and theſe made up his Octapla. And in proceſs of time, he publiſhed another leſſer Edition containing only the four Tranſlations, of the Septuagint, Aquila, Symmachus and Theodotion, which he called his Tetrapla. Secondly, He publiſhed the Septuagint with the Additions of Theodotion mixed with it, to ſupply the Places where it was defective, which Additions he marked with an Aſterisk to diſtinguiſh them; and ſuch Places as were redundant in the Septuagint, and not to be found in the Hebrew, nor in Theodotion, he alſo marked with an Obelisk or ſtrait Line for Diſtinction alſo. But this mixing of the two Tranſlations together in proceſs of time occaſioned ſome Confuſion, and St. Jerom complains of it [p] as a bold Undertaking, and therefore he ſet about a new Edition and Tranſlation [q] of the Septuagint for the Uſe of the Latin Church. Hitherto all Churches uſed the Tranſlation of the Septuagint, except the Syrian Churches, as was ſaid before, and except on the Book of Daniel, which in all Churches was read according to the Tranſlation of Theodotion, as the ſame St. Jerom [r] informs us in ſeveral Places, particularly in his Preface upon Daniel [s], becauſe by ſome Means or other, the Septuagint Tranſlation of that Book was more corrupt than any other Part of Scripture. But there were abundance of Faults in that Tranſlation in other Places, partly by the Deſign of the Interpreters (who added ſome Things of their own, and left out others, and often changed the Senſe at Pleaſure, eſpecially in Texts that had any Relation to the Holy Trinity, as St. Jerom ſhews at large in his Preface upon the Pentateuch, where he expoſes the Story of their having diſtinct Cells, and their being eſteemed inſpired Writers;) and partly from the great variety of Copies, and the great Corruptions that were crept into them by the Ignorance or Negligence of Tranſcribers: And this both in the Septuagint Copies themſelves, and the Latin Tranſlations that were made from them. Upon this Account St. Jerom, by the Inſtigation of Chromatius and Heliodore, and other pious Biſhops of the Latin Church, ſet about a Tranſlation of the Pſalms and Old Teſtament from the Original Hebrew: But this met with great Oppoſition for ſome time: For though many applauded it, and read it in the Churches, yet others oppoſed it, and Ruffin and others bitterly inveighed againſt it, as reflecting on the Church, which had uſed and recommended the Septuagint, and the Tranſlations made from it, ever ſince the time of the Apoſtles. St. Auſtin [t] himſelf diſſuaded him from the Undertaking, and when it was finiſhed, he would not ſuffer it to be read in his Dioceſe for fear of giving Scandal to the People; telling him farther [u] what a Tumult had been raiſed in one of the Churches of Africa, by a Biſhop's introducing his Tranſlation, which he was forced to lay aſide again for fear all his People ſhould have deſerted him. But in other Places it met with a kinder Reception. For by degrees it came to be uſed by learned Men in their Expoſitions. Gregory the Great makes uſe [x] of both Tranſlations, calling St. Jerom's the New Tranſlation, and the other the Old; which was otherwiſe called the Itala, and Vulgata, and Communis, becauſe it was the moſt common and vulgar Tranſlation uſed in all the Latin and Italick Churches. The preſent vulgar Latin Tranſlation is ſuppoſed by learned Men neither to be the antient Vulgar, nor St. Jerom's New One, but a Mixture of both together [y]. The Pſalms in the preſent Vulgar, are not from the Hebrew, but are of St. Jerom's Tranſlation from the Septuagint of Lucian's Emendation. The other Books come nearer the Hebrew, than they do to the Septuagint, which ſhews that they have ſomething of St. Jerom's Tranſlation. But the Pſalms were always read at Rome according to the old Verſion, and continued ſo to be uſed till Pope Pius V. ordered St. Jerom's Verſion with Emendations from the Septuagint to be put in its Place. And ſo the old Tranſlation of the Pſalms came to be called the Roman Pſalter; and St. Jerom's new Tranſlation, the Gallican Pſalter, becauſe it was immediately received in the Gallican Church. This is obſerved both by Mabillon [z] and Bona [*] out of Berno Augienſis and Strabo, who ſay, the French and Germans took the new Tranſlation of the Pſalms corrected from the Septuagint by St. Jerom, whilſt the Romans continued to uſe the old vulgar corrupt Edition: Which is ſtill read in the Vatican Church at Rome, and the Ambroſian Church at Milan, and St. Mark's at Venice: And Bona is ſo free as to ſay, he thinks it had been more for the Honour and Benefit of the Church to have kept ſtill to the old Verſion of the Pſalter, ſince now there is a great Diſagreement between the Breviary and the Miſſal, whilſt the ſame Pſalms are ſung different ways [†], in the Miſſal according to the Old Tranſlation, and in the Breviary according to the New one: Which he ſpeaks of as a Miſtake, but tenderly, becauſe though it was a Deviation from the old Rule obſerved in Gregory's Sacramentarium, and the Miſſa Mozarabica, and the Ambroſian Liturgy, yet it was Pope Pius's Order that made the Correction.

[n] Hieron. Præfat. in Librum Paralipomenon. Alexandria & Ægyptus in Septuaginta ſuis Heſychium laudat Auctorem. Conſtantinopolis uſque Antiochiam Luciani Martyris exemplaria probat. Mediæ inter has Provinciæ Palæſtinos Codices legunt, quos ab Origene elaboratos Euſebius & Pamphilus vulgaverunt: Totuſque orbis hac inter ſe veritate compugnat. [o] Vid. Euſeb. lib. 6. cap. 16. [p] Hieron. Præfat. in Paralipom. [q] Hieron. Præfat. in Joſue. [r] Hieron. Præfat. in Joſue. It. Com. in Daniel. 4. & Apolog. 2. cont. Ruffin. [s] Hieron. Præfat. in Daniel. Danielem Prophetam juxta Septuaginta Interpretes Domini ſalvatoris Eccleſiæ non legunt, utentes Theodotionis Editione: Et hoc cur acciderit neſcio.——Hoc unum affirmare poſſum, quod multum à veritate diſcordet, & recto judicio repudiatus ſit.

I might here have added ſeveral other Things relating to the antient way of dividing the ſeveral Books of Scripture into Chapters, and Verſes, and Canons, and Sections and Sub-ſections, very much differing from the preſent way of dividing them into Chapter and Verſe: But becauſe Obſervations of this kind are very intricate of themſelves, and have no Relation to the Service of the Church, which is the Subject in hand, I ſhall omit them here, with many other Miſcellany Rites of the ſame nature, which will be more proper to be explained in a Critical Diſcourſe by themſelves; and now proceed to the next Part of the Service of the Church in the Miſſa Catechumenorum, which was the Sermon or Homily, immediately after the Reading of the Pſalms and other Scriptures, before any Prayers were made either for particular Orders of Men, ſuch as Catechumens, Energumens, Penitents, &c. or for the General State of Chriſt's Church.

CHAP. IV.

Of Preaching, and the Uſages relating to it, in the antient Church.

SECT. I. All Sermons antiently called Homilies, Diſputations, Allocutions, Tractatus, &c.

IMMEDIATELY after the Reading of the Pſalms and Leſſons out of the Scriptures, before the Catechumens were diſmiſſed, followed the Sermon, which the Biſhop, or ſome other appointed by him, made to the People. This being done in the Preſence of the Catechumens, was therefore uſually reckoned a Part of the Miſſa Catechumenorum, or Ante-Communion Service. Such Diſcourſes were commonly termed Homilies from the Greek ὁμιλία, which ſignifies indifferently any Diſcourſe of Inſtruction to the People, whether compoſed by the Preacher himſelf, or read out of a Book compoſed by another; though we now generally reſtrain it to the latter Senſe in our modern way of ſpeaking. Among the Latins, they were frequently called Tractatus, as appears from many Paſſages of Cyprian, Optatus, St. Ambroſe, St. Auſtin, St. Jerom, Gaudentius, Chryſologus, and many others collected by Ferrarius [a], which I think it needleſs to recite. Only I ſhall obſerve one Thing, that this Word ſignifies any Expoſition or handling of Scripture, as well by way of Writing, as Preaching: And in both Senſes the Tractatores, the Preachers and Expoſitors of Scripture, were oppoſed to the Canonici & Authentici, the Prophets, Evangeliſts and Apoſtles, who wrote by Inſpiration, and whoſe Authority was abſolutely [t] Aug. Ep. 19. ad Hieron. [u] Aug. Ep. 10. ad Hieron. [x] Greg. M. Ep. ad Leandr. ante Moral. in Job. & lib. 20. Moral. cap. 3. [y] Vide Walton. Prolegom. 10. n. 9. [z] Mabil. de Curſu Gallicano. p. 396. [*] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 2. cap. 3. n. 4. [†] Bona ibid. n. 5. Hæc autem Diſſonantia, ablato nunc Veteri Pſalterio, ſæpe occurrit, Cæterum iſta hoc loco notare libuit, non ut quenquam carperem, ſed ne priſca Eccleſiæ Diſciplina ignoraretur. [a] Ferrar. de Ritu Concion. lib. 1. cap. 1.

Infallible and Authentick; which could not be ſaid of any Expoſitors, however excellent or learned, who dictated their Thoughts without any ſuch peculiar Aſſiſtance. This Diſtinction is often inculcated by St. Auſtin: I confeſs, ſays he, writing to St. Jerom [b], I have learned to pay this Reverence and Honour only to thoſe Books of Scripture which are called Canonical, that I moſt firmly believe none of the Authors of them was guilty of any Error in Writing. And if I find any thing in thoſe Books, which ſeems contrary to Truth, I make no doubt but that it is either a Corruption of the Copy, or that the Tranſlator did not hit the Senſe, or that I myſelf do not underſtand it. But I read all others with this Caution and Reſerve, that however eminent they be for Piety and Learning, I do not believe what they ſay to be true merely becauſe it was their Opinion; but becauſe they perſuade me either by thoſe Canonical Authors, or by probable Reaſon, which carries the Appearance of Truth. So again, in his Book De Catechizandis Rudibus [c] he diſtinguiſhes the inſpired Writers, by the Name of Canonical, from all others, whom he calls Tractators and Expoſitors of Scripture. As Claudianus Mamertus ſpeaks [d] of all Expoſitors under the Name of Tractators, but of the holy Pen-men themſelves under the Title of Authenticks. St. Auſtin [e] and St. Jerom [f] often ſpeak of Preaching under the Name of Diſputations; Tertullian [g] calls them Allocutions; dividing the whole Service into theſe four Parts, reading the Scriptures, ſinging the Pſalms, making Allocutions, and ſending up Prayers. Among the Greeks they are frequently called λόγοι, which anſwers to the Latin Word, Sermones, and the Engliſh Sermons. The moſt antient Name is that of Evangelium, and εὐαγγελίζεσθαι, appropriated more peculiarly to the Preaching of the Apoſtles; and therefore ſeldom or never aſcribed to any others by Eccleſiaſtical Writers. A more general Name in Scripture, is that of διδασκαλία, Doctrine and Teaching: Whence Preachers of the Word are called διδάσκαλοι, Doctors and Teachers by St. Paul, 1 Cor. xii. 28, 29. which Vincentius Lirinenſis obſerves to be the ſame as Tractatores [h] in After-ages. St. Paul alſo uſes the Word κήρυγμα, for Preaching, 1 Cor. ii. 4 and in many other Places [i] of his Epiſtles. And ſo it is ſometimes uſed by Eccleſiaſtical Writers after him. But we muſt carefully note, that more commonly the Words κηρύσσειν and κήρυγμα among the Greeks, as alſo Prædicatio and Prædicare among the Latins, ſignify a very different thing, viz. That Part of the Deacon's Office, which he performed as the common κήρυξ or Præco of the Church, dictating the uſual Forms of Prayer to the People, in which they were to join, and calling upon them as their Guide and Director in all other Parts of Divine Service. This I have had Occaſion to ſpeak more largely of in a former Book [*], where we have particularly conſidered the ordinary Office of Deacons, and ſhewed, that they had no Authority in ordinary Caſes either to preach, or conſecrate the Euchariſt, or baptize, but whatever they did of this Kind, was either in caſe of great Neceſſity, or by ſpecial Commiſſion and Direction. And therefore thoſe antient Canons which ſpeak of their Predication [k], are not to be underſtood of their Preaching Sermons, but of their Proclaiming to the People ſuch Directions in performing Divine Offices, as they were concerned to give them by vertue of their Office, as the common Heralds and Cryers of the Church.

SECT. II.
Preaching the proper Office of Biſhops and Presbyters in ordinary Caſes, and not of Deacons.

THE Deacons indeed, in caſes of Exigence, were allowed to read the Homilies of the Fathers, as they did the Leſſons of Scripture: Which is the Reaſon aſſigned by the Council of Vaiſon [l] for permitting them ſo to do, when the Presbyter was ſick or infirm. For if Deacons were worthy to read what Chriſt has ſpoken in the Goſpel, why ſhould they be thought unworthy to rehearſe publickly the Expoſitions or Homilies of the Fathers? But excepting ſuch Caſes, we very rarely find any Permiſſion ſo much as to read an Homily granted them. For Preaching antiently was one of the chief Offices of a Biſhop: Inſomuch that in the African Churches a Presbyter was never known to preach before a Biſhop in his Cathedral Church till St. Auſtin's time, but the Biſhop always diſcharged this Office himſelf, and St. Auſtin was the firſt Presbyter in that Part of the World, that ever was allowed to preach in the Preſence of his Biſhop, as has been ſhewed out of Poſſidius [m] the Wri-

[b] Aug. Ep. 19. ad Hieron. cap. 1. Ego enim fateor Charitati tuæ, ſolis eis Scripturarum Libris qui jam Canonici appellantur, didici hunc timorem honoremque deferre, & nullum eorum Auctorem ſcribendo aliquid erraſſe firmiſſime credam. Ac ſi aliquid in eis offendero Literis, quod videatur contrarium veritati: Nihil aliud, quam vel mendoſum eſſe codicem, vel Interpretem non aſſequutum eſſe quod dictum eſt, vel me minime intellexiſſe, non ambigam. Alios autem ita lego, ut, quanta libet Sanctitate Doctrinaque præpolleant, non ideo verum putem, quia ipſi ita ſenſerunt; ſed quia mihi per illos auctores Canonicos, vel probabili ratione, quod à vero non abhorreat, perſuadere potuerunt.

[c] Aug. de Catechiz. Rudibus. cap. 8. t. 4. p. 298. Si libris ei perſuaſum eſſe videris, ſive Canonicis ſive utilium Tractatorum, &c. [d] Mamert. de Statu Animæ, lib. 2. cap. 10. Sed nunc locus & tempus eſt, ut ſicut à Philoſophis ad Tractatores, à Tractatoribus ad Authenticos gradum conſequar. ita. It. lib. 1. cap. 2. Poſt Authenticorum plurimos Tractatores, &c. [e] Aug. Tract. 89. in Joan. Confeſſ. lib. 5. cap. 13. Hom. 50, & 81. de Diverſis. [f] Hieron. Ep. 22. ad Euſtoch. cap. 15.

[g] Tertul. de Anima, cap. 9. Jam vero prout Scripturæ leguntur, aut Pſalmi canuntur, aut Adlocutiones proferuntur, aut Petitiones delegantur, &c. So frequently in Gregory the Great the Sermon is called ſimply, Locutio. Hom. 5, 9, 14, & 22, in Ezekiel.

[h] Vincent. Commonitor. cap. 40. Doctores, qui Tractatores nunc appellantur. [i] Vid. 1 Cor. i. 21. It. 1 Cor. 14. 15. 2 Tim. 4. 17. Tit. 1. 3. [*] Book II. Chap. xx. n. 10 & 11.

[k] Conc. Ancyran. Can. 2. Conc. Tolet. 4. Can. 39.

[l] Conc. Vaſenſ. 2. Can. 2. Si Presbyter, aliqua infirmitate prohibente, per ſeipſum non potuerit prædicare, ſanctorum Patrum Homiliæ à Diaconibus recitentur. Si enim digni ſunt Diaconi, quæ Chriſtus in Evangelio loquutus eſt, legere: Quare indigni judicentur, ſanctorum Patrum Expoſitiones publice recitare?

[m] Poſſid. Vit. Auguſt. cap. 5.

ter

ter of his Life, in a former [*] Book. 'Tis true, in the Eaſtern Churches Presbyters were ſometimes allowed to preach in the great Church before the Biſhop; but that was not to diſcharge him of the Duty; for ſtill he preached a Sermon at the ſame time after them, as we ſhall ſee from the Practice of Chryſoſtom and Flavian at Antioch, and other Examples hereafter.

In the leſſer Churches of the City, and Country about, this Office was devolved upon Preſbyters, as the Biſhop's proper Aſſiſtants; and the Deacons, except in the forementioned Caſes, were not authorized to perform it. So that this Office of Preaching the Goſpel, was then eſteemed the proper Office of Biſhops and Presbyters; the Biſhop diſcharging it perſonally in his Cathedral Church, in Conjunction with his Presbyters, or alone without them; and vicariouſly by his Preſbyters, where he could not be preſent, in the leſſer Churches. There are a great many ſerious Paſſages in the antient Records relating to this Matter, as well in the Imperial Laws, as the Canons of the Church, and the Writings of the moſt conſiderable Fathers, partly impreſſing this as a neceſſary Duty of the Epiſcopal and Paſtoral Function, and partly complaining of the Neglect of it, and partly threatning Cenſures and Puniſhments to the Offenders. St. Chryſoſtom [n] on thoſe Words to Timothy, A Biſhop muſt be apt to teach, διδακτικὸν, ſays, Other Qualifications, ſuch as thoſe, He muſt be ſober, vigilant, of good Behaviour, given to Hoſpitality, &c. may be in Subjects: But becauſe a Biſhop ought to have thoſe Qualifications that belong to Rulers, the Apoſtle therefore added, He muſt be apt to teach: For this is not required of Subjects; but is moſt eſpecially required of thoſe who have the Office of Governing committed to them. And again, on thoſe Words to Titus, Holding faſt the faithful Word, as he hath been taught (or, which relates to Teaching, τῆ κατ' διδαχὴν λόγῳ) that he may be able by ſound Doctrine both to exhort and to convince the Gainſayers, he ſays, St. Paul converted the World, not ſo much by his Miracles, as by his continual Preaching: and therefore a Biſhop muſt be able to exhort by ſound Doctrine, that is, to preſerve his Flock, and overthrow its Enemies. And unleſs he be ſuch an one, all is loſt. For he that knows not how to oppoſe the Enemy, and captivate every Thought to the Obedience of Chriſt, and pull down the vain Imaginations of Men, as he knows not how to teach according to ſound Doctrine, ſo he ought to be far [o] from the Teaching Throne, πόῤῥω ἴσω θρόνου διδασκαλικοῦ; where it is obſervable, that Chryſoſtom therefore calls the Biſhop's Throne, the Throne of Doctrine, or Teaching Throne, becauſe Preaching ſound Doctrine was ſo neceſſary a Part of the Biſhop's Office, that he could not be without it. St. Ambroſe likewiſe deſcribing the Office of a Biſhop, does it chiefly by ſtyling it the Office of Teaching; complaining modeſtly of his own hard Fate, in being forced againſt his Will to take upon him the Office of the Prieſthood [p], that is, to be made a Biſhop; which obliged him to teach others, before he had well learned himſelf. For he was made Biſhop of a Catechumen. Sidonius Apollinaris makes the ſame deſcription of the Office of a Biſhop, complaining in the like modeſt way with St. Ambroſe, of the Weight of the Profeſſion that was laid upon his Shoulders, when by being made a Biſhop againſt his Will, he was forced to teach before he had learned, and preach Good to others, before he had done any himſelf: Like a barren Tree, when he had no Works to ſhew for Fruit, he was forced to ſcatter Words for Leaves: Meaning the Neceſſity of Preaching, that was laid upon him by taking the Office of a Biſhop. St. Cyril of Alexandria in like manner calls the Office of a Biſhop [r] ἀξίωμα διδασκαλικὸν, the Dignity or Honour of Teaching. And in the ſixth general Council, where Maximus Biſhop of Antioch was degraded for his Hereſy, he is ſaid to be removed [s] from the Throne of Teaching, that is, from the Epiſcopal Office, of which Preaching was a ſpecial Ingredient. The Rule of the Apoſtolical Canons is, That a Biſhop who neglects his Clergy or his People, and teaches them not [t] the Rules of Piety, ſhall be ſuſpended; and if he perſiſts in his Neglect, ſhall be depoſed. For it was his Office to teach the Clergy as well as the People, and to expound the Scriptures to them. Whence St. Jerom gives it as Part of the Character of Gregory Nazianzen, That he was an Eloquent Teacher, and the Maſter under whom he learned the Scriptures, as he explained [u] them. Some would have excuſed themſelves, by ſaying, They would teach the People by their Example. To which St. Jerom replies [x], That a Biſhop's innocent Converſation without Preaching did as much Harm by its Silence, as it did Good by its Example. For the Barking of the Dogs is as neceſſary as the Shepherd's Staff, to terrify and beat off the Fury of the Wolves. Athanaſius [y] gives a very pathetical Exhortation to Dracontius a Biſhop newly ordained: Now that you are made Biſhop, ſays he, the People expect that you ſhould bring them Food from the Doctrine of the Scriptures: But if while they expect it, they ſuffer Want, and you only feed [*] Book II. Chap. iii. n. 4. [n] Chryſ. Hom. 10. in 1 Tim. 3. p. 1569. [o] Chryſ. Hom. 2. in Tit. p. 1703. [p] Ambroſ. de Offic. lib. 1. cap. 1. Titul. Capitis. Epiſcopi proprium munus docere populum. Item, Cum jam effugere non poſſimus Officium docendi, quod nobis refugientibus impoſuit ſacerdotii neceſſitudo, &c. [q] Sidon. lib. 5. Ep. 3. Indigniſſimo tantæ Profeſſionis pondus impactum eſt, qui miſer ante compulſus docere, quàm diſcere, & ante præſumens bonum prædicare, quàm facere, tanquam ſterilis arbor, cum non habeam opera pro pomis, ſpargo verba pro foliis. [r] Cyril. Ep. ad Monachos in Conc. Epheſ. Part. 1. cap. 28. [s] Conc. 6. Gener. Act. 12. p. 937. ἐδαμῶς ὁ θεῖος κανὼν ἀφῆκέ τινα τῶν λοιπῶν εἰς διδασκαλικὸν καθίσαι θρόνον &c. [t] Canon. Apoſt. c. 58. [u] Hieron de Scriptor. cap. 117. Vir eloquentiſſimus Præceptor meus, quo Scripturas explanante didici. [x] Id. Ep. 83. ad Oceanum. Sacerdotis innocens, ſed abſque ſermone Converſatio, quantum Exemplo prodeſt, tantum ſilentio nocet. Nam & latratu canum, baculoque Paſtoris luporum rabies deterrenda eſt. Vid. Ep. 2. ad Nepotian. [y] Athan. Ep. ad Dracont. tom. 1. p. 954.

yourſelf;

yourſelf; what Excuſe will you have, when the Lord Jeſus ſhall come, and find his Sheep ſtarving for want of Food? St. Auſtin, in one of his Homilies [z] upon the Anniverſary of his Ordination, repreſents this Part of a Biſhop's Office with great Concern, as a Matter in which he was deeply intereſted, and nearly affected. Firſt, he tells his People what a Burden was laid upon him by God in the Prophet Ezekiel Chap. xxiii, which was the Leſſon appointed for that Solemnity, wherein were theſe Words ſo full of Terror: I have made thee a Watchman. If I ſay to the Sinner, Thou ſhalt ſurely die, and thou holdeſt thy Peace, and he die in his Sins; he indeed dies juſtly, and according to his Deſert in his Sins: but his Blood will I require at thy Hands, &c. Upon which he makes this Reflection with regard to his own Office: I am a Steward: If I lay not out my Lord's Money, but keep it by me, the Goſpel terrifies me. I might ſay indeed, What have I to do to be troubleſome unto Men, to ſay to the Wicked, Do not thus; Do thus: Deſiſt from doing Evil? What have I to do to be thus troubleſome unto Men? I have received, how I ought to live myſelf, as I am enjoined, as I am commanded. I will return what I have received. What have I to do to give Account of others? But the Goſpel terrifies me. There is nothing more pleaſant than to ſeek after the Divine Treaſure in quiet. This is ſweet and good: But to preach, to reprove, to correct, to ediſy, to take the Care of every other Man upon myſelf, this is a great Burden, a great Weight, a great Labour. Who would not fly from ſuch a Labour? But the Goſpel terrifies me. There we read of a certain Servant, who ſaid to his Lord, I knew thee to be an hard Man, reaping where thou haſt not ſowed, therefore I kept thy Money, I would not lay it out, Take that which is thine. To whom the Lord anſwered, Out of thine own Mouth will I condemn thee, O thou wicked Servant. Thou oughteſt to have given my Money to the Bank, that when I came, I might have received my own with Uſury. The Curious Reader may find a great deal more to the ſame Purpoſe in St. Baſil's Epiſtles [a], and Gregory Nazianzen's [b] Complaints, and thoſe of Cyprian [c], which I care not here to tranſcribe. But nothing is more remarkable than what is ſaid by St. Chryſoſtom [d] in his Homily upon the Man, who was to account to God for Ten thouſand Talents: Where he thus repreſents the Account which Biſhops muſt make to God: Not only ſecular Magiſtrates, ſays he, but the Rulers of the Church, τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν πρεσβύτερος, muſt render an Account of their Government and Adminiſtration; and they above all others ſhall ſuffer bitter and grievous Puniſhment. For they who are intruſted with the Miniſtry of the Word, ſhall be examined moſt ſtrictly and ſeverely in the next World, Whether they have not through Sloth or Envy neglected to ſpeak any Thing which they ought to have ſpoken; and whether they have demonſtrated by their Works and Labour, that they have delivered all Things faithfully, and concealed nothing that was profitable unto Men. Again, He that has obtained the Office of a Biſhop, by how much he is exalted to greater Dignity, ſo much the more ample Account ſhall he be required to give, not only of his Doctrine or Teaching, and Care of the Poor, but alſo of his Examination and Tryal of thoſe who are ordained, with a thouſand other Things of the like nature. Where it is evident, that Teaching is reckoned as neceſſary a Part of the Biſhop's Function, as Ordination: And as he proves the one from thoſe Words of St. Paul to Timothy, Lay Hands ſuddenly on no Man, neither be Partaker of other Mens Sins; ſo he proves the other from thoſe Words of the ſame Apoſtle to the Hebrews, Obey them that have the Rule over you, and ſubmit yourſelves unto them: for they watch for your Souls, as they that muſt give Account, Heb. xiii. 17. Which, as he truly obſerves, is an Argument full of Terror. St. Chryſoſtom has abundance more to the ſame Purpoſe in thoſe excellent Books of the Prieſthood, which were compoſed on purpoſe to deſcribe the Offices and Duties of a Biſhop, among which he reckons the laborious Work of making continual Homilies [e] and ſet Diſcourſes to the People. And whereas ſome were ready to plead, That a good Life was the main Thing required, to excuſe their want of Knowledge, and Study, and Preaching, and Diſputing, he anſwers, That both theſe Qualifications were required; They muſt not only do, but teach the Commands of Chriſt, and guide others [f] by their Word and Doctrine, as well as their Practice: Each of theſe had their Part in the Epiſcopal Office, and were neceſſary to aſſiſt one another, in order to conſummate Mens Edification. With much more to the ſame Purpoſe, which I here omit, becauſe I have more fully repreſented it in another Book [*], where I had occaſion to treat of the general Duties of the Eccleſiaſtical Function.

What is thus pathetically preſs'd by private Men, is more authoritatively enjoyned by the Laws of the Church and State, both concurring to enforce this Duty. The Council of Laodicea [g] ſpeaks of it as a cuſtomary Thing, for the Biſhop to make always a Sermon before the Catechumens were diſmiſſed. And the Council of Valentia in Spain does the ſame, when it orders, that Catechumens and Penitents, and even Heathens, ſhould be allowed to hear the Biſhop's Sermon [h], becauſe they had experienced how that by this means many Infidels had been brought over to the Faith. Theſe Councils do not ſo much enjoyn Biſhops to preach, as preſuppoſe it to be their conſtant and general Practice. But [z] Aug. Serm. 25. ex 50. T. 10. p. 173. [a] Baſil. Ep. 61, 69, 185, 293. [b] Naz. Orat. 1. de Fuga p. 15, &c. It. Tract. de Epiſc. Latine. T. 2. p. 304. & Orat. 32. p. 519. [c] Cypr. de Lapſis, p. 123. [d] Chryſ. Hom. 1. tom. 5. p. 9. [e] Chryſ. de Sacerdot. lib. 5. cap. 1. [f] Chryſ. ibid. lib. 4. cap. 8. [*] Book VI. Chap. iii. n. 2. [g] Conc. Laodic. can. 19. περὶ τοῦ δεῖν, μετὰ τὰς ὁμιλίας τῶν ἐπισκόπων, καὶ τῶν καθηχουμένων εὐχὴν ἐπιτελεῖσθαι. [h] Conc. Valentin. Can. 1. Sic enim Pontificum Prædicatione audita nonnullos attractos ad Fidem evidenter ſcimus.

the

the Council of Trullo [i] ſpeaks more expreſly by way of Injunction, that the Rulers of Churches, τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν προεστῶτας, ought every Day, but eſpecially on the Lord's Day, to teach all the Clergy and People the Words of Truth and Godlineſs, gathered out of the Holy Scriptures. And in the Imperial Laws there are ſeveral Edicts of the Secular Power to the ſame purpoſe. In the Theodoſian Code there is one jointly made by the three Emperors, Gratian, Valentinian and Theodoſius, which bears this Title, De Munere ſeu Officio Epiſcoporum in prædicando Verbo Dei, Of the Duty and Office of Biſhops in preaching the Word of God. And the Body of the Edict [k] charges all thoſe with Sacrilege, who either confound the Sanctity of the Divine Law by Ignorance, or violate it by neglecting to preach it. And the ſame Law now ſtands inſerted [l] into the Juſtinian Code under the Charge of Sacrilege, both in the Title, and the Body of it alſo. In another Law of Arcadius and Honorius [m], Biſhops are ſtiled, the Men, who in their ſeveral Diſtricts are to govern the People, by inſtilling into them the Doctrines of the Chriſtian Religion, and more eſpecially the Principles of Subjection and Obedience to Civil Magiſtrates, which were often violated by the tumultuous Practices of the Monks, who were under their Inſpection. And in another Law [n] of Theodoſius, all Hereticks are forbidden either to teach or hear their profane Doctrines in their unlawful Aſſemblies: More particularly they, who were called Biſhops among them, ſhould not preſume to teach the Faith, which they themſelves had not, nor ordain Miniſters, when they themſelves were really none. This ſuppoſes that the Offices of Ordination and Preaching were equally the Duties of Catholick Biſhops, and that the Pretence in Heretical Biſhops to perform them, was mere Uſurpation. And upon the whole it appears, that as Preaching was an Office originally inveſted in Biſhops, as ſupreme Paſtors of the Flock of Chriſt: So by all the Rules and Laws of Church and State, and all the Ties of Religion, they were obliged to perform this Duty with all Aſſiduity and Diligence, as we find they generally did out of the Senſe of the great Obligation that was laid upon them. And ſome in the Romiſh Church (where this Part of the Epiſcopal Function was for many Ages ſcandalouſly neglected) have earneſtly wiſhed and laboured for the Reſtoration and Revival of it. Habertus pleads hard for it, and ſays one Thing [o] particularly remarkable, to excite thoſe to whom he writes, that he could aver upon certain Experience in France, that there was more Weight in the Words of every Biſhop to the People, than in ſix hundred of the moſt eloquent and elaborate Diſcourſes of other Men. But I return to the antient Church.

SECT. III.
The ſingular Practice of the Church of Rome, in having no Sermons for ſeveral Ages, noted out of Sozomen and Caſſiodore.

IT being thus certain from what has been related, that the Work of Preaching was ordinarily performed by Biſhops themſelves in their own Church, either in Conjunction with their Presbyters, or without them: It is very wonderfully ſtrange, and even aſtoniſhing and ſurprizing to hear what Sozomen [p] relates of the Church of Rome in his Time, that they had no Sermons either by the Biſhop, or any other; which was contrary to the Cuſtom of all other Churches. For at Alexandria, the Biſhop alone preached without his Presbyters from the Time of Arius: And in other Churches it was done by the Biſhop and Presbyters together: But in the Church of Rome by neither the one nor the other. Pagi [q] and Queſnel [r] think Sozomen muſt needs be miſtaken, and that being a Greek, he took this Report up by uncertain Rumour; becauſe Pope Leo, in whoſe Time Sozomen lived, not only preached conſtantly to the People, but declared it his Duty ſo to do, profeſſing that he was afraid [s] it ſhould be imputed to him as a Crime, if he was wanting in this Part of his Office and Miniſtry. But Valeſius, on the other hand, is very confident that Sozomen's Relation is true, becauſe Caſſiodore, who was a Senator and Conſul, and Præfectus Prætorio at Rome, has the ſame out of Sozomen in his Hiſtoria Tripartita, without any Correction; and he ſays farther, that no one can produce any Sermons preached to the People by any Biſhop of Rome before thoſe of Leo, which were not preached till after Sozomen wrote his Hiſtory. I will not pretend to decide this Controverſy among theſe learned Men; but only ſay, that however it was in Sozomen's Time, it ſeems to have been otherwiſe in the Days of Juſtin Martyr, when he preſented his Apology to Antoninus Pius and the Senate of Rome, where he lived and wrote at that Time: For there deſcribing the Buſineſs of the Chriſtian Aſſemblies on the Lord's Day, he expreſly ſays, that after the reading of the Writings of the Apoſtles and Prophets, the προεστὼς, the Biſhop or Preſident of the Aſſembly [t] made a Sermon to exhort and excite the People to the Imitation of the good Things they had heard read out of them. Where [i] Conc. Trull. can. 19. See alſo in Conc. Nic. 2. can. 2. & Conc. Ticinenſe. can. 5. [k] Cod. Theod. lib. 16. tit. 2. de Epiſcopis. leg. 25. Qui divinæ Legis ſanctitatem, aut neſciendo confundunt, aut negligendo violant & offendunt, Sacrilegium committunt. [l] Cod. Juſtin. lib. 9. tit. 29. de Crimine Sacrilegii. leg. 1. [m] Cod. Theod. lib. 9. tit. 40. de Pœnis. leg. 16. Ad Epiſcoporum ſane culpam (ut cætera) redundabit, ſi quid forte in ea parte Regionis, in qua ipſi populo Chriſtianæ Religionis, Doctrinæ inſinuatione moderantur, ex his quæ fieri hac Lege jubemus, à Monachis perpetratum eſſe cognoverint, nec vindicaverint. [n] Cod. Theod. lib. 16. tit. 5. de Hæreticis, leg. 24. Nuſquam profana præcepta vel docere vel diſcere: Ne Antiſtites eorundem audeant fidem inſinuare, quam non habent, & Miniſtros creare, quod non ſunt. [o] Habert. Archieratic. Part. 5. Obſerv. 7. p. 91. Id ſcio expertuſque ſum, plus eſſe momenti in unius Epiſcopi ad Populum, quam in ſexcentis aliorum quantumvis Orationibus atque elaboratis. [p] Sozom. lib. 7. cap. 19. [q] Pagi Critic. in Baron. an. 57. n. 3. [r] Queſnel. Diſſert. 6. de Jejunio Sabbati. & Diſſert. 1. de Vita Leonis. [s] Leo Serm. 3. de Epiphania. Ut noſtri nihil deſit Officii, &c. [t] Juſtin. Apol. 2. p. 98.

it must reasonably be supposed, that writing at Rome, and to the Roman Senate, he spake at least of the usual Custom and Practice of the Roman Church. And if it was otherwise in the Time of Sozomen, some Alteration must have happened in the Interval. Perhaps they might have taken up the Custom of Reading the Homilies of famous Writers among the Lessons, or immediately after, by the Deacon, (as I have shewed before, they read in some Churches the Homilies of Ephrem Syrus, and the Books of Clemens Romanus and Hermes Pastor [*]; and in the old Lectionariums, there are frequently Lessons appointed out of the Homilies of St. Austin, St. Ambrose and others, as it is now in the Roman Breviary) and this might supply the Place of a Sermon, till Leo brought up the antient Way of Preaching in the Roman Church again, which was afterwards discontinued for five hundred Years together, till Pius Quintus, like another Leo, revived the Practice, as we are told by Surius one of their own Writers (u).

SECT. IV. Whether Laymen were ever allowed to preach in the antient Church.

BUT there is another Question must be resolved with relation to the antient Church, that is, whether Laymen were ever allowed by Authority to make Sermons to the People? That they did it in a private Way as Catechists, in their Catechetick Schools at Alexandria and other Places, there is no Question. For Origen read Lectures in the Catechetick School of Alexandria, before he was in Orders [x], by the Appointment of Demetrius, and St. Jerom says [y] there was a long Succession of famous Men in that School, who were called Ecclesiastical Doctors upon that Account. But this was a different Thing from their publick Preaching in the Church. Sometimes the Monks, who were only Laymen, took upon them to preach publickly in the Church: But this was opposed, and censured as an Usurpation of an Office that did not belong to them. All Monks antiently, considered only as Monks, were no more than Laymen, as I have fully shewed [‡] in another Place: And therefore, as Monks, they had no Title to any Part of the Ecclesiastical Office or Function. Particularly St. Jerom [z] says, The Office of a Monk was not to teach, but to mourn. And that the case of the Monks and Clergy was very different from each other: The Clergy [†] are those that feed the Sheep, the Monks are among those that are fed. And therefore when some Monks in the Eastern Parts about Antioch, presuming on their own Qualifications and Knowledge, took upon them to preach publickly in the Churches, Pope Leo wrote two Letters to Maximus Bishop of Antioch [a] and Theodoret, to ingage them to lay a Restraint upon them, telling them, that besides the Priests of the Lord, none ought to presume to take upon them the Power of Teaching or Preaching, whether he were Monk or Layman, whatever Knowledge he could pretend to. Yet in some Cases a special Commission was given to a Layman to preach, and then he might do it by the Authority of the Bishop's Commission for that Time. Thus Eusebius [b] says Origen was approved by Alexander Bishop of Jerusalem and Theoctistus of Cæsarea, to preach and expound the Scriptures publickly in the Church, when he was only a Layman. And when Demetrius of Alexandria made a Remonstrance against this, as an Innovation, that had never been seen or heard of before, That a Layman should preach to the People in the Presence of Bishops; Alexander replied in a Letter, and told him, he was much mistaken; for it was an usual Thing in many Places, where Men were well qualified to edify the Brethren, for Bishops to intreat them to preach to the People. As Euelpis was requested by Neon at Laranda, and Paulinus by Celsus at Iconium, and Theodorus by Atticus at Synada. These had all special Directions from their Bishops to preach: And therefore whatever other Irregularity or Novelty there might be in the Thing, it was not liable to the Charge of Usurpation. Hallier, a famous Sorbon Doctor, is of Opinion, that they might do it [c] by Permission: and he thinks this may be deduced from that Canon of the fourth Council of Carthage [d] which forbids a Layman to teach in the Presence of the Clergy, except they request him to do it. If this relate to publick Teaching in the Church, it implies, that they might do it by special Indulgence and Concession. The antient Author of the Comment [e] upon the Epistles, under the Name of St. Ambrose, says, that in the Beginning of Christianity, for the Augmentation and Increase of the Church, a general Commission was granted unto all, both to preach the Gospel, and baptize, and explain the Scriptures in Ecclesiastical Assemblies. But when the Church had spread itself into all Places, Buildings were erected, and Rulers and other Officers were appointed, that no one among the Clergy should [*] Chap. iii. n. 14. [u] Surius Hist. ap. Blondel. Apolog. pro Sentent. Hieronymi. p. 58. [x] Vid. Euseb. lib. 6. cap. 3. [y] Hieron. de Scriptor. cap. 36. [‡] Book III. Chap. ii. n. 7. [z] Hieron. Ep. 55. ad Riparium. Monachus non Docentis, sed plangentis habet Officium. [†] Id. Ep. 1. ad Heliodor. Alia Monachorum est causa, alia Clericorum: Clerici pascunt oves, ego pascor. [a] Leo Ep. 60. al. 62. ad Maximum Antioch. Illud quoque convenit præcavere, ut præter eos qui sunt Domini sacerdotes, nullus sibi jus Docendi & Prædicandi audeat vendicare, sive sit ille Monachus, sive Laicus, qui alicujus Scientiæ nomine glorietur. It. Ep. 61. al. 63. ad Theodorit. [b] Euseb. lib. 6. c. 19. Epiphan. Hær. 64. seems to say he was then a Presbyter: But it must be a Mistake. [c] Hallier. de Hierarch. Ecclesiast. lib. 1. cap. 7. p. 67. Laicis non nisi ex Indulgentia illud attingere debere. It. p. 79. ibid. [d] Conc. Carth. 4. can. 98. Laicus, præsentibus Clericis, nisi ipsius rogantibus, docere non audeat. [e] Ambros. Com. in Epheſ. 4. p. 948. Ut crescerent Plebs & multiplicaretur, omnibus inter initia concessum est & Evangelizare & Baptizare, & Scripturas in Ecclesia explanare. At ubi autem omnia loca circumplexa est Ecclesia, Conventicula constituta sunt, & Rectores & cætera Officia in Ecclesiis sunt ordinata, ut nullus de Clero auderet, qui ordinatus non esset, præsumere Officium, quod sciret non sibi creditum vel concessum. Hinc ergo est, unde nunc neque Diaconi in populo prædicant, neque Clerici vel Laici baptizant.

preſume to meddle with any Office, which he knew was not committed to his Truſt. And hence it was that Deacons in his Time did not preach to the People, nor the inferior Clergy or Laymen baptize. What he ſays of the Apoſtles Days, muſt reſt upon his Authority: If he means an unlimited Commiſſion to all in general without previous Qualifications, and Examination of them, his Opinion is certainly ſingular. But if he means only, that all who had extraordinary Meaſures of ſpiritual Gifts, were allowed to exerciſe thoſe Gifts ſometimes in Preaching in publick Aſſemblies, without any external Ordination, beſides the Gift of the Spirit of Prophecy; that is no more than what the beſt Interpreters of thoſe Words of St. Paul, 1 Cor. xiv. 31. Ye may all prophecy one by one, commonly allow: That is, all who had the Gift of Prophecy, not every Chriſtian, might uſe the Word of Exhortation in the Church [f]. But then, as ſuch extraordinary Gifts of the Spirit of Prophecy were in a manner peculiar to the Apoſtolical Age, this could not be a Rule to the following Ages of the Church. And therefore when once theſe Gifts were ceaſed, the Church went prudently by another Rule, to allow none but ſuch as were called by an ordinary Commiſſion, to perform this Office, except where ſome extraordinary natural Endowments (ſuch as were in Origen) anſwering in ſome meaſure to thoſe ſpiritual Gifts, made it proper to grant a Licence to Laymen to exerciſe their Talents for the Benefit of the Church. Or elſe when Neceſſity impoſed the Duty on Deacons to perform the Office of Preaching, when the Biſhop and Presbyters were by Sickneſs or other Means debarred from it. For the foreſaid Author plainly ſays, That Deacons in his Time did not ordinarily Prædicare in Populo, Preach to the People; as being an Office to which they had no ordinary Commiſſion. And the ſame is ſaid by the Author of the Conſtitutions [g], and many others. Therefore ſince Deacons were not allowed this Power, but only in ſome ſpecial Caſes, it is the leſs to be wonder'd that after the ceaſing of ſpiritual Gifts, it ſhould generally be denied to Laymen.

SECT. V. Women never allowed to preach.

As to Women, whatever Gifts they could pretend to, they were never allowed to preach publickly in the Church, either by the Apoſtles Rules, or thoſe of ſucceeding Ages. The Apoſtle ſays expreſly, Let your Women keep Silence in the Churches: for it is not permitted unto them to ſpeak: but they are commanded to be under Obedience, as alſo ſaith the Law, 1 Cor. xiv. 34. And, if they will learn any Thing, let them ask their Husbands at home: for it is a ſhame for Women to ſpeak in the Church. And again, 1 Tim. ii. 11. Let the Woman alſo learn in Silence with all Subjection. But I ſuffer not a Woman to teach, nor to uſurp Authority over the Man, but to be in Silence. And this Rule was always ſtrictly obſerved in the antient Church. The ſame Council of Carthage, which allows Laymen to teach by Permiſſion, expreſly forbids Women to do it in any Caſe: Let not a Woman, however learned [h] or holy, preſume to teach Men in a publick Aſſembly. But they might teach Women in private, as private Catechiſts, to prepare Catechumens for Baptiſm. For the ſame Council of Carthage requires [i] this as one Qualification in Deaconeſſes when they were ordained, that they ſhould be ſo well inſtructed and expert in their Office, as to be able to teach the ignorant and ruſtick Women, how to make their Reſponſes to the Interrogatories, which the Miniſter ſhould put to them in Baptiſm, and how to order their Converſation afterward. And the Author of the Short Notes upon St. Paul's Epiſtles, under the Name of St. Jerom [k], ſays, that Deaconeſſes were thus employed in all the Eaſtern Churches, both to miniſter to their own Sex in Baptiſm, and in the Miniſtry of the Word, to teach Women privately, but not in publick. This Matter was carried much farther in many heretical Aſſemblies: For they ordained Women-Prieſts, which the Author of the Conſtitutions calls an heathenish [l] Practice: For the Chriſtian Law allowed of no ſuch Cuſtom. Tertullian ſays, they allowed [m] Women to teach and diſpute in their Aſſemblies, and to exorciſe Demoniacks, and adminiſter Baptiſm: All which was expreſly, he ſays [n], againſt the Rule of the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. xiv. 35. which is ſo far from allowing them to teach, that it does not allow them to ask Queſtions or diſpute publickly in the Church. And whereas ſome pretended the Authority of St. Paul for this, from a Book called, The Acts of Paul and Thecla, he ſays, that was a ſpurious Book, and the Author of it was convict, and confeſſed the Forgery, and was cenſured for it by the Church. The Montaniſts were a noted Sect for giving this Liberty to Women, under Pretence of Inſpiration by the Spirit: So that they had not only their Propheteſſes, ſuch as Priſca and Maximilla, the firſt Followers of Montanus, but alſo their Women Biſhops, and Women-Presbyters, as Quintilla and Priſcilla, who, as Epiphanius [o] and St. Auſtin [p] inform us, were dignified among the Pepuzians (a Subdiviſion of the Montaniſts) with the higheſt Offices of [f] Vide Bezam & Eſtium in Loc. [g] Conſtit. lib. 3. cap. 20. Vigil. Ep. ad Ruſticum. Conc. tom. 5. p. 554.

[h] Conc. Carthag. 4. can. 99. Mulier, quamvis docta & ſancta, viros in conventu docere non præſumat. [i] Ibid. can. 12. Viduæ vel ſanctimoniales, quæ ad Miniſterium baptizandarum mulierum eliguntur, tam inſtructæ ſint ad Officium, ut poſſint apto & ſano Sermone docere imperitas & ruſticas mulieres, tempore quo baptizandæ ſunt, qualiter Baptizatori interrogatæ reſpondeant, & qualiter, accepto baptiſmate, vivant. [k] Hieron. Com. in Rom. 16. 1. Sicut etiam nunc in Orientalibus Diaconiſſæ mulieres in ſuo Sexu miniſtrare videntur in Baptiſmo, ſive in Miniſterio Verbi, quia privatim docuiſſe feminas invenimus, &c.
[l] Conſtit. lib. 3. cap. 9. [m] Tertul. de Præſcript. cap. 41.
[n] Idem de Baptiſmo. cap. 17. Vid. De Velandis Virgin. cap. 9.
[o] Epiphan. Hær. 49. Pepuzian. n. 2. [p] Aug. Hær. 27. Pepuzian. Tantum dantes mulieribus Principatum, ut Sacerdotio quoque apud eos honorentur.

the

the Prieſthood. Epiphanius brings [q] the ſame Charge againſt the Collyridians, ſo called from their offering Collyria or Cakes, in Sacrifice to the Virgin Mary, againſt whom he diſputes at large, not only for their Idolatry in offering Sacrifice to her, but alſo for their Preſumption in putting Women into the Prieſt's Office; which was a Thing never done among the People of God from the Beginning of the World; and if it had been allowed to any, would doubtleſs have been granted to the Virgin Mary. Firmilian in his Letter to Cyprian [r], mentions another ſuch Woman among the Cataphrygians, who pretended by the Spirit of Prophecy, to preach, and pray, and baptize, and offer the Euchariſt in their publick Aſſemblies. So that this was a common Practice among the Hereticks, but always refuted and oppoſed by the Church of God, which always kept ſtrictly to the Apoſtle's Rule, not to ſuffer a Woman to teach publickly in the Church, whatever Sanctity or Learning ſhe could pretend to, but to reſerve this Office to Men, for whom it was originally appointed.

SECT. VI. Two or three Sermons ſometimes in the ſame Aſſembly.

HAVING thus examined what Perſons were allowed to execute this Office, we are next to enquire after what manner it was performed. And here we may obſerve, that they had ſometimes two or three Sermons preached in the ſame Aſſembly, firſt by the Presbyters, and then by the Biſhop, who uſually, when preſent, cloſed up this Part of the Service with his Paternal Exhortation. The Author of the Conſtitutions [s] gives this Rule about it: When the Goſpel is read, let the Presbyters one by one, but not all, ſpeak the Word of Exhortation to the People, and laſt of all the Biſhop, who is the Governor or Pilot of the Ship. And that thus it was in the Eaſtern Churches, whoſe Cuſtoms that Author chiefly repreſents, appears evidently from St. Chryſoſtom's Sermons which he preached when he was Presbyter at Antioch. For in theſe he plainly ſpeaks of Flavian the Biſhop as deſigning to preach after him, whom he uſually complimented in ſome ſuch Form as this: It is now time [t] for me to keep Silence, that our Maſter may have time to ſpeak. And again [u], Let us remember theſe Things, and now attend to the more perfect Admonition of our good Maſter. It would be as endleſs, as it is needleſs, to relate all the Paſſages that [x] occur in Chryſoſtom or other Writers, ſuch as St. Baſil, Gregory Nyſſen, Theodoret, St. Auſtin [y] and St. Jerom [z], who particularly reflects upon the contrary Practice in ſome Churches, (meaning Egypt and Africa) where the Biſhops allowed none to preach but themſelves; which he thought was an indecent Contempt of their Presbyters, as if they either envied or diſdained to hear them; when yet the Apoſtolical Rule was, If any thing be revealed to another that ſitteth by, let the firſt hold his Peace: for ye may all prophecy, one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted, 1 Cor. xiv. 30, 31. When two or more Biſhops happened to be preſent in the ſame Aſſembly, it was uſual for ſeveral of them to preach one after another, reſerving the laſt Place for the moſt honourable Perſon; as St. Jerom [†] tells us, that Epiphanius and John Biſhop of Jeruſalem preached together in the Church of Jeruſalem: And nothing was more common than this Practice at Conſtantinople, where a Multitude of Biſhops were often preſent to attend the Court, or adviſe with the Patriarch about the Affairs of the Church.

SECT. VII. Sermons every Day in ſome Times and Places.

IN ſome Places they had Sermons every Day, eſpecially in Lent, and the Feſtival Days of Eaſter. St. Chryſoſtom's Homilies upon Geneſis were preached in a running Courſe of two Lents one Day after another, as any one may perceive that peruſes them. His famous Homilies de Statuis were preached in Lent after the ſame manner. And it were eaſy to note ſome Scores of Paſſages in his other Sermons, eſpecially in his firſt, third and fifth Volumes [a], which make mention of their being preached ſucceſſively one Day after another. St Jerom [b] obſerves the ſame Practice among the Monks of Egypt, where it was cuſtomary every Day, after the Singing of the Pſalms, and Reading of the Scriptures, and Repeating of their Prayers, for the Father (that was the Title of the Presbyter that preſided over them) to make them a Sermon to elevate their Minds to the Contemplation of the Glory of the next World, which made every one of them, with a gentle Sigh, and Eyes lift up to Heaven, to ſay within himſelf, O that I had Wings like a Dove, for then would I flee away and be at Reſt! Pamphilus, in his Apology for Origen, relates the ſame Thing of him, that he was uſed to make Sermons Extempore almoſt every Day [c] to the People: And a Man cannot look into St. Auſtin's Homilies, but he will find References made almoſt every where to the Sermon made Heri, & Heſterno [q] Epiphan. Hær. 78. Antidicomarian. n. 23. & Hær. 79. Collyridian. [r] Firmil. Ep. 75. ad Cypr. p. 223. [s] Conſtit. lib. 2. cap. 57. [t] Chryſ. Hom. 2. de Verbis Eſai. t. 3. p. 853. [u] Hom. 3. ibid. p. 864. [x] Hom. 31. de Philogonio. t. 1. p. 399. Hom. 48. de Romano. t. 1. p. 621. Hom. 53. de Pœnitentia. tit. 1. p. 662. Hom. 59. de Babyla. p. 721. Hom. 31. de Natali Chriſti. t. 5. p. 476. Hom. 47. & 66. ibid. Hom. in Pſal. 48. p. 813. Hom. 36. in 1 Cor. p. 652. [y] Baſil. Hom. 18. in Barlaam. tom. 1. p. 443. Nyſſen. Orat. in ſui Ordinat. tom 2. p. 41. Theod. in 1 Cor. 14. 31. Aug. Ser. in Pſal. 94, & 95, & 131. [z] Hieron. Ep. 2. ad Nepotian. [†] Hieron. Ep. 61. ad Pammach. cap. 4. [a] Chryſ. t. 1. Hom. 9, 25, 32, 40, 42, 46, 49, 71. tom. 3. in Pſal. 44, & 50. Hom. 1, 2, 4, & 5. de Verbis Eſaiæ. tom. 5. Hom. 2. de Lazaro. Hom. 30, 34, 48, 56, 62, 63, &c. [b] Hieron. Ep. 22. ad Euſtoch. cap. 15. Poſt horam nonam in commune concurritur, Pſalmi reſonant, Scripturæ recitantur ex more. Et completis Orationibus, cunctiſque reſidentibus, medius, quem Patrem vocant, incipit diſputare, &c. [c] Pamphil. Apol. pro Orig. inter Opera Orig. t. 1. p. 756. Tractatus pene Quotidie habebat in Eccleſia, &c.

Die, the Day before [d], which either denotes ſome Day in the weekly Courſe, or at leaſt ſome Feſtival of a Martyr. For the Feſtivals of the Martyrs were always kept with great Solemnity, and they never omitted to make a Panegyrical Homily upon thoſe Days, to excite the People to imitate the Virtue of the Martyrs. As appears from St. Auſtin's Sermons de Sanctis, and Abundance throughout St. Chryſoſtom's Works upon ſuch [e] Occaſions. In France alſo Cæſarius the famous Biſhop of Arles preached almoſt every Day. For he is ſaid, by the Writer of [f] his Life, to have made Homilies to the People frequently both at Morning and Evening Prayer, that none of them might have the Excuſe of Ignorance to plead in their Behalf. And the Council of Trullo [g] has a Canon to promote this Practice.

SECT. VIII. Sermons twice a-day in many Places.

AND this leads us to another Obſervation proper to be made in this Matter, which is, that in many Places they had Sermons twice a-day for the better Edification of the People. Mr. Thorndike [h] and Hamon Leſtrange [i] make a little Queſtion of this, as to the Extent of the Practice. The former ſays, there are Examples of Preaching as well Evening as Morning in the antient Church, but only at particular Times, and on particular Occaſions, and therefore he is not ſatisfied of any Rule or Cuſtom of the Church. The other ſays, the Cuſtom only prevailed at Cæſarea in Cappadocia, where St. Baſil lived, and at Cyprus. St. Baſil preached ſome of his Homilies upon the Hexameron [k] at Evening Prayer. But he thinks Socrates [l] confines the Cuſtom to thoſe Places, becauſe he ſpeaks of it as a peculiar Uſage of thoſe Places to have Sermons made by Biſhops and Presbyters on Saturdays and Sundays at Candle-light in the Evening. Biſhop Wettenhal was of a different [m] Judgment: He thinks that in Cities and greater Churches, it was uſual for the Paſtors to preach on Sundays both Morning and Afternoon. And he ſupports his Opinion from ſeveral Teſtimonies of Chryſoſtom, who entitles one of his Homilies [n] An Exhortation to thoſe who were aſhamed to come to Sermon after Dinner. And in another [o] he inveighs againſt them who condemned his Uſage of Preaching after Dinner, as a new and ſtrange Cuſtom, telling them he had much more Reaſon to condemn that wicked Cuſtom then prevailing among ſome, to riſe from Table to ſleep. In another Place he defends his Practice from our Saviour's long Sermon to his Diſciples after his laſt Supper [p]. And in another Homily preached to the People of Antioch [q], he highly commends them for coming to Church in the Afternoon in a full Audience. All theſe are cited by Wettenhal, to which may be added what he ſays in his Homily of Satan's Temptations [r], that the Biſhop attended his Sermons which he preached both Morning and Afternoon. For that Sermon was preached in the Afternoon the ſame Day that he had preached his twenty firſt Sermon to the newly Baptized, as he there expreſly tells us. So again it appears that the fifteenth and nineteenth Homilies to the People of Antioch againſt Oaths, were preached on the ſame [s] Day. And his Homily of bearing Reproof patiently, was an Evening Sermon. For there [t] he thus addreſſes himſelf to the People. Be not weary, though the Evening now be come upon us. For all our Diſcourſe is in Defence of Paul, that Paul, who taught his Diſciples three Years Night and Day. In his Homily [u] upon Elias and the Widow, he ſays, One of his Lent Diſcourſes was broken off by the Evening coming upon them. And in one of his Homilies upon Geneſis [x], he as plainly intimates, that he was then preaching an Evening Sermon. For he makes this Apoſtrophe to the People: I am expounding the Scriptures, and ye all turn your Eyes from me to the Lamps, and him that is lighting the Lamps. What Negligence is this, ſo to forſake me, and ſet your Minds on him? For I am lighting a Fire from the holy Scriptures, and in my Tongue is a burning Lamp of Doctrine. This is a greater and a better Light than that. For we do not ſet up a Light like that moiſtened with Oil, but we inflame Souls that are watered with Piety, with a Deſire of Hearing. The whole Alluſion and Similitude ſhews, that he was preaching an Evening Sermon, when Candles were lighting, which gave him the Hint to draw the Compariſon between the material Light of the Lamps, and the ſpiritual Light of the Scriptures. And in his third Homily of Repentance [y], to name no more, he ſays, he would continue his Diſcourſe to the Evening, ἕως ἑσπέρας, that he might finiſh the Subject he was then handling. From all which it is apparent, this was no occaſional Uſage in St. Chryſoſtom's Church, but his conſtant and ordinary Practice. And in the Latin Church we ſometimes meet with Examples of this Kind, though not ſo frequent. St. Auſtin not only preached every Day, but ſometimes twice on the [d] Vid. Aug. Serm. in Pſal. 50. Serm. 2. in Pſal. 58. Serm. in Pſal. 63. Serm. 2. in Pſal. 68. Serm. 2. in Pſal. 70. Serm. 2. in Pſal. 90. Serm. 2. in Pſal. 101. & paſſim in Sermonibus de Tempore & de Sanctis. [e] Chryſ. tom. 1. Serm. 31. de Philogonio. Serm. 40. de Juventino. Et ſequentes de Pelagia, Ignatio, Romano, Melitio, Juliano, Luciano, Bernice, Euſtathio, &c. Aug. Serm. in Pſal. 81. See alſo what has been obſerved before of their Preaching on Saturdays, and the Stationary Days, in the former Book. [f] Cyprian. Tolonenſis, Vit. Cæſarii. cap. 4. ap. Mabillon. de Curſu Gallicano. p. 404. Frequenter etiam ad Matutinos, & Lucernarium propter advenientes recitabat Homilias, ut nullus eſſet qui ſe de Ignorantia excuſaret. [g] Conc. Trullan. Can. 19. [h] Thorndike of Religious Aſſemblies, chap. 10. p. 405. [i] Leſtrange of Divine Offices, chap. 4. p. 98. [k] Vide Baſil. in Hexameron. Hom. 2, 7, 9. [l] Socrat. lib. 6. cap. 21. [m] Wettenhal Duty of Preaching, chap. 3. p. 779. [n] Chryſ. Hom. 10. in Geneſ. [o] Hom. 1. de Lazaro. [p] Hom. 9. ad Pop. Antioch. p. 121. [q] Hom. 10. ad Pop. Antioch. p. 132. [r] Hom. 25. de Diabolo Tentatore. t. 1. p. 318, & 319. [s] Chryſ. Hom. 15. ad Pop. Antioch. t. 1. p. 198. [t] Hom. 13. de ferendis Reprehen. t. 5. p. 194. [u] Hom. 54. in Heliam & Viduam. t. 5. p. 722. [x] Hom. 4. in Gen. t. 2. p. 902. [y] Chryſ. Hom. 3. de Pœnit. t. 4. p. 559.

ſame

ſame Day. As is evident from the two Sermons on the lxxxviiith Pſalm, in the latter of which [z] he ſays, He had preached before in the Morning, and remained in their Debt for the Afternoon. Gaudentius alſo Biſhop of Brixia [a] ſpeaks of his having preached twice on the Vigil before Eaſter. And it is probable, the ſame Solemnity was obſerved in like manner in other Places. For at this Solemnity eſpecially they made a Diſtinction in their Sermons, preaching one to the Catechumens, and another to the Neophytes, or Perſons newly baptized. As Gaudentius ſays in the ſame Place, that his ſecond Sermon was preached to the Neophytes. The like is ſaid by St. Ambroſe [b], and Theodoret [c], and St. Auſtin [d], as I have had Occaſion to ſhew in another Place in ſpeaking of the Diſtinction that was made [†] between the Catechumens and the Faithful: To the former they preached only upon moral Subjects, to the latter upon myſtical Points of Religion, and abſtruſer Articles of Faith. Therefore St. Auſtin [e] ſays in another Place, There were ſome Points which required more intent Auditors, and therefore the Preacher was not to haſten them, but defer them to another Opportunity. And in another Homily [f] upon Eaſter Day, he excuſes the Shortneſs of it, becauſe he was to preach again to the Infants, as they then called all Perſons newly baptized. Cyril's Myſtical Catechiſms were of this kind. And probably thoſe Myſtical Homilies of Origen, whereof he wrote two Books, mentioned by Ruffin [g] and St. Jerom, were of the ſame Nature. However, we have ſeen ſufficient Evidence otherwiſe for more Sermons than one upon the ſame Day upon many Occaſions.

SECT. IX. Not ſo frequent in Country Villages.

BUT this is chiefly to be underſtood of Cities and large Churches. For in the Country Pariſhes there was not ſuch frequent Preaching. St. Chryſoſtom ſays, they that lived in the City [h] enjoyed continual Teaching; but they that dwelt in the Country, had not ſuch Plenty: Therefore God compenſated this Want of Teachers with a greater Abundance of Martyrs, and ſo ordered it, that more Martyrs lay buried in the Country, than in the City: Where tho' they could not hear the Tongues of their Teachers continually, yet they always heard the Voice of the Martyrs ſpeaking to them from their Graves, and that with greater Force of Eloquence and Perſuaſion, than living Teachers could do; as he there goes on after his manner to deſcribe it. There were ſometimes great Aſſemblies held at theſe Monuments of the Martyrs: For on their Anniverſary Feſtivals the whole City went forth to celebrate their Memorials in the Churches where they lay buried; as Chryſoſtom tells us both here and in other Places [i]: But at other times their chief Reſort for Preaching was to the City Churches. It was not till the beginning of the ſixth Century, that Preaching was generally ſet up throughout the Country Pariſhes in the French Church: But about that time an Order was made in the Council of Vaiſon, An. 529, That for the Edification of all the Churches, and the greater Benefit of the whole Body of the People, Presbyters ſhould have Power [k] to preach not only in the Cities, but in all the Country Pariſhes: And if the Preſbyter was infirm, a Deacon ſhould read one of the Homilies of the holy Fathers. So that in this reſpect the State of the preſent Church may be reckoned happier than that of the antient Church; ſince there is ſcarce a Country Pariſh among us but has a Sermon preached every Lord's Day throughout the Year by a Presbyter or Deacon.

SECT. X. Of their different Ways of Preaching.

THE next Thing to be obſerved, is, Their different Sorts of Sermons, and different Ways of Preaching. I have already noted [*] ſome Difference to have been made between Sermons to the Catechumens, and Sermons to the Faithful; but that was chiefly in the Matter and Subject of them. What I obſerve here, relates more to the Manner and Method of Preaching, in which reſpect they were diſtinguiſhed into four Kinds. 1. Expoſitions of Scripture. 2. Panegyrical Diſcourſes upon the Saints and Martyrs. 3. Sermons upon particular Times, Occaſions and Feſtivals. 4. Sermons upon particular Doctrines, and moral Subjects, to illuſtrate the Truth againſt Hereſy, and recommend the Practice of Virtue in Oppoſition to Immorality and Ungodlineſs. There are Examples of all theſe Kinds in St. Chryſoſtom's and St. Auſtin's Homilies, the two great Standards and Patterns of Preaching in the Greek and Latin Church. St. Auſtin has ſome Homilies upon whole Books of Scripture, as thoſe upon the Pſalms, and St. John's Goſpel. He has others, ſtyled, De Sanctis, which are Panegyricks upon the Saints and Martyrs: Others, ſtyled, De Tempore, which are upon the Feſtivals and great Solemnities of the Church, ſuch as the Nativity, Epiphany, Lent, Paſſion, Eaſter, Pentecoſt, and the Lord's Days throughout the Year; others, ſtyled, De Diverſis, which are a Miſcellany upon Doctrinal Points and Mo-[z] Aug. Serm. 2. in Pſal. 88. Ad reliqua Pſalmi, de quo in Matutino locuti ſumus, animum intendite, & pium debitum exigite. [a] Gaudent. Tract. 4. Carnalem Judaicæ Paſchæ obſervantiam, ſpiritualibus Typis refertam, trino jam Tractatu docuimus; ſemel heſterno die, & bis in Vigiliis. It. Tract. 5. Oportebat in illa nocte Vigiliarum ſecundo Tractatu ——— congrua Neophytis explanari. [b] Ambroſ. de iis qui Myſteriis initiantur, cap. 1. [c] Theod. Quæſt. 15. in Num. [d] Aug. Serm. 1. ad Neophytos. in Append. t. 10. p. 845. [†] Book I. Chap. iv. n. 8. [e] Aug. Tract. 62. in Joan. Intentior flagitatur auditor: Et ideo eum præcipitare non debet, ſed differre potius Diſputator. [f] Aug. Hom. 82. de Diverſis. Satis ſint vobis pauca iſta, quoniam & poſt laboraturi ſumus, & de Sacramentis altaris hodie Infantibus diſputandum eſt. [g] Ruffin. Invect. 2. cont. Hieron. cited by Valeſius Not. in Euſeb. lib. 6. cap. 24. [h] Chryſ. Hom. 65. de Martyribus. t. 5. p. 973. [i] Chryſ. Hom. 67. de S. Droſide. t. 5. p. 989, & 990. [k] Conc. Vaſenſ. 2. Can. 2. Hoc etiam pro ædificatione omnium Eccleſiarum, & pro utilitate totius populi nobis placuit, & non ſolum in Civitatibus, ſed etiam in omnibus Parochiis, verbum faciendi daremus Presbyteris proteſtatem, &c. [*] See before, Num. 8.

ral

ral Subjects. So likewise in Chryſoſtom, we have his Homilies by way of Expoſition on the whole Book of Geneſis, the Pſalms, the Goſpels of St. Matthew and St. John, and all St. Paul's Epiſtles. Then again, his Panegyricks upon the Saints and Martyrs; his Homilies upon the noted Feſtivals, Eaſter, Pentecoſt, &c. and laſtly, his Moral and Doctrinal Diſcourſes upon various Subjects, Repentance, Faith, Charity, Humility, the Truth of the Chriſtian Religion, the Divinity of Chriſt, and ſuch important Subjects, as the Occaſion of the Times, and the Oppoſition of Jews, Gentiles and Hereticks required him to diſcourſe upon, in a plain and familiar way to the People. His Homilies by way of Expoſition of any Book of Scripture, uſually conſiſt but of two Parts, an Expoſition of ſome Portion of a Chapter, and an Ethicon, or Moral Concluſion upon ſome uſeful Subject, which the laſt Part of the Words expounded gave him the Hint or Occaſion to diſcourſe upon. But his other Homilies are commonly introduced with an uſeful Preface, not relating always to the Subject that was to follow, but ſuch as the Occaſional Neceſſities of his Auditory, either in Matters of Reproof or Commendation ſeemed to require. But in both theſe Ways, he ſtill excelled in this, that he always expounded the Scripture in its moſt natural and genuine Senſe (not giving way to Tropological Deſcants, as too many others did) and made ſuch uſeful Obſervations and Reflexions upon it, as were pertinent and proper, which he applied to his Hearers with the ſtrongeſt Reaſoning, and utmoſt Force of divine Eloquence, becoming the Seriouſneſs and Gravity of a Chriſtian Orator. 'Tis a juſt Character, which a late learned Critick [l] gives him, and therefore I think it not improper here to tranſcribe it for the Encouragement of all young Students to read him. "His Eloquence is popular, and very proper for "Preaching; his Style is natural, eaſy and grave; "he equally avoids Negligence and Affectation; "he is neither too plain, nor too florid; he is "Smooth, yet not Effeminate; he uſes all the "Figures that are uſual to good Orators very "properly, without employing falſe Strokes of "Wit; and he never introduces into his Diſ"courſes any Notions of Poets or Prophane "Authors; neither does he divert his Auditory "with Jeſts. His Compoſition is noble, his Ex"preſſions elegant, his Method juſt, and his "Thoughts ſublime; he ſpeaks like a good Fa"ther, and a good Paſtor; he often directs his "Words to the People, and expreſſes them with "a Tenderneſs and Charity becoming an holy "Biſhop; he teaches the principal Truths of "Chriſtianity with a wonderful Clearneſs, and "diverts with a marvellous Art, and an agreeable "way of ranging his Notions, and perſuades by "the ſtrength and ſolidity of his Reaſons; "his Inſtructions are eaſy, his Deſcriptions and "Relations pleaſant; his Inducements ſo meek "and inſinuating, that one is pleaſed to be ſo "perſuaded; his Diſcourſes, how long ſoever, "are not tedious, there are ſtill ſome new Things "that keep the Reader awake, and yet he hath "no falſe Beauties nor uſeleſs Figures; his only "Aim is to convert his Auditors, or to inſtruct "them in neceſſary Truths; he neglects all Re"flections that have more of Subtilty than Pro"fit; he never buſies himſelf to reſolve hard "Queſtions, nor to give myſtical Senſes, to "make a ſhew of his Wit or Eloquence; he "ſearches not into Myſteries, neither endeavours "to comprehend them; he is contented to pro"poſe, after an eaſy Way, palpable and ſenſible "Truths, which none can be ignorant of with"out danger of failing of Salvation; he particu"larly applies himſelf to Moral Heads, and very "ſeldom handleth Speculative Truths; he af"fects not to appear Learned, and never boaſts "of his Erudition; and yet whatever the Sub"ject be, he ſpeaks with Terms ſo ſtrong, ſo "proper, and ſo well choſen, that one may ea"ſily perceive he had a profound Knowledge "of all ſorts of Matters, and particularly of true "Divinity." This is the Character which that judicious Critick gives that famous and eloquent Preacher: And he that will diligently peruſe his Homilies (eſpecially thoſe of his firſt and fifth Volumes, which contain his moſt elaborate Diſcourſes, as alſo thoſe on St. Matthew, St. John, and St. Paul's Epiſtles, where he excels in his Moral Applications) will find his Sermons to anſwer the Character that is given of them, only making ſome Allowances for the different Way and Method then uſed, not ſo agreeable to the Model of Sermons in the preſent Age. I had once ſome Thoughts of publiſhing a Volume of his ſelect Diſcourſes, which I tranſlated for my own Entertainment, when I was unfortunately cut off from other Studies for a whole Year: But becauſe they are not altogether of the preſent Stamp, and many Men have a different Taſte and Reliſh of Things, I chuſe rather to encourage Men to read them in the Original, where they may ſelect what they find proper for their Uſe or Imitation. As for thoſe who can endure to read nothing but what is either Modern, or dreſſed up in the modern Dreſs, I neither court them to read Chryſoſtom, nor any other antient Father; but to others, who can be at Pains to peruſe, and judiciouſly ſelect the Beauties of Style, the Strains of Piety, and the Flights of divine and manly Eloquence, that almoſt every where diſplay themſelves in this Author, I dare venture to ſay, they will never think their Time loſt, nor find themſelves wholly diſappointed in their Expectation. St. Baſil's Homilies come the neareſt to St. Chryſoſtom's in ſolidity of Matter, beauty of Stile, ingenuity of Thought, and ſharpneſs and vivacity of Expreſſion. A Vein of Piety runs equally through them both, and by ſome St. Baſil's are reckoned to come nearer to the Attick Purity and Perfection. Next after theſe, the two Gregories, Nyſſen and Nazianzen, are eſteemed the greateſt Maſters of divine Eloquence; though the latter is rather luxuriant and tedious, by his too frequent and long Similitudes and Digreſſions. Thoſe of Ephrem Syrus were alſo of great Repute in the antient Church, having the Honour to be read as Leſſons after the reading of the Scriptures in many Churches, as has been noted before out of St. Jerom [m]. They are highly commended by Sozomen [n] and Photius [o] for the beauty of their Style and ſublime Thoughts, which were not wholly loſt by being tranſlated out of Syriack into Greek. Gregory Nyſſen [p] is more copious in his Praiſe, and he particularly obſerves, that his Diſcourſes of Morality were ſo full of compaſſionate and affecting Expreſſions, that they were able to move the hardeſt Heart. For who that is proud, ſays he, would not become the humbleſt of Men, by reading his Diſcourſe of Humility? Who would not be inflamed with a divine Fire, by reading his Treatiſe of Charity? Who would not wiſh to be chaſte in Heart and Spirit, by reading the Praiſes he has given to Virginity? Who would not be frighted, to hear the Diſcourſe he has made upon the laſt Judgment, wherein he has repreſented it ſo lively, that nothing can be added to it but the real Appearance of Judgment it ſelf? This is a Character that would tempt any Man to look into them: 'Tis diſputed now among the Criticks, whether thoſe Homilies that go under his Name, be his genuine Off-ſpring? Some utterly reject them, and they who ſay moſt in their Defence, own that they may have loſt ſomething of their native Beauty and Majeſty, by being tranſlated firſt out of Syriack into Greek, and then out of Greek into Latin. And therefore I will not ſo confidently aſſert, they deſerve the Character which Gregory Nyſſen gives of thoſe that were ſo much admired in his time. As for thoſe of Origen, and others who followed him, though they have ſome Flights of Rhetorick, and a Vein of Piety in them, yet they are ſo full of Allegorical and Tropological Interpretations, that they are neither good Expoſitions, nor good Homilies, and fall far ſhort of the Majeſty and Simplicity of thoſe of Chryſoſtom. Among the Latins, thoſe few moral Diſcourſes we have of Cyprian's, whether Homilies or Treatiſes, are excellent in their Kind. And ſo are many of St. Auſtin's, and St. Ambroſe, and Leo the Great, and Petrus Ravennas, who for his Eloquence had the Name of Chryſologus, or the Latin Chryſoſtom; though his Eloquence is of a different Kind, being more like that of Seneca, than of Tully or Demoſthenes, whom Chryſoſtom copied after.

[l] Du Pin Bibliothec. Vol. 3. p. 34.

is

Diſcourſes frequent among the Ancients.

though many of them were ſtudied and elaborate Diſcourſes, penned and compoſed before-hand, yet ſome were alſo Extempore, ſpoken without any previous Compoſition, and taken from their Mouths by the ταχυγράφοι, or Men who underſtood the Art of writing Short-hand in the Church. Origen was the firſt that began this way of Preaching in the Church. But Euſebius [q] ſays, he did it not till he was above ſixty Years old, at which Age, having got a confirmed Habit of Preaching by continual Uſe and Exerciſe, he ſuffered the ταχυγράφοι, or Notaries, to take down his Sermons which he made to the People, which he would never allow before. Pamphilus in his Apology [r] for Origen, ſpeaks the Matter a little more plainly: For he makes it an Inſtance of his Sedulity in Studying and Preaching the Word of God, that he not only compoſed a great number of laborious Treatiſes upon it, but preached almoſt every Day Extempore Sermons in the Church, which were taken from his Mouth by the Notaries, and ſo conveyed to Poſterity by that Means only. The Catechetical Diſcourſes of St. Cyril are ſuppoſed to be of this Kind: For at the beginning of every one almoſt, it is ſaid in the Title to be χειδιαδέασα, which Suidas and other Criticks expound, An Extempore Diſcourſe. St. Jerom ſays, Pierius thus expounded the Scripture [s]. St. Chryſoſtom alſo ſometimes uſed this way of Preaching, being of a ready Invention and fluent Tongue. Sozomen [t] ſays, after his Return from Baniſhment, the People were ſo deſirous to hear him, that he was forced to go up to the Epiſcopal Throne, and make an Extempore Diſcourſe to them, which is now extant [u] in his ſecond Tome in Latin. Suidas alſo gives him this Character [x], that he had a Tongue flowing like the Cataracts of Nile, whereby he ſpake many of his Panegyricks upon the Martyrs Extempore, without any Heſitation. And it appears from ſeveral of his Sermons, that he often took Occaſion in the middle of a Diſcourſe, from ſome accidental Hint that was caſually given, to turn his Eloquence from the Subject in hand, and make ſome Extempore Apoſtrophe to the People, either of Praiſe and Commendation, or of Reproof and Correction, as the Occaſion of the Thing required; as in that Sermon we have already mentioned, n. 8. where he takes Occaſion, from the Peoples turning their Eyes to ſee the lighting of the Candles, to reprove their Negligence [y] in turning away their Attention from him, who was holding forth to them a greater Light from the Holy Scriptures. And there are many other ſuch Apoſtrophes and Occaſional Reflections throughout

SECT. XI. Of Extempore

BUT of all theſe we muſt obſerve another Diſtinction, that [m] Hieron. de Scriptor. cap. 115. [n] Sozom. lib. 3. cap. 16. [o] Phot. Cod. 196. [p] Nyſſen. Vit. Ephrem Syri. t. 3. p. 603. [q] Euſeb. lib. 6. cap. 36. [r] Pamphil. Apol. pro Orig. inter Opera Origen. t. 1. p. 756. Quod præ cæteris Verbo Dei & Doctrinæ operam dederit, dubium non eſt & ex his quæ ad nos laboris & ſtudii ejus certiſſima deſignantur Indicia: Præcipue vero per eos Tractatus, quos pene Quotidie in Eccleſia habebat Extempore, quos & deſcribentes Notarii ad monimentum Poſteritatis tradebant. Dr. Cave reckons his Homilies upon Gen. Exod. Levit. and Numbers, to be all Extempore. Vid. Cave Hiſt. Liter. Vol. 1. p. 78. [s] Hieron. Procem. in Hoſe. [t] Sozom. lib. 8. cap. 18. [u] Chryſ. Sermo poſt Reditum. t. 2. p. 49. in Appendice. [x] Suidas, Voce Joannes. t. 1. p. 1258. τὰς τῶν μῦθλύρων ὃ παννηγύρεις ἐπηύξησεν ἐν τῶν χειδιάζειν ἀνεμπεδίσως, &c. [y] Chryſ. Hom. 4. in Gen. t. 2. p. 902.

his

his Homilies, which muſt needs be Extempore, becauſe the Occaſion of them could not be foreſeen, being they were pure Contingencies, and Things altogether accidental. But Chryſoſtom was not the only Man, whoſe Fluency inabled him to make Extempore Diſcourſes. For Ruffin ſpeaking in Praiſe of Gregory Nazianzen, and St. Baſil, ſays, there were ſeveral of their Sermons extant [z], which they ſpake Extempore in the Church, twenty of which he himſelf had tranſlated into Latin. Socrates gives the ſame Account of Atticus, that though whilſt he was a Presbyter, he was uſed to preach compoſed and ſtudied Sermons, yet afterwards by Induſtry and continued Exerciſe having gained Confidence and a Freedom or Fluency of Speaking, he preached Extempore to the People [a]: And his Sermons were ſo well received by his Auditors, that they took them down in Writing. Sozomen indeed gives a different Account of them: For he ſays [b], his Performances were ſo mean, that though they had a Mixture of heathen Learning in them, yet his Auditors did not think 'em worth Writing. However, they both ſeem to agree in this, that whatever Characters they bare, they were Extempore Diſcourſes. Sidonius Apollinaris ſeems to give the like Account of Fauſtus Biſhop of Riez in France: For he ſays [c], ſome of his Diſcourſes were Repentinæ, and others Elucubratæ, that is, the one ſpoken off-hand, and the others elaborate and ſtudied. And there is nothing more certain, than that St. Auſtin did often uſe the Extempore way. For he ſometimes preached upon Places of Scripture that were accidentally read in the Church, and which he knew nothing of before he came thither. Of which we have an undeniable Inſtance in one of his Homilies [d], where he tells us, he was determined to preach upon a certain Pſalm about Repentance, which he thought nothing of before the Reader chanced to read it of his own Accord in the Church. And in another place he tells us [e], when he had appointed the Reader to read a certain Pſalm, upon which he intended to preach, the Reader in ſome Hurry read another in its room; and this obliged him to preach an Extempore Sermon upon that Pſalm that was ſo accidentally read in the Church. Poſſidius alſo in his Life mentions a Sermon, wherein he left his Subject that he was diſcourſing upon, to diſpute againſt the Manichees, which he had no Thoughts [f] to have done when he firſt began to preach; but he reckoned it was the Providence of God that directed him ſo to do, to cure the Error of ſome latent Manichee in the Congregation. And it is very probable, that many of his Sermons upon the Pſalms were Extempore, becauſe he ſo often uſes the Phraſe, Quantum Deus donaverit, as God ſhould inable him to ſpeak: Which ſeems to imply, that he ſpake without any previous Study or Compoſition. It is evident his Sermon on the lxxxvith Pſalm was of this kind: For he ſays, he would explain it [g] as God ſhould inable him, ſeeing it was appointed by his holy Father the Biſhop then preſent: But ſuch a ſudden Appointment would have been an Oppreſſion, were it not that the Prayers of the Proponent gave him continual Aſſiſtance. For indeed they looked upon it as ſo neceſſary a Work to preach continually, that when they had not time to compoſe before-hand, they doubted not but that the Grace of God, and a peculiar Aſſiſtance of the Spirit, would concur with their honeſt Endeavours in ſuch ſudden Undertakings. Nay, Gregory the Great, who alſo uſed this way in explaining ſome of the moſt difficult Books of Scripture, as particularly Ezekiel, ſcruples [h] not ſo ſay, that he often found thoſe obſcure Places of Scripture, which he could not comprehend in his private Study, to flow in upon his Underſtanding when he was Preaching in publick to his Brethren.

SECT. XII. What meant by Preaching by the Spirit.

AND in regard to this, they are wont frequently to mention the Aſſiſtance of the Spirit, both in compoſing and preaching their Sermons. Thus Chryſoſtom [i] ſays in one of his Sermons, when he had the Happineſs to ſee a large Auditory and a Table well furniſhed with Gueſts, that then he expected the Grace of the Spirit to ſound in his Mind. In another [k], I do not think that I ſpake thoſe Words of my ſelf, but God that foreſaw what would happen put thoſe Words into my Mind. And again [l], ſpeaking of the Preaching of Flavian his Biſhop, he ſays, It was not human Thought that poured forth his Diſcourſe, but the Grace of the Holy Spirit: As it was not the Nature of the Vine, but the Power of Chriſt, that made the Water Wine. St. Auſtin alſo often ſpeaks of ſuch Illapſes and Aſſiſtances of the Spirit in Preaching; which he ſometimes calls the Gift of God [m], ſometimes the Revelation of the Spirit [n]; and ſometimes the Help of God, and his Divine Aſſiſtance. In one place more particularly, ſpeak-[z] Ruffin. Hiſt. lib. 2. cap. 9. Extant quoque utriuſque ingenii monimenta magnifica Tractatuum, quos extempore in Eccleſiis declamabant, &c. [a] Socrat. lib. 7. cap. 2. [b] Sozom lib. 8. cap. 27. [c] Sidon. lib. 9. Ep. 3. ad Fauſtum Regienſem. Licet Prædicationes tuas, nunc Repentinas, nunc, cum Ratio proponcerit, Elucubratas, raucus plauſor audierim, &c. Gennadius de Scriptor. cap. 40. gives the ſame Account of Maximus Taurinenſis. [d] Aug. Serm. 27. ex 50. t. 10. p. 175. See before Book XIV. Chap. i. n. 6. [e] Aug. in Pſal. 138. p. 650. [f] Poſſid. Vit. Aug. cap. 15. [g] Aug. in Pſal. 86. p. 390. Hic nobis, quantum Dominus donare dignatur, cum veſtra Charitate tractandus modo eſt, propoſitus à Beatiſſimo præſente Patre noſtro. Repentina propoſitio me gravaret, niſi me continuò proponentis ſublevaret Oratio. [h] Greg. magn. Hom. 14. in Ezek. p. 1144. Non hoc temeritate aggredior, ſed humilitate. Scio enim, quia plerumque multa in ſacro Eloquio, quæ ſolus intelligere non potui, coram Fratribus meis poſitus intellexi, &c. [i] Chryſ. Hom. 23. de Verbis Apoſt. Habentes eandem Fidem, &c. t. 5. p. 331. προσδοκῶ τὴν τοῦ πνεύματος χάριν ἐπιχυθῆναι ἡμῶν τῇ διανοίᾳ. [k] Hom. 2. ad Pop. Antioch. t. 1. p. 30. [l] Hom. 2. de Verbis Eſaiæ, t. 2. p. 331. [m] Aug. Serm. 17. de Verbis Apoſt. t. 10. p. 132. Donante illo, &c. Et paſſim Sermon. in Pſalmos, 34, 96. [n] Aug. Serm. 15. de Verb. Apoſt. Ut ea quæ ille nobis revelare dignantur, ad vos apte & ſalubriter proferre poſſimus. Vid. ibid. Serm. 14, & 15.

ing of his Unwillingneſs to preach before certain Biſhops when he was but young, he brings them in making this Anſwer: If thou art in Want of Words, Ask and it ſhall be given [o] thee: for it is not ye that ſpeak, but ye miniſter what is given unto you. If a Man would diſingenuouſly interpret theſe and the like Expreſſions of the Ancients, he might make them ſeem to countenance that Preaching by the Spirit, which ſome ſo vainly boaſt of, as if they ſpake nothing but what the Spirit immediately dictated to them, as it did to the Apoſtles, by extraordinary Inſpiration. Which were to ſet every Extempore, as well as compoſed Diſcourſe upon the ſame Level of Infallibility with the Goſpel. Which ſort of Enthuſiaſm the Ancients never dreamed of. For notwithſtanding the Aſſiſtance of the Spirit they ſpeak of, they always put a wide Difference between the Apoſtles Preaching and their own, ſtyling the one infallible and authentick, as we have heard before [p] out of St. Auſtin and others, and themſelves only fallible Expoſitors of the Scripture. All therefore they pretended to from the Aſſiſtance of the Spirit, was only that ordinary Aſſiſtance which Men may expect from the concurrence of the Spirit with their honeſt Endeavours, as a Bleſſing upon their Studies and Labours; that whilſt they were piouſly ingaged in his Service, God would not be wanting to them in ſuch Aſſiſtance as was proper for their Work, eſpecially if they humbly asked it with Sincerity by fervent Supplication and Prayer.

SECT. XIII. What ſort of Prayers they uſed before Sermons, and in, and after them.

AND upon this Account it was uſual for the Preacher many times to uſher in his Diſcourſe with a ſhort Prayer for ſuch divine Aſſiſtance, and alſo to move the People to pray for him. St. Auſtin in the aforeſaid Homily having mentioned the Aſſiſtance of the Spirit, immediately adds, Whither ſhall I betake my ſelf, thus violently preſſed in theſe Straits, but to the Footſtool of Charity, or Grace of the Holy Spirt? And to that I make [q] now my Supplication, that he would grant me Ability to ſpeak ſomething worthy of him, whereby I may at once fulfil my Miniſtry, and ſatisfy your Deſire. And in his Book of Inſtructions of the Chriſtian Orator [r], where he preſcribes many excellent Rules for Preaching, he lays down this among others, that the Chriſtian Orator ſhould pray both for himſelf and others before he begins to Teach; that he may be able to ſpeak thoſe Things that are Holy, Juſt, and Good; and that his Auditors may hear him with Underſtanding, with Willingneſs, and with an obedient Heart. To this End, before he looſes his Tongue to ſpeak, he ſhould lift up his thirſting Soul to God, that he may be able to diſcharge what he has imbibed, and pour forth to others that wherewith he has filled himſelf. And this the rather, becauſe both we and all our Words are in the Hand of God, who teaches us both what to ſpeak, and after what manner to ſpeak. And therefore though Eccleſiaſtical Men ought to learn what they are to Teach, and to get the Faculty of Speaking; yet when the Hour of Speaking comes, they ſhould imagine that what our Lord ſays [s], belongs to every good Soul: Take no thought how or what ye ſhall ſpeak, for it ſhall be given to you in that Hour what ye ſhall ſpeak: for it is not ye that ſpeak, but the Spirit of your Father that ſpeaketh in you. If therefore the Holy Spirit ſpeak in them, who are delivered up to Perſecutors for the Name of Chriſt, why ſhould he not alſo ſpeak in thoſe who preach Chriſt to them that are diſpoſed to learn him? I have related this Paſſage at length, both becauſe it ſhews us, to what Degree they depended on the Spirit's Aſſiſtance in Preaching, and alſo what ſort of Prayers thoſe were which they commonly made before Sermon: viz. not the Common Prayers of the Church, (as ſome miſtake, who meaſure all Uſages of the antient Church by the Cuſtoms of the preſent) but theſe ſhort Prayers for the Aſſiſtance and Conduct of the Spirit, to direct both them and the People in Speaking and Hearing. And where-ever we meet with any mention of Prayer before Sermon, it is to be underſtood only of this ſhort ſort of Prayers, in antient Writers. Such as that of St. Auſtin's in one of his Homilies upon the Pſalms, which begins with theſe Words: Attend to the Pſalm, and the Lord [t] grant us Ability to open the Myſteries that are contained in it. He begins another thus: My Lords and Brethren, (meaning the Biſhops then preſent) and the Lord of all by them, have commanded me to diſcourſe upon this Pſalm, that you may underſtand it [u] ſo far as the Lord ſhall grant us Underſtanding. And may he by your Prayers aſſiſt me, that I may ſpeak ſuch Things as I ought to ſpeak, and ſuch as ye ought to hear: that the Word of God may be profitable to us all. In this Senſe we are to underſtand St. Chryſoſtom, when he ſays, we muſt firſt [o] Aug. Serm. 46. de Tempore, t. 10. p. 240. Si Sermo deeſt, pete & accipies. Non enim vos eſtis qui loquimini: Sed quod datur vobis, hoc miniſtratis nobis. It. de Doctrina Chriſti. lib. 4. cap. 15. he has more to the ſame Purpoſe. [p] Aug. Ep. 19. ad Hieron. See before in this Chap. n. 1. [q] Aug. Hom. 46. de Tempore. His coarctatus anguſtiis, quo me conferam, niſi ad ſancta Veſtigia Charitatis? Eamque deprecor, ut donet mihi aliquid dignum de ſe dicere, quo & meum Miniſterium, & Veſtrum ſatiem Deſiderium. Vid. Hom. 51. de Diverſis.

[r] De Doctrin. Chriſt. lib. 4. cap. 15. Noſter Eloquens, orando pro ſe, ac pro illis quos eſt allocuturus, ſit Orator antequam Dictor. (al. Doctor,) Ipſa hora jam ut dicat accedens, priuſquam exerat proferentem Linguam, ad Deum levet animam ſitientem, ut eructet quod biberit, vel quod impleverit fundat, &c. [s] Ibid. Ad horam vero ipſius Dictionis illud potius bonæ menti cogitet convenire quod Dominus ait: Nolite cogitare quomodo aut quid loquamini: dabitur enim vobis in illa hora quid loquamini: Non enim vos eſtis qui loquimini, ſed Spiritus Patris veſtri qui loquitur in vobis. Si ergo loquitur in eis Spiritus Sanctus qui perſequentibus traduntur pro Chriſto, cur non & in eis qui tradunt diſcentibus Chriſtum? [t] Aug. in Pſal. 91. p. 417. Attendite ad Pſalmum: Det nobis Dominus aperire myſteria quæ hic continentur. [u] In Pſal. 139. Juſſerunt Domini fratres, & in ipſis Dominus omnium, ut ipſum Pſalmum afferam ad vos intelligendum, quantum Dominus donat. Adjuvet orationibus veſtris, ut ea dicam quæ oportet me dicere & vos audire: uti omnibus nobis ſit utilis ſermo divinus.

[x] pray, and then preach: So St. Paul does, praying in the Prefaces of his Epiſtles, that the Light of Prayer, as the Light of a Candle, may lead the way to his Diſcourſes. Such is that Prayer, which St. Ambroſe [y] is ſaid to uſe before his Sermons: I beſeech thee, O Lord, and earneſtly intreat thee, give me an humble Knowledge, which may edify; give me a meek and prudent Eloquence, which knows not how to be puffed up, or vaunt it ſelf upon its own Worth and Endowments above its Brethren. Put into my Mouth, I beſeech thee, the Word of Conſolation, and Edification, and Exhortation, that I may be able to exhort thoſe that are Good to go on to greater Perfection, and reduce thoſe that walk perverſely to the Rule of thy Righteouſneſs, both by my Word and by my Example. Let the Words, which thou giveſt to thy Servant, be as the ſharpeſt Darts and burning Arrows, which may penetrate and inflame the Minds of my Hearers to thy Fear and Love. But this ſeems rather to have been a private Prayer of St. Ambroſe between God and himſelf, as Biſhop Wettenhall [z] and Mr. Thorndike [†] underſtand it: Who are yet miſtaken in one Thing, when they ſuppoſe that the Common Prayers of the Church came before the Sermon, and that there were no other Prayers before Sermon but thoſe: For nothing is more certain, than that the Common Prayers did not begin till the Sermon was ended; and yet there were ſuch ſhort Prayers for Grace and Aſſiſtance, as we are ſpeaking of, peculiarly adapted to the Buſineſs of Preaching and Hearing, and not reſpecting any other Subject. And ſometimes the Peoples Prayers were required to be joyned with them, as appears from that of St. Auſtin [a] in one of his Homilies upon the Pſalms, where he deſires the People to aſſiſt him with their Prayers to the Lord, that he would grant him Ability to explain the latent Myſteries and Difficulties of the Pſalms, as well for their Sakes as his own. In Origen's Homilies upon Geneſis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Kings, Jeremy, Ezekiel and St. Luke, there are abundance of ſuch ſhort Prayers, not only in the beginning of his Diſcourſes, but ſometimes alſo in the middle of them, when any more abſtruſe Paſſage of Scripture preſented it ſelf to Conſideration; and generally in the Cloſe, he makes another ſuch ſhort Prayer in a few Words ſuitable to the Subject; ſometimes praying for himſelf and the People, and ſometimes exhorting them to pray for themſelves and him. All which being produced at large in a noted Book of Mr. Daille's [b], I ſhall not think it needful to tranſcribe them in this Place. But I cannot omit to obſerve, that as St. Auſtin often began his Sermon with a ſhort Prayer, ſo he uſually ended it with another of the like Nature: The Forms of which are ſome of them now to be found at the end of ſeveral of his Homilies. In ſome of them [c] we have this Form at length, Let us now turn to the Lord God, our Father Almighty, with a pure Heart, and give him Thanks with all our Might, beſeeching his ſingular Clemency, with our whole Soul, that of his good Pleaſure he would vouchſafe to hear our Prayers; that he would drive away the Enemy from all our Thoughts and Actions by his Power; that he would increaſe our Faith, govern our Minds, grant us ſpiritual Thoughts, and conduct us to everlaſting Happineſs, through Jeſus Chriſt his Son, our Lord, who liveth and reigneth with him in the Unity of the Holy Ghoſt, one God, World without End. Amen. And in many other Homilies this Prayer is referred to as a known Form [d] uſed frequently by him in the Cloſe of his Sermons. Converſi ad Dominum, &c. But he ſometimes varied and ſhortned this Form, as the Matter of his Sermon required. Thus in his long Sermon upon the Reſurrection [e], having ſaid that the Saints in the next World will keep a perpetual Sabbath, and have nothing to do but to ſing Allelujah; and applying the Words of the Pſalmiſt to this Purpoſe, Bleſſed are they that dwell in thy Houſe, for they will be always praiſing Thee; he concludes his Sermon with this Prayer: Let us turn to the Lord, and beſeech him for our ſelves, and all the People that ſtand with us in the Courts of his Houſe: Which Houſe may he vouchſafe to preſerve and protect, through Jeſus Chriſt his Son, our Lord, who liveth and reigneth with him, World without End. Amen. In another of his Homilies (a Fragment of which is cited by Sirmond [f] as it is preſerved in Eugippius's Collections out of St. Auſtin's Works) he has another Form in theſe Words: Let us turn to the Lord, and bleſs his Name, that we may have Grace to perſevere in his Commandments, to walk in the Way of his Inſtructions, and pleaſe him in every good Work, &c. From all which it is manifeſt, they uſed ſuch ſhort Prayers both in the Beginning and Concluſion of their Sermons, and ſometimes, as Occaſion required, in the Middle of them alſo, and that theſe were diſtinct from the Common Prayers of the Church.

SECT. XIV.

The Salutation, Pax vobis, The Lord be with you, commonly uſed before Sermons.

BEFORE they began to preach, it was uſual alſo in many Places, to uſe the common Salutation, Pax vobis, Peace be unto you, or, The Lord be with you, which was the uſual Preface and Introduction to all holy Offices, to which the People answered, And with thy Spirit. This the Author of the Constitutions calls προόρησιν, the Salutation, giving this Rule to the Bishop newly ordained: After the reading of the Law, and the Prophets, and the Epistles, and the Acts, and the Gospels, let him [g] salute the Church, saying, The Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the Love of God the Father, and the Fellowship of the Holy Ghost, be with you all: And let all the People answer, And with thy Spirit: And after this Salutation, μετὰ τὴν προόρησιν, let him speak to the People the Words of Exhortation. And that this Author did not impose any new Custom upon the Church, appears from Chrysostom, who in several of his Homilies makes mention of it. In his third Homily upon the Colossians, he says, The Bishop when he first entred the Church, said, Peace be unto you all; and when he began [h] to preach, Peace be unto you all. And a little before he says, the Bishops used it ἐντεῦθεν προῤῥήσεσι, by which he means their Sermons, or at least, the Form of Salutation it self ushering in the Sermon, as we have seen the Author of the Constitutions understands it. Chrysostom [i] adds, that the People returned the Salutation of Peace to him that gave it, saying, And with thy Spirit. In another place he says, nothing is comparable to Peace and Unity: And for this Reason the Father, the Bishop, when he enters the Church, before he goes up to his Throne, prays for Peace to all; and when he rises up to preach, he does not begin to Discourse [k] before he has given the Peace to all. In other places he opens the Reason of this Practice by declaring the original Intent and Design of it. For, he says, it was an antient Custom in the Apostles Days, when the Rulers of the Church had the Gift of Inspiration, and spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, for the People to say to the Preacher, Peace be with thy Spirit: Therefore now when we begin to preach [l], the People answer, And with thy Spirit: Shewing, that heretofore they spake not by their own Wisdom, but as they were moved by the Spirit. And though this Gift of extraordinary Inspiration was ceased, yet all Preachers still were presumed to be under the Conduct and Assistance of the Spirit in a lower Degree: And therefore he says [m] in another Place, that the Holy Ghost was in their common Father and Teacher, meaning the Bishop, when he went up into the Episcopal Throne, and gave the Peace to them all, and they with one Voice answered, And with thy Spirit. And this, not only when he went into his Throne, but also when he preached to them, when he prayed, and when he stood by the Holy Table to offer the Oblation. And by this we may understand what Sozomen [n] and others say of Chrysostom after his Return from Banishment, that the People forced him against his Will, before he was Synodically re-instated, to go up into the Throne, and give them the Peace in the usual Form, and preach to them. Optatus speaks of the same Custom in Africk both in the Beginning and End of their Sermons. For he says [o], they used a double Salutation: The Bishop never began to speak to the People, before he had first saluted them in the Name of God. Every Sermon in the Church began in the Name of God, and ended in the Name of the same God. And by this he proves, that Macarius, the Emperor's Officer, did not take upon him the Office of a Bishop among the Catholicks, as the Donatists falsely objected against them. For tho' he spake to the People in the Church, yet it was upon some other Business, and not by way of Preaching, which was the Office of Bishops, which they always began and ended with this Salutation: But Macarius used no such Salutation: And from thence he argues that he did not preach. Bona [p] cites also Athanasius's Epistle to Eustathius, where he inveighs against the Arian Bishops, who in the beginning of their Sermons used that kind Word, Peace be with you, and yet were always harassing others, and tragically ingaged in War. But as there is no Epistle under that Title among Athanasius's Works, I let it rest upon the Credit of our Author.

[x] Chryſ. Hom. 28. de Incomprehenſibili Dei Natura, t. 1. p. 363. πρότερον εὐχὴ καὶ τότε λόγος, &c. [y] Ambroſ. Orat. ap. Ferrarium de Concionib. Veter. lib. 1. cap. 8. Obſecro Domine, & ſuppliciter rogo, da mihi ſemper humilem Scientiam, quæ ædificet, ad mitiſſimam ſapientem Eloquentiam, quæ neſciat inflari, & de ſuis bonis ſuper Fratres extolli, &c. [z] Wettenhal, Gift of Prayer, Chap. 4. p. 116. [†] Thorndike's Juſt Weights and Meaſures, Chap. 16. [a] Aug. in Pſal. 147. p. 699. Aſſit ergo nobis apud Dominum Deum noſtrum iſte affectus Precum veſtrarum: Etſi non propter nos, certe propter vos donare dignetur, quod hic abſconditum latet. Vid. Homil. 50. de Diverſis. Orate ut poſſimus, &c. [b] Dallæ. de Objecto Cultus Relig. lib. 3. cap. 13. [c] Aug. Serm. 30. de Verb. Dom. t. 10. Et Serm. 102. de Diverſis, & 120. Et Serm. 18. ex editis a Sirmondo. [d] Aug. de Verb. Dom. 1, 5, 7, 8, 10, 14, 31, 32, 37, 40, & paſſim Homiliis de Diverſis. [e] De Diverſ. Ser. 121. [f] Fragment. Homil. ex Eugippii Theſauro, lib. 2. cap. 288. ap. Sirmond. Not. in Aug. Homil. 18. a ſe edit. Audiſtis me, credo, fratres mei, quando dico, Converſi ad Dominum benedicamus nomen ejus, de nobis perſeverare in mandatis ſuis, ambulare in via Eruditionis ſuæ, placere illi in omni opere bono, &c. ne vos ſine cauſa Amen ſubſcribatis.

SECT. XV. But the Use of Ave Maries before Sermons, unknown to the Ancients.

BUT I cannot but observe, That among all the short Prayers used by the Ancients before their Sermons, there is never any mention of an Ave Mary, now so common in the Practice of the Romish Church. Their Addresses were all to God; and the Invocation of the holy Virgin for Grace and Assistance before Sermons, was a Thing not thought of. They who are most concerned to prove its Use, can derive its Original no higher than the Beginning of the fifteenth Century. For Ferrarius [q] ingenuously confesses, that Vincentius Ferrerius was the first Ecclesiastical Writer that ever used it before his Sermons. Baronius has not a Syllable of its Antiquity in all his Twelve Centuries; there being a perfect Silence both among the Ancients and all the Ritualists about it, till that Dominican Preacher in his abundant Zeal for the Worship of the holy Virgin, began to use it before his Sermons; from whose Example (for he was a celebrated Preacher in the Age he lived) it gained such Reputation and Authority, as not only to be prefixed before all their Sermons, but to be adapted and joyned with the Lord's Prayer in the Roman Breviary. Ferrarius says all he can can to justify a Novelty; but nothing can clear this Hyperdulia of Idolatry; and he might have spared his Censure of Erasmus, who says a witty Thing upon it, That their Preachers were used to invoke the Virgin Mother in the Beginning of their Discourses, as the Heathen Poets were used to do their Muses: For Epiphanius would have said much severer Things against it, had he had the like Occasion given him to inveigh against this Idolatry, as he had to censure that of the Collyridians: But then this Idolatry was confined to the weaker Sex, and had not yet made its way into the Pulpits, or any part of the Liturgy of the antient Church, when Preachers were used to pray for Grace and Assistance only from Him, who is the proper Donor of it.

[g] Constit. lib. 8. cap. 5. ἀσπασάσθω ὁ χειροτονηθεὶς τὴν ἐκκλησίαν, λέγων, ἡ χάρις τοῦ κυρίου. &c. [h] Chrys. Hom. 3. in Colos. p. 1338. ὅταν ὁμιλῇ, λέγει εἰρήνη πᾶσιν, &c. [i] Ibid. p. 1339. ἀντιδόντες τῷ διδόντι τὴν εἰρήνην, &c. [k] Hom. 52. in eos qui Pascha jejunant, t. 5. p. 713. ἀναστὰς ὁ πρότερον ἀρχεται τῆς πρὸς ὑμᾶς διδασκαλίας, ἕως ἂν ἅπασιν ὑμῖν εἰρήνην ἐπιδείξηται. [l] Chrys. Hom. 36. in 1 Cor. p. 652. [m] Hom. 36. de Pentecost. t. 5. p. 553. [n] Sozom. lib. 8. cap. 18. [o] Optat. lib. 3. ad calcem. lib. 7. p. 112 Episcopalis Tractatus probatur Salutatione geminata. Non enim aliquid incipit Episcopus ad populum dicere, nisi primò in nomine Dei populum salutaverit. Similes sunt Exitus Initiis. Omnis Tractatus in Ecclesia à nomine Dei incipitur, & ejusdem Dei nomine terminatur, &c. It. lib. 3. p. 73. Salutas de Pace, qui non amas. [p] Bona. Rerum Liturgic. lib. 2. cap. 2. n. 1. [q] Ferrar. de Ritu Concion. lib. 1. cap. 11. p. 30.

SECT. XVI. Sometimes their Sermons were prefaced with a Benediction.

I observe farther, That as their Sermons were thus usually prefaced with a short Prayer, so they were sometimes introduced with a short Form of Benediction. This seems to have been peculiar to Times of Calamity and Distress, or to happy Deliverances out of them. There are Instances of both kinds in Chrysostom's Sermons to the People of Antioch, when they were under Apprehensions of being destroyed by the Emperor's Displeasure. His fourth Sermon begins thus: Blessed be God, who hath comforted your sorrowful Souls, and comforted your wavering Minds. His eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, and twentieth Homilies begin much after the same manner. And his Homily after his return from Banishment [r] is thus prefaced: What shall I say? What shall I speak? Blessed be God. This was the Word which I spake when I went away; and this I repeat now at my Return. And this he tells them, he did after the Example of Job, who in Adversity, as well as Prosperity, said always, Blessed be the Name of the Lord.

SECT. XVII. Sometimes preached without any Text, and sometimes upon more Texts than one.

IT appears farther from those Homilies [s], and several others both in him and other Writers, that they sometimes preached without any Text; only treating of such Matters as they thought most proper for the Occasion. But most commonly they took their Text out of some Paragraph of the Psalms or Lessons, as they were read. And sometimes they so ordered the Matter, as to preach upon the Psalm, the Epistle and Gospel all together, when they were either accidentally, or by their own Appointment, upon the same Subject. Thus St. Austin preached upon the Subject of Praise and Thanksgiving out of the Epistle, the Psalm, and the Gospel [t] together, because they had all something relating to his Subject. But they never shewed so little Reverence for Scripture, as to chuse their Text out of Aristotle's Ethicks, as Sixtinus Amama [u] tells us one of the Romish Preachers did at Paris in the hearing of Melancthon.

SECT. XVIII. Their Sermons always upon Important Subjects.

NEITHER did they entertain their Auditory with light and ludicrous Matters, or fabulous and romantick Stories, such as those with which Preaching so much abounded in the Age before the Reformation; of which Erasmus [x], and Faber [y], and Hottinger [z] and many other learned Men have made so great and so just Complaints. There is one Instance given by Hottinger out of one of their authentick Books of Homilies, which for its singular Vanity, and to shew the Difference between the antient and the modern Way of Edifying a Popular Auditory, I shall here transcribe out of him, as he relates it in his History. He says, in a Book of Sermons [a] composed by the Theological Faculty of Vienna, An. 1430, which was read in their Monasteries and their Churches, this ridiculous Story is told, to recommend their Reliques to the People; That the 30 Pieces of Gold (though the Scripture calls them Silver) which Judas had for betraying his Master, were coined by Terah, Abraham's Father; who was a famous Artificer under King Nimrod; that he gave them to his Son Abraham; that Abraham therewith purchased the Field of Ephron the Hittite; from whence they came into the Hands of the Ishmaelites, who therewith bought Joseph when his Brethren sold him into Egypt; that Joseph's Brethren paid them to Joseph, when they went to buy Corn in Egypt, and so they came into the King of Egypt's Treasury; that hence they were given to Moses, when the King of Egypt sent him with an Army to subdue Ethiopia; that Moses upon this Occasion gave them as a Dowry to the Queen of Sheba; and the Ethiopian Queen afterward made a Present of them to King Solomon; who put them into the Treasury, where they continued, till Nebuchadnezzar among the Spoil seized them in the Devastation of Jerusalem; Nebuchadnezzar having an Arabian King among his Auxiliaries, made a Present of them unto him; and of him sprang one of those Eastern Kings, who came to worship Christ at his Birth, and made a Present of them to the Virgin Mary; and the Virgin, when she presented her Son in the Temple, made them an Offering for her Purification. So this very Silver (which was Gold before) was the Price which Judas had for betraying his [r] Chrys. Homil. post Reditum. T. 2. [s] Chrys. Hom. 3, 4, 5, 6. ad Popul. Antioch. [t] Aug. de Verbis Apost. Serm. 10. T. 10. p. 112. Has tres Lectiones, quantum pro tempore possumus, pertractemus, dicentes pauca de singulis, & quantum conari possumus, adjuvante Domino, non in aliqua earum immorantes, &c. [u] Sixtin. Amama, Orat. de Barbarie. Cited by Mr. Seller, Life of Justin Martyr. p. 123. [x] Erasm. Moriæ Encomium. p. 176, &c. [y] Joannes Faber, Declamat. de Humanæ Vitæ miseria. ap. Hottinger. Hist. Eccl. Sæcul. 16. Part. 4. p. 1271. [z] Hotting. 16. Sæcul. Par. 3. p. 263, &c. [a] Id. Sæcul. 15. p. 63. St. Bernard's Censure of such Trifles is, Inter Seculares nugæ, nugæ sunt: in ore Sacerdotis Blasphemiæ. De Consider. lib. 2. cap. 13.

Maſter. And theſe ſilver Pieces are there ſaid to be diſperſed over all the World, and kept as ſacred Relicks, one of which in Gold as big as an Engliſh Noble is ſhewed at Rome in the Entrance of St. Peter's Church. One would hardly believe, that ſuch abſurd and ridiculous Fictions ſhould have been authorized from the Pulpit among the Rules of Eternal Life, had not undeniable Proof been often made [b], that their Breviaries and Legends, as well as Sermons, before the Reformation, were ſtuffed with ſuch Fables; though I believe, this Story out-does any in the Golden Legend, (of which Ludovicus Vives [c] and Melchior Canus [d] ſo much complain) and Jacobus de Voragine was but an Aſs to theſe Men for Invention. Now let us ſee how the antient way of Preaching differed from this. Juſtin Martyr makes it a plain, but a very edifying Way of Inſtruction. For he ſays, When the Writings of the Apoſtles and Prophets were read, the Biſhop made a Diſcourſe to exhort and excite the People to imitate and tranſcribe into their Practice the good [e] Things they had heard read out of them. Their Subjects, as Gregory Nazianzen [f] deſcribes the Choice of them, were commonly ſuch as theſe, Of the World's Creation, and the Soul of Man; of Angels, as well thoſe that kept, as thoſe that loſt their firſt Integrity; of Providence, and its wiſe Laws and Conſtitutions; of the Formation of Man and his Reſtoration; of the two Covenants, the Types of the Old, and the Antitypes of the New; of Chriſt's firſt and ſecond Coming; of his Incarnation and Paſſion; of the general Reſurrection and End of the World; of the Day of Judgment, and the Rewards of the Juſt, and the Puniſhment of the Wicked; and above all of the Doctrine of the Trinity, which was the principal Article of the Chriſtian Faith. In like manner Chryſoſtom puts his Auditors [g] in mind of what Matters he had uſed to preach to them, of the Nature of the Soul, of the Fabrick of the Body, of the State of Immortality, of the Kingdom of Heaven, and the Torments of Hell, of the Long-ſuffering of God, and the Methods of Pardon, of the Powers of Repentance, of Baptiſm, and the Forgiveneſs of Sins, of the Creation of the Superior and Inferior World, of the Nature of Men and Angels; of the Subtilty of Satan, and his Methods and Policies; of the different Opinions of the Chriſtian World; of the true Faith, and the Gangrene of Hereſies, and other ſuch Myſteries, which it behoves a Chriſtian to be acquainted with.

SECT. XIX. And delivered in a Way moſt affecting and ſuitable to the Capacities of their Hearers, with Perſpicuity, Pleaſure, and Force of Argument.

AND as they were thus careful in the Choice of their Subjects, ſo they were no leſs careful to put their well-choſen Matter into the moſt uſeful and pleaſing Dreſs; that they might anſwer the true Ends of Chriſtian Oratory, and (as the wiſe Man words it) make their Apples of Gold appear the more beautiful by being ſet in Pictures of Silver. The Deſign of Chriſtian Oratory, as St. Auſtin [h] obſerves, is either to inſtruct Men in the Truth, or to refute their Errors, or to perſwade them to the Practice of Holineſs and Virtue, and diſſuade them from the contrary Vices. The firſt of theſe requires plain Narration: The ſecond, Strength of Argument and Ratiocination: And the third, the Art and Power of moving the Mind and Affections. And in doing each of theſe, the Chriſtian Orator, as he never ſpeaks any thing but what is holy, juſt, and good, ſo he endeavours to ſpeak theſe in ſuch a Manner, as that he may be heard with Underſtanding, with Pleaſure, and with Obedience [i], as the chief Thing of all. That he may be heard with Underſtanding, he ſpeaks every thing with a natural Plainneſs and Perſpicuity, and alſo a Regard to Mens Capacities and Apprehenſions. He reckons the greateſt Oratory of no Uſe, if it cannot be underſtood: For what ſignifies a golden Key [k], if it cannot open what we intend? A wooden Key is of more Uſe, if it will anſwer the true Deſign of a Key, which is only to open what is locked up and ſhut before. Therefore the Chriſtian Orator labours chiefly at Perſpicuity in his Speech, never thinking he has done Juſtice to any Truth by his Eloquence, unleſs he has alſo delivered it with a ſufficient Evidence to Men of reaſonable Capacities and Comprehenſions. There are ſome things, which are unintelligible in their own Nature, or not to be underſtood by the ordinary Sort of Men, though they be ſpoken with never ſo much Plainneſs of the Orator: And therefore ſuch things are ſeldom or never, without great Neceſſity, to be handled in a popular [l] Audience. For the ſame Reaſon, he that ſtudies Perſpicuity and Evidence, will ſometimes neglect rhetorical Expreſſions, and not regard how ſonorous, but how ſignificant his Words are, to intimate and declare his Senſe to the Minds of his Hearers. For there is a diligens Negligentia, an uſeful Negligence, proper in this Caſe to Eccleſiaſtical Teachers, who muſt ſometimes condeſcend to Improprieties of Speech, when they cannot ſpeak otherwiſe to the Apprehenſions of the Vulgar. As he notes, that they were uſed to ſay Oſſum inſtead of Os, to diſtinguiſh a Mouth from a Bone in Africk, to comply with the Underſtandings [m] of their Hearers. For what Advantage is there in Purity of Speech, when the Hearer underſtands it not, ſeeing there is no Occaſion at all of ſpeaking, if they, for whoſe ſake we ſpeak to be underſtood, apprehend not what we ſay? And for this Reaſon, I doubt not, there are ſo many Africaniſms, or Idioms of the African Tongue in St. Auſtin, becauſe he thought it more commendable ſometimes to deviate a little from the ſtrict Grammatical Purity and Propriety of the Latin Tongue, than not be underſtood by his Hearers. This was a laudable Condeſcenſion in every reſpect, and much valued by the Ancients, who thought it the firſt Office of a Preacher, to ſpeak always to the Capacity and Underſtanding of his Hearers. 'Tis this, which Nazianzen [n] ſo highly commends in Athanaſius, That he tempered his Style according to the Difference of his Auditory: He condeſcended to ſpeak to mean Capacities in a lower way, whilſt to the Acute, his Words and Notions were more ſublime. And there was but one Caſe in which they affected to ſpeak any thing darkly and obſcurely, and that was when they preached in a mixed Auditory, where the Catechumens were preſent, from whom they purpoſely intended to conceal the profounder Knowledge of ſome of the Chriſtian Myſteries for a Time, and therefore they uſually ſpake of them in a covert Way, with an ἴσασιν ὁι μεμυημένοι, the Initiated know what we mean, as being well underſtood by them, though they ſpake only by Hints and dark Terms upon the account of the Catechumens: Of the Reaſons of which Diſcipline and Practice, I have ſpoken largely heretofore [*], and therefore need ſay no more of it in this Place.

[b] See Patrick's Devotions of the Rom. Church. Lond. 1674. 8°. [c] Lud. Vives de Tradend. Diſciplinis. lib. 5. p. 360. [d Canus, Loci Theolog. lib. 11. cap. 6. p. 533. [e] Juſtin. Apol. 2. p. 98. [f] Naz. Orat. 1. de Fuga. p. 15. [g] Chryſ. Hom. 24. de Baptiſmo Chriſti. t. 1. p. 309. [h] Aug. de Doctrina Chriſt. lib. 4. cap. 4. [i] Ibid. cap. 15. Agit noſter Eloquens, cum & juſta, & ſancta & bona dicit (neque enim alia debet dicere): Agit ergo quantum poteſt, cum iſta dicit, ut Intelligenter, ut Libenter, ut Obedienter audiatur. [k] Ibid cap. 11. Quid enim prodeſt clavis aurea, ſi aperire quod volumus non poteſt? Aut quid obeſt lignea, ſi hoc poteſt, quando nihil quærimus, niſi patere quod clauſum eſt? [l] Aug. Ibid. lib. 4. cap. 9. [m] Ibid. cap. 10. Cur Pietatis Doctorem pigeat imperitis loquentem Oſſum potius quam Os dicere, &c.

rity

The next Thing which St. Auſtin commends in his Chriſtian Orator, is, That he labours to be heard with Pleaſure. Ut Intelligenter, ut Libenter. For though a plain Declaration of Truth may ſatisfy thoſe, who regard nothing but Truth; yet the greater Part of Men love Sweetneſs and Ornament of Speech: And therefore if it be unpleaſant, the Benefit of it will reach but very few, who are deſirous to hear what they ought to learn, though it be in a mean and uncomely [o] Dreſs: But the Generality of Men are not pleaſed with this: Some Similitude between Eating and Speaking: And therefore becauſe weak Stomachs cannot reliſh their moſt neceſſary Food, without which they cannot live, their Food is to be ſeaſoned to make it pleaſant for them. Upon this account he commends the Saying of an antient Orator, who ſaid truly, That an Orator [p] ought ſo to ſpeak, as not only to teach and inſtruct, but alſo to delight and move. And ſome Hearers are to be induced to hear by the Pleaſure of a Diſcourſe, which ariſes from the Sweetneſs, and Beauties, and Ornaments of it. St. Chryſoſtom inculcates the ſame Rule, in deſcribing the Office of a Biſhop, whoſe Task, he ſays, was ſomething the more difficult upon this Account [q], becauſe Men had generally nice and delicate Palates, and were inclined to hear Sermons as they heard Plays, rather for Pleaſure than Profit: Which added to the Preacher's Study and Labour; who, though he was to contemn both popular Applauſe and Cenſure, yet was he alſo to have ſuch a Regard to his Auditory, as that they might hear him with Pleaſure, to their Edification and Advantage. It was not required, indeed, that every Preacher ſhould ſpeak with the Smoothneſs of Iſocrates, or the Loftineſs of Demoſthenes, or the Majeſty of Thucydides, or the Sublimity of Plato, as the ſame St. Chryſoſtom [r] words it. Lower Degrees of Eloquence, ſays St. Auſtin, would pleaſe a Chriſtian Auditory, provided he had a decent Regard to the common Rules of Eloquence, to ſay nothing Obtusè, Deformiter, Frigide, nothing that was blunt, nothing that was indecent or unbecoming, nothing that was cold or languid; but every thing Acutè, Ornatè, Vehementer, with Sharpneſs, and Handſomeneſs, and Force: Which are St. Auſtin's Rules in this very Caſe [s]. Or if Men could not attain to this Perfection of exotick Eloquence, yet there was a manly and majeſtick Eloquence, an Art of Speaking wiſely, which no one could fail of, that would diligently ſtudy the Holy Scriptures. For there the Subject is not only great and divine, but the Diction alſo eloquent and beautiful, as St. Auſtin ſhews in ſeveral [t] Inſtances out of the Apoſtles and Prophets; the Style not glittering with Sallies, and Flaſhes of Juvenile Wit (which would not become a manly Eloquence) but altogether agreeable to the Dignity and Authority of the Perſons who were the inſpired Authors of it; who ſpake with an Eloquence becoming both themſelves and their Subjects; ſuch as is no ways inferior to the Eloquence many times of the greateſt Maſters and Pretenders to it, and for its Wiſdom (which is the moſt true divine Eloquence) far exceeds them. They therefore who were well verſed both in the Phraſe and Senſe of the Scriptures, and knew how to make a proper Uſe and Application of them, could never want true Eloquence to recommend their Diſcourſes with Pleaſure to their Hearers. And indeed the very Cuſtom of applauding the Preachers

[n] Naz. Orat. 21. de Laud. Athan. p. 396. [*] Book x. Chap. v. [o] Aug. de Doctrin. Chriſt. lib. 4. cap. 11. Si fiat inſuaviter, ad paucos quidem Studioſiſſimos ſuus pervenit fructus, qui ea quæ diſcenda ſunt, quamvis abjecte inculteque dicantur, ſcire deſiderant——Sed quoniam inter ſe habent nonnullam ſimilitudinem Veſcentes atque Dicentes, propter faſtidia plurimorum etiam ipſa ſine quibus vivi non poteſt, alimenta condienda ſunt.
[p] Aug. ibid. cap. 12. Dixit ergo quidam Eloquens, & verum dixit, ita dicere debere Eloquentem, ut doceat, ut delectet, ut flectat.—Ut teneatur ad audiendum, delectandus eſt Auditor: Et delectatur, ſi ſuaviter loquaris. [q] Chryſ. de Sacerdotio. lib. 5. cap. 1. [r] Chryſ. ibid. lib. 4. cap. 6. [s] Aug. de Doct. Chriſt. lib. 4. cap. 5. Cum alii faciant Obtuſe, Deformiter, Frigide; alii Acute, Ornate, Vehementer; illum ad hoc opus jam oportet accedere, qui poteſt diſputare vel dicere Sapienter, etiamſi non poteſt Eloquenter.——Sapienter autem dicit homo tanto magis vel minus, quanto in Scripturis ſanctis magis minuſve profecit.
[t] Ibid. cap. 6. & 7.

publickly

publickly in the Church (of which more by and by) is a certain Evidence that they were commonly heard with Pleaſure.

The laſt Thing which St. Auſtin commends in the Chriſtian Orator, is, That he endeavours to be heard Obedienter; that is, ſpeaks to the Conviction and Perſuaſion of his Hearers; Convincing their Judgments by ſound and ſolid Reaſonings; and raiſing the Affections, and drawing them into Compliance, by ſuch Motives, and Methods, and Addreſſes, as are proper to work upon the ſeveral Paſſions of human Nature, and bend and ſubdue the Will, and lead it Captive into the Obedience of Faith. When the ſacred Orator has done this, he is at his utmoſt Height: Then he leads his Hearers, as it were willingly in Triumph, having gained a compleat and pleaſing Victory over them. For, as St. Auſtin again obſerves, till Men are wrought into Compliance and Obedience by the Orator, they are not properly conquered by him. For they may be taught [u] and pleaſed, and yet yield no Compliance or practical Aſſent; without which, the two former are of no Advantage: But when his Oratory has gained their Wills, it has then ſubdued all Oppoſition, and gotten a compleat Victory. Now this is done, as St. Auſtin there goes on to intimate, when the Orator can bring Men to love what he promiſes, to fear what he threatens, to hate what he rebukes, to embrace what he commends, to ſorrow for what he aggravates as ſorrowful, to rejoice at what he amplifies as Matter of Rejoicing, to commiſerate thoſe whom he repreſents before their Eyes as Objects of Compaſſion, to avoid and fly from thoſe whom he brands and ſtigmatizes as dangerous Perſons, and gives them terrible Apprehenſions of, as Men with whom it is not ſafe to converſe: And whatever elſe may be done by Force of grand Eloquence, to move the Minds of the Hearers, not to know what they are to do, but to do what they already know to be their Duty to do. This he calls by the Name of Grandis Eloquentia, & gravis [x], grand and grave Eloquence, and oppoſes it to what he calls ſpumeus Verborum ambitus, that light and frothy ſort of Eloquence, which conſiſts only in a jingling Multiplicity of Words, which does not become any Subject, much leſs the Gravity of a Chriſtian Diſcourſe upon the weightieſt and moſt ſerious of all Subjects, where nothing is ſaid but what is great, as having no regard to the Affairs of this temporal Life, but to the Things of eternal Happineſs and eternal Miſery. For if a Chriſtian Orator ſpeaks of temporal Things, though they be ſmall in themſelves, yet they are great in his way of handling them; becauſe he treats of them with Reſpect to Juſtice, and Charity, and Piety in the uſe of them, which are great Things in the ſmalleſt Matters. As when the Apoſtle ſpeaks of going to Law for pecuniary Matters, 1 Cor. vi. 1, &c. he uſes all the Force of grand Eloquence, raiſing his Indignation, Correcting, Upbraiding, Rebuking, Threatning, and ſhewing the Concern of his Soul by ſharpning his Style into the utmoſt Keeneſs and Quickneſs of Expreſſion; not becauſe ſecular Affairs deſerved all this, but for the ſake of Juſtice, Charity and Piety, that were ſo deeply concerned in them. Thus he obſerves again [y], That a Cup of cold Water is but a ſmall Thing in it ſelf, but it was great in our Lord's Mouth, when he ſaid, He that gives it to a Diſciple, ſhall not loſe his Reward. He adds, That he himſelf once ſpake ſo movingly and affectionately, by the Help of God, upon that Subject to the People, that out of that cold Water there aroſe a Flame, which warmed the cold Hearts of Men, and inflamed them to do Works of Mercy in Hopes of an heavenly Reward. But he obſerves farther, That although a Preacher upon this account ought never to ſpeak but of great Things, yet he is not always obliged to do this Granditer, in the way of vehement and grand Eloquence, or the elated and lofty Style; but when he ſpeaks only to inform the Judgment [z], the ſubmiſs or low Style is to be uſed, as more proper for doctrinal Inſtruction; and the temperate or middle Style, when he ſpeaks to praiſe or diſpraiſe: But when any thing is to be done, and they to whom he ſpeaks are unwilling to do it, when they ought to do it, then thoſe Things which are Great in themſelves, are to be ſpoken Granditer, in a grand and vehement Style, or in ſuch a way as is proper to incline and bend the Wills of the Hearers. And ſometimes every one of theſe three Ways is uſed about the ſame Subject; The ſubmiſs Style, when any Doctrine is delivered about it; The temperate Style, when any Commendation is to be given to it; and the grand Style, when the Mind that is averſe from its Duty is to be converted and forcibly induced to practiſe it. Thus; if a Man is diſcourſing concerning God: To ſhew the Unity of the Trinity, he ought only to reaſon in the ſubmiſs and plain Way, that what is difficult to be conceived, may be underſtood, as far as Men are capable of underſtanding it. Here is no Ornament required, but only plain Documents and Inſtruction. But when God is to be praiſed, either in himſelf or his Works, then there is a fair Occaſion for beautiful and ſplendid Oratory, to extol him whom no Man can ſufficiently praiſe. And again, if his Worſhip be neglected, or other Things be taken in to rival him in his Worſhip, whether they be Idols, or Devils, or any other Creature, than the Evil of the Practce is [u] Aug. de Doct. Chriſt. lib. 4. cap. 12. Ideo autem Victoriæ eſt flectere, quia fieri poteſt ut doceatur, & delectetur, & non aſſentiatur. Quid autem illa duo proderint, ſi deſit hoc tertium? [x] Ibid. cap. 13, & 14. [y] Aug. ibid. cap. 18. [z] Aug. de Doct. Chriſt. lib. 4. cap. 19. Et tamen cum Doctor iſte debeat rerum Dictor eſſe magnarum, non ſemper eas debet Granditer dicere; ſed Submiſsè, cum aliqu'd docetur; Temperatè, cum aliquid vituperatur ſive laudatur. Cum vero aliquid agendum eſt, & ad eos loquitur, qui hoc agere debent, nec tamen volunt, tunc ea quæ Magna ſunt, dicenda ſunt Granditer, & ad flectendos animos congruenter.

to

to be aggravated with all the Grandeur and Vehemence of Oratory, to diſſuade and turn Men from it. And he gives us ſeveral Inſtances of of all the three Kinds, both out of Scripture and the antient Writers, Cyprian and Ambroſe, aſſuring us, in the End, That what he had ſaid of thoſe two, might be found in the Writings and Diſcourſes of other Eccleſiaſtical Men [a], who treated always of weighty Subjects in a proper Manner, that is, as the Matter required, with Perſpicuity and Acuteneſs, with Ornament and Beauty, with Ardency and Grandeur in their Applications. So that if we will take St. Auſtin's Character of the antient Preachers, it was in ſhort this; That their Diſcourſes were always upon weighty and heavenly Matters, and their Style anſwerable to the Subject, that is, Plain, Elegant, Majeſtick and Nervous; fitly adapted to Inſtruct, to Delight and Charm, and to Convince and Perſuade their Hearers. And if their Method was different from ours, or not ſo exact, and viſible to the Hearers; that muſt be imputed to Cuſtom and the Times they lived in: For every Age has its Peculiarities and proper Taſte of Things: And though I believe the modern Way of methodizing Sermons to be moſt uſeful to the Hearers: yet if the Queſtion were to be determined by the Rules and Practice of the moſt famous Orators, Whether an open or a concealed Method were fitteſt to be choſen, the Judgment and Deciſion would fall upon the Side of the Ancients. However, if they failed in this, they made it up in other Excellencies, by their Perſpicuity and Clearneſs, their Elegancy and Fineneſs, their Sublimity of Thought and Expreſſion, and above all, by the flaming Piety of their Lives, correſponding to their Doctrine, and giving the greateſt Force and Energy to all their Diſcourſes. For, as St. Auſtin truly obſerves in the laſt Place [b], The Life of the Preacher has more Weight in it, than the greateſt Grandeur and Force of Eloquence, to induce his Hearers to Obedience: For he that preaches wiſely and eloquently, but lives wickedly, may edify ſome, who are deſirous to learn and obſerve the Commands of Chriſt; as many will learn from the Scribes and the Phariſees, who ſit in Moſes's Chair, and ſay, and do not; but he that lives as he ſpeaks, will advantage Abundance more. For Men are very apt to ask this Queſtion, Quod mihi præcipis, cur ipſe non facis? Why doſt not thou do that which thou commandeſt me to do? And ſo it comes to paſs, that they will not obediently hear him, who does not hear himſelf, but contemn both the Word of God and the Preacher together. But he whoſe Life is unblameable, his very Example is grand Oratory, and his Form of Living, an eloquent Diſcourſe. Copia dicendi, Forma vivendi [c.] And by theſe Methods, what by their Oratory, what by their Example, the Ancients gained ſo much upon their Hearers, as often to receive their publick Acclamations, and hear their Groanings, and ſee their Tears, and what was moſt delightful of all, found the happy Effects of their Labour in their holy Obedience, and ſincere Converſion. But of theſe, more preſently, when we come to the Hearers, having made two or three Remarks more concerning the Preachers.

SECT. XX. That it was no Part of the antient Oratory to move the Paſſions by Geſticulations and vain Images of Things.

AND among theſe, I muſt obſerve one Thing negatively, That it was no Part of the antient Oratory to raiſe the Affections of their Hearers, either by Geſticulations, or the Uſe of external Shews and Repreſentations of Things in their Sermons, as is now very common in the Romiſh Church, eſpecially when they preach upon our Saviour's Paſſion, to produce a Croſs, and the Image of Chriſt bound to a Pillar, and whip it to Death, and ſhew the Nails, and tear a Veil, and many other the like Things to create Sorrow in their Hearers. Ferrarius [d] owns, there was no ſuch Practice among the Ancients, and confeſſes, that except it be done very appoſitely and prudently, it is more apt to excite Laughter than Sorrow. And which of the two it oftner produces, is eaſy to gueſs, as well from the Nature of the Thing, as the Complaints of wiſe Men againſt it. What Ferrarius produces out of Chryſoſtom [e], bidding the People take St. John Baptiſt's Head into their Hands, and carry it home with them, and hear it ſpeak, is nothing to the Purpoſe: For this is only a Rhetorical Scheme, made up of two uſual Figures among Orators, an Hypotypoſis and Proſopopœia, that is, a lively Deſcription of a Thing, and an Introduction of a Perſon ſpeaking; which are Figures that have a mighty Influence upon the Mind to raiſe in it a juſt Concern, but are no Precedents for ſuch Practices as rather incline Men to Ridicule and Laughter, of which there is no Footſtep in the antient Oratory of the Church.

SECT. XXI. Of the Length of their Sermons.

NEXT to the Matter and Style of their Sermons, the Queſtion may be ask'd concerning the Length of 'em. Ferrarius [f] and ſome others are very poſitive, that they were generally an Hour long: But Ferrarius is at a Loſs to tell by what Inſtrument they meaſured their Hour; for he will not venture to affirm, that they preached, as the old Greek and Roman Orators declaimed, by an Hour-glaſs; which yet he might have ſaid with as much Truth, as that all their Sermons were an Hour long, from no better Proof, than [a] Aug. ibid. cap. 21. In his autem, quos duos ex omnibus proponere volui, & in aliis Eccleſiaſticis Viris, & Bona & Bene id eſt ſicut res poſtulat, Acute, Ornate, Ardenterque dicentibus, per multa eorum Scripta vel Dicta poſſunt hæc tria genera reperiri, & aſſidua Lectione vel Auditione, admixta etiam Exercitatione, Studentibus inoleſcere. [b] Aug. de Doct. Chriſt. lib. 4. cap. 27. Habet autem ut obedienter audiatur quantacunque granditate dictionis majus pondus Vita dicentis, &c. [c] Aug. ibid. cap. 29. [d] Ferrar. de Ritu Concion. lib. 1. cap. 31. [e] Chryſ. Hom. 14. ad Pop. Antioch. p. 177. [f] Ferrar. de Ritu Concion. lib. 1. cap. 33.

their

their mentioning ſometimes the Hour of Preaching, which ſignifies no more than the Time in general; as, the Hour of Temptation, and the Hour cometh, and my Hour is not yet come, are often uſed in Scripture. It is a more juſt and pertinent Obſervation of Biſhop Wettenhal's [g], That their Sermons were often very ſhort: There are many in St. Auſtin's tenth Tome, which a Man may pronounce diſtinctly and deliver decently in eight Minutes, and ſome almoſt in half the Time: And ſuch are many of thoſe of Leo, Chryſologus, Maximus, Cæſarius Arelatenſis and other Latin Fathers. Some of St. Auſtin's are much longer, and ſo are the greater Part of Chryſoſtom's, Nazianzen's, Nyſſen's and Baſil's; but ſcarce any of them would laſt an Hour, and many not half the Time: And when it is conſidered, that they had many times two or three Sermons at once, as I have ſhewed it was very uſual in Chryſoſtom's Church, it would be abſurd to think, that each of them was an Hour long, when the whole Service laſted not above two Hours in the whole; as Chryſoſtom [h] often declares in his Sermons, making that an Argument to the People, why they ſhould cheerfully attend Divine Service, ſince of ſeven Days in the Week God had only reſerved one to Himſelf, and on that Day, exacted no more than two Hours, like the Widow's two Mites, to be ſpent on His Service.

SECT. XXII.

Whether every Man was obliged to preach his own Compoſition, or the Homilies and Sermons compoſed by others.

IT may be enquired farther, Whether all Preachers were obliged to deliver their own Compoſitions, or were at Liberty to uſe the Compoſitions of others? To this, it has been already anſwered in ſome meaſure, That the Homilies of famous Preachers, ſuch as Chryſoſtom, and Ephrem Cyrus, were often read inſtead of other Sermons from the Pulpit in many Churches. And Mabillon ſays [i], Thoſe of Cæſarius Arelatenſis were read in the French Churches; where alſo Deacons were authorized by the Council of Vaiſon [k] in Caſes of Neceſſity, when the Preaching Presbyter was diſabled, to read the Homilies of the antient Fathers in Country Churches. Neither was this only the Practice of Deacons, but Biſhops ſometimes alſo did the ſame. For Gennadius [l] ſays, Cyril of Alexandria compoſed many Homilies, which the Grecian Biſhops committed to Memory, in order to preach them. He ſays the ſame of Salvian [m], the Eloquent Preſbyter of Marſeilles, That he wrote many Homilies for Biſhops, Homilias Epiſcopis factas multas, which Ferrarius [n] and Dr. Cave underſtand, not of Homilies made before Biſhops, but for their Uſe: Whence he is alſo ſtyled by Gennadius in the ſame Place, Epiſcoporum Magiſter, the Teacher or Maſter of Biſhops, becauſe they preached the eloquent Homilies which he compoſed. Ferrarius and Sirmondus [o] obſerve the ſame of ſome of the Dictiones Sacræ, or Sermons of Ennodius, which are ſaid to be written by him, and ſpoken by others: Honoratus Biſhop of Novaria is named for one. St. Auſtin more particularly conſiders this Queſtion, and makes a Caſe of Conſcience of it. For having laid down all the Rules of Chriſtian Oratory for thoſe who had Ability to compoſe, he at laſt confeſſes, there were ſome, who though they could ſpeak well, were not able to invent and compoſe an handſome Diſcourſe of their own: And he does not ſeverely condemn them, or with a magiſterial Air debar them from Preaching, but with a great deal of Tenderneſs ſays favourably in their Caſe [p], That if they take that which was elegantly and wiſely written by others, and commit it to Memory, and preach it to the People, if they are called to that Office, they are not to be blamed as doing an ill Thing. For by this Means there are many Preachers of Truth, which is very uſeful, and not many Maſters, whilſt they all ſpeak Things of the one true Maſter, and there are no Schiſms among them. Neither ought ſuch Men to be deterred by the Words of the Prophet Jeremy (xxiii. 30.) by whom God rebukes thoſe who ſteal his Words every one from his Neighbour. For they which ſteal, take away that which they have no Right or Property in: Which cannot be ſaid of thoſe who obey the Word of God, but rather belongs to thoſe who ſpeak well, and live ill. From whence he concludes, it is very lawful for a Man to preach the Compoſition of other more eloquent Men, provided he compoſe his own Life anſwerable to God's Word, and earneſtly pray to God, that He would make his Word in his Mouth edifying to others.

SECT. XXIII.

Their Sermons always concluded with a Doxology to the Holy Trinity.

I muſt note alſo, That they always concluded their Sermons, as we now do, with a Doxology to the Holy Trinity, as may be ſeen not only in the Sermons of St. Auſtin, Chryſoſtom, Baſil, Leo, Fulgentius, and others who lived after Arius broach'd his Hereſy againſt the Divintty of our Saviour; but alſo in thoſe of Origen, and others who lived before, ſuch as Dionyſius of Alexandria, and the reſt that are mentioned by St. Baſil, who had ſeen their Homilies, out of which he wrote a Vindication [q] of that antient Form againſt ſome, who pretended to charge him with Innovation for using a Form, which, he says, the Ancients had always used before him.

[g] Wettenhal's Gift of Preaching, chap. 2. p. 666. [h] Chryſ. Hom. 48. de Inſcript. Altaris. T. 5. p. 648. Hom. 50. de Util. Lection. Script. ibid. p. 676. Hom. 24. de Bapt. Chriſti. T. 1. p. 309. [i] Mabil. de Liturg. Gallican. lib. 2. p. 99. [k] Conc. Vaſens. 2. Can. 2. [l] Gennad. de Scriptor. cap. 57. Homilias etiam compoſuit plurimas, quæ ad declamandum Græciæ Epiſcopis commendantur. [m] Gennad. ibid. cap. 67. [n] Ferrar. de Ritu Concion. lib. 2. cap. 7. Cave Hiſt. Literar. Vol. I. p. 346. Du Pin. Centur. 5. p. 146. [o] Sirmond. Not. in Ennodium, Dictio 2. miſſa Honorato in Dedicatione Baſilicæ, &c. [p] Aug. de Doctrin. Chriſt. lib. 4. cap. 29. Sunt ſane quidam, qui bene pronunciare poſſunt, quid autem pronuncient, excogitare non poſſunt. Quod ſi ab aliis ſumunt eloquenter ſapienterque conſcriptum, memoriæque commendent, atque ad populum proferant, ſi eam Perſonam gerunt, non improbe faciunt, &c. [q] Baſil. de Spir. ſancto. cap. 29.

SECT. XXIV. Sermons delivered by the Preacher sitting, for the most part.

THERE are some other incidental Things taken notice of by Ferrarius, which are either very minute in themselves, or are more proper to be spoken of in other Places; such as the Deacons causing Silence to be made before Sermons; and the Preacher's Reading his Text over again after the Readers; and his Appointing Lessons to be read agreeable to his Subject; and giving Notice of them the Week before to the People; as also the Reading of the Acts of the Martyrs before Sermon upon their proper Festivals; the giving Notice of Easter and Lent on the Day of Epiphany in their Sermons; the Notification of Vigils, and Fasts, and Festivals; and Appointing Collections for the Poor; Preaching covertly of the Mysteries of Religion before the Catechumens; Complementing the Bishops that were present, in the Sermons; the Distinction of Places for their Hearers; the usual Appellations of Love and Respect that were given them; the usual Place of the Sermon, some Eminency in the Church, the Ambo or Reading Desk, or else the Bishop's Throne, or the Steps of the Altar; the usual Days of Preaching, the Lord's Day, the Saturday or Sabbath, the Vigils and Festivals, the Anniversaries of Bishops Consecrations, and Dedication of Churches; with some other Things of the like Nature, some of which are so minute, that they are scarce worth the Reader's Notice; and others that are more material, are accounted for and explained in other Parts of this Work. I shall therefore speak of one Thing more relating to the Preachers: Which is, of the Posture, in which their Sermons were delivered. The general received Custom now is for the Preacher to stand, and the People to sit: But the antient Custom was usually the Reverse of this. For the Preacher commonly delivered his Sermon Sitting, and the People heard it Standing; though there was no certain Rule about this, but the Custom varied in several Churches. In Africk the Preacher commonly sat, as appears from that of Optatus [r] to the Donatist Bishops: When God reproves a Sinner, and rebukes him that sits, the Admonition is specially directed unto you; for the People have not liberty to sit in the Church. He says this upon occasion of those Words of the Psalmist, Thou satteſt and spakeſt against thine own Mother's Son. St. Austin in like manner speaks of his own Preaching Sitting: Why do I sit here? Why do I live, but with this Intention [s], that I may live with Christ? And again [t], That I may not detain you, especially considering that I speak Sitting, and ye labour Standing. And he intimates, that in some [u] Churches Sitting was allowed both to the Preacher and the People. St. Chrysostom also [x] speaks of his own Sitting when he preached. And this he did usually in the Ambo or Reading-Desk, where he sat when he preached that famous Sermon upon Eutropius, when he fled to take Sanctuary in the Church [y], and lay trembling before the Altar, as all the Historians inform us. Gregory Nyssen speaks also of himself as Sitting when he preached, and rising up to Prayer [z] in the Conclusion. Which is also noted by Justin Martyr [a], and Origen [b], and Athanasius [c], and Chrysostom [d], whom Ferrarius cites, and remarks upon them, That their Rising up in the Close of the Sermon to Prayer, implies that they preached Sitting before. Which is certainly a very just Observation. Yet, after all, he pretends to assert, That Standing to preach was the more common Posture, and that they never used Sitting but only in case of Infirmity or old Age. Which shews us only how far Prejudice will carry a Man, against the clearest Evidence, in Favour of a modern Custom. The Observation made by the Author of the Comments upon St. Paul's Epistles [*] under the Name of St. Ambrose, has much more of Truth and Solidity in it, That the Christian Bishops used to preach Sitting, and that this Custom was taken from the Tradition of the Synagogue: Where Ferrarius himself owns, and proves it to have been the more usual Custom for the Scribes and Doctors of the Law to expound the Scriptures Sitting, though there may be some Instances to the contrary. Matth. xxiii. 2. it is said, That the Scribes and Pharisees sat in Moses's Chair. Luke ii. 46. Our Saviour was found Sitting and Disputing among the Doctors in the Temple. Again, Chap. iv. 20. After he had stood up to read the Prophet Esaias, he sat down to teach the People. And Chap. v. 3. He sat down and taught the People out of the Ship. Joh. viii. 2. He sat down and taught the People in the Temple. Matth. v. 1. He sat and taught his Disciples in the Mountain. And Matth. xxvi. 55. I sat daily with you teaching in the Temple. This was according to the Custom of the Jewish Synagogue, which was generally followed by the Christian Church. And the Instances which Ferrarius brings out of St. Chrysostom's [e] and St. Austin's Homilies [f] to the contrary, are rather Exceptions to a general Rule, than proper Evidences for his own Aſſertion. The Matter is not indeed great in itſelf, it being a very indifferent Thing, whether a Preacher delivers his Sermon Standing or Sitting: But when Men are repreſenting antient Practices, they ought not to make every Thing conform to the Cuſtoms and Model of the preſent Age, but repreſent Things nakedly as they find them.

[r] Optat. lib. 4. p. 78. Dum peccatorem arguit, & sedentem increpat Deus, specialiter ad vos dictum esse constat, non ad Populum, qui in Ecclesia sedendi non habent licentiam. [s] Aug. Hom. 28. ex 50. T. 10. p. 179. Quare loquor? Quare hic sedeo? Quare vivo, nisi hac intentione, ut cum Christo simul vivamus? [t] Hom. 49. de Diversis. Ut ergo vos non diu teneam, præsertim quia ego sedens loquor, vos stando laboratis. [u] Aug. de Catechizandis Rudibus. cap. 13. tom. 4. p. 300. Longe consultius in quibusdam Ecclesiis transmarinis non solum Antistites sedentes loquuntur, sed ipsi etiam populo sedilia subjacent. [x] Chrys. Hom. 1. de Pœnit. T. 1. p. 662. [y] Socrat. lib. 6. cap. 5. Sozom. lib. 8. cap. 5. Cassiodor. Hist. Tripartita. lib. 10. cap. 4. Residens super Ambonem, &c. [z] Nyssen. Hom. 5. de Orat. Dominica. T. 1. p. 761. [a] Justin. Apol. 2. p. 97. [b] Orig. Hom. 20. in Num. Hom. 3. in Esai. Hom. 36. in Luc. Hom. 19. in Jerem. [c] Athan. Hom. de Semente. [d] Chrys. Hom. cont. Hæreticos. ap. Ferrarium. lib. 2. cap. 9. [*] Ambros. Com. in 1 Cor. 14. 29. Hæc Traditio Synagogæ est, quam nos vult sectari—— ut sedentes disputent Seniores dignitate in Cathedris, &c. [e] Chrys. Hom. 16. ad Pop. Antioch. & Hom. 33. in Mat. [f] Aug. Ser. 122. de Diversis. Tract. 19. in Joan. & Ser. 2. in Psalm. 32. ap. Ferrar. lib. 2. cap. 9.

SECT. XXV. And heard by the Auditors Standing, in ſome Churches, but not in all.

WE have hitherto conſidered what relates to the Preachers, and a few Things muſt be added concerning the Hearers. Of whom it has been already obſerved in the laſt Paragraph out of Optatus and St. Auſtin, That in the African Churches the People had no Licenſe to ſit down, but were generally obliged to ſtand to hear the Sermon. Ferrarius [g] has collected a Multitude of Teſtimonies more out of St. Auſtin to the ſame Purpoſe, which it is needleſs to relate here. But we may obſerve, that the ſame Cuſtom prevailed alſo in many other Churches. Sidonius Apollinaris ſpeaks of it as the Uſage of the Gallican Church in thoſe Lines to Fauſtus Biſhop of Riez, where he ſpeaks of his Preaching from the Steps of the Altar, the People ſtanding about him [h]: Seu te conſpicuis gradibus venerabilis Aræ Concionaturum Plebs ſedula circumſiſtit. Which is farther confirmed by an Homily, that uſed to go under the Name of St. Auſtin [i], but is now more certainly determined by Mabillon and the Benedictines in their new Edition of St. Auſtin's Works, to belong to Cæſarius Biſhop of Arles, where he grants an Indulgence to ſuch as were diſeaſed or infirm in their Feet, that they ſhould have liberty to ſit, when the Paſſions of the Martyrs, or long Leſſons were read, or the Sermon was preached: But to all others, Women as well Men, this Privilege is utterly denied. Which implies that Standing was then the uſual Poſture of the Hearers in the French Churches. And that it was uſual alſo in ſome of the Greek Churches, may be inferred from that famous Story which Euſebius reports of Conſtantine, That when he made a Diſcourſe before him in his own Palace, he ſtood all the Time [k] with the reſt of the Hearers: And when Euſebius requeſted him to ſit down in the Throne that was prepared for him, he refuſed, ſaying, It was fit that Men ſhould ſtand to hear Diſcourſes of divine Things. But in the Churches of Italy the contrary Cuſtom prevailed: For St. Auſtin ſays, in the Tranſmarine Churches (by which he certainly means thoſe of Italy) it was prudently ordered, That not only the Biſhops ſat when they preached to the People, but that the People alſo had Seats to ſit upon, leſt any weak Perſon through Wearineſs grow remiſs in his Attention [l], or be forced to leave the Aſſembly. And he thinks it more adviſable, that the ſame Indulgence ſhould be granted, where it could prudently be done, in the African Churches. That it was ſo in Rome in the Time of Juſtin Martyr, ſeems pretty plain from his Second Apology, where he ſays [m], That as ſoon as the Biſhop's Sermon was ended, they all roſe up to Prayer together. And the ſame Thing being noted by Origen [n], and Athanaſius [o], makes it probable, that the ſame Cuſtom prevailed in many of the Eaſtern Churches. Cyril of Jeruſalem ſays expreſsly [p], That the People heard his Diſcourſes Sitting. Conſider, ſays he, how many ſit here now, how many Souls are preſent; and yet the Spirit works conveniently in them all. He is in the Midſt of us, and ſees our Behaviour, and diſcerns our Hearts and Conſciences, and what we ſpeak, and what we think. And the Author of the Conſtitutions [q], who chiefly relates the Cuſtoms of the Eaſtern Churches, repreſents the People as Sitting alſo to hear the Sermon. And ſo Caſſian [r] and St. Jerom [s] ſay, it was in all the Monaſteries of Egypt, where they ſat not only at Sermon, but at the Reading of the Pſalms and other Leſſons out of Scripture. So that this muſt be reckon'd among thoſe indifferent Rites and Cuſtoms, about which there was no general Rule of the univerſal Church; but every one followed the Cuſtom of the Place where he lived, and every Church appointed what She judged moſt proper for the Edification of the People.

SECT. XXVI. A peculiar Cuſtom of the African Church to quicken the Attention of the Hearers.

IT was a peculiar Cuſtom in the African Church, when the Preacher chanced to cite ſome remarkable Text of Scripture in the Middle of his Sermon, for the People to joyn with him in Repeating the Cloſe of it. St. Auſtin takes Notice of this in one of his Sermons [t], where having begun thoſe Words of St. Paul, The End of the Commandment is——before he would proceed any farther, he called to the People to repeat the Remainder of the Verſe with him; upon which they all cried out immediately, Charity out of a pure Heart. By which, he ſays, they ſhewed that they had not been unprofitable Hearers. And this, no doubt, was done to encourage the People to hear, and read, and remember the Scriptures, that they might be able upon Occaſion to repeat ſuch uſeful Portions of them, having then Liberty not only to hear, but to read and repeat them in their Mother Tongue. Whether this was a Cuſtom in any other Place, I cannot ſay; having met with it only in St. Auſtin: For which Reaſon I have ſpoken of it only as a particular Cuſtom of the African Church, deſigned to quicken the Attention of the Hearers, and ſhew that they read and remembred the Holy Scriptures.

[g] Ferrar. lib. 2. cap. 15. ex Aug. Tract. 19, & 112. in Joan. Hom. 28. ex 50. Ser. 49, & 112. de Diverſis. Ser. 2. in Pſal. 32, & 147. Ser. 20. de Verb. Domini, &c. [h] Sidon. Carmen 16. ad Fauſtum Reienſem. [i] Aug. Ser. 26. ex 50. qui eſt 300. Novæ Editionis. Propter eos qui aut pedibus dolent, aut aliqua corporis inæqualitate laborant, paterna pietate ſolicitus conſilium dedi, & quodam modo ſupplicavi, ut quando aut Paſſiones prolixæ, aut certe aliquæ Lectiones longiores leguntur, qui Stare non poſſunt, humiliter & cum ſilentio ſedentes, attentis auribus audiant quæ leguntur, &c. Ut quando aut Lectiones leguntur, aut Verbum Dei prædicatur, nulla (Fœmina) ſe in terram projiciat, niſi forte quam nimium gravis infirmitas cogit. [k] Euſeb. de Vit. Conſtant. lib. 4. cap. 33. [l] Aug. de Catechiz. Rudibus. cap. 13. Sine dubitatione melius fiat, ubi decenter fieri poteſt, ut à principio ſedens audiat. Longeque conſultius in quibuſdam Eccleſiis Tranſmarinis non ſolum Antiſtites ſedentes loquuntur, ſed ipſi etiam populo ſedilia ſubjacent, &c. [m] Juſtin. Apol. 2. p 98. [n] Orig. Hom. 3. in Eſai. Hom. 19. in Jerem. [o] Athan. Hom. de ſemente. [p] Cyril. Catech. 16. n. 11. λόγισαι πῶσοι καθήξεσθε νῦν, &c. [q] Conſtit. lib. 2. cap. 58. [r] Caſſian. Inſtit. lib. 2. cap. 12. [s] Hieron. Ep. 22. ad Euſtoch. cap. 15. Completis Orationibus, cunctiſque reſidentibus, medius quem Patrem vocant, incipit diſputare, &c. [t] Aug. 36. ex editis à Sirmondo. T. 10. p. 837. Finis præcepti eſt (Jam vos dicite mecum: A populo acclamatum eſt) Caritas de corde puro. Omnes dixiſtis, quod non infructuoſe ſemper audiſtis. Vid. Ser. 13. de Verbis Dom. Ser. 2. de Verb. Apoſt.

SECT. XXVII. How the People were uſed to give publick Applauſes and Acclamations to the Preacher in the Church.

IT was a much more general Cuſtom for the People to teſtify their Eſteem for the Preacher, and expreſs their Admiration of his Eloquence, or Approbation of his Doctrine, by publick Applauſes and Acclamations in the Church. This was done ſometimes in expreſs Words, and ſometimes by other Signs and Indications of their Conſent and Approbation. The Greeks commonly call it κρότος, which denotes both Kinds of Approbation, as well by clapping of Hands, as by vocal and verbal Acclamations. The firſt Uſe of it, as Suicerus [u] obſerves out of Caſaubon [x], was only in the Theatres. From thence it came into the Senate; and in proceſs of time, into the Acts of the Councils, and the ordinary Aſſemblies of the Church. We are not concerned at preſent to enquire after Synodical Acclamations, but only ſuch as were uſed toward the Preachers in the Church. This was ſometimes done in Words of Commendation, as we find in one of the Homilies of Paulus Emiſenus [y], ſpoken in the Preſence of Cyril at Alexandria, where when Paul had uſed this Expreſſion, agreeing with Cyril's Doctrine that had been preached before, Mary, the Mother of God, brought forth Emanuel; the People immediately cried out, O Orthodox Cyril, the Gift of God, the Faith is the ſame, this is what we deſired to hear, if any Man ſpeak otherwiſe, let him be Anathema. Sometimes they added other Indications of their Applauſe, as clapping of their Hands, &c. Thus St. Jerom tells Vigilantius, the Time was [z] when he himſelf had applauded him with his Hands and Feet, leaping by his Side, and crying out, Orthodox, for his Sermon upon the Reſurrection. And ſo George of Alexandria tells us [a], the People applauded the Sermons of St. Chryſoſtom, ſome by toſſing their thin Garments, others moving their Plumes, others laying their Hands upon their Swords, and others waving their Handkerchiefs, and crying out, Thou art worthy of the Prieſthood, thou art the thirteenth Apoſtle, Chriſt hath ſent thee to ſave our Souls, &c. In like manner, Gregory repreſents in his Dream [b], how the People were uſed to applaud him when he preached, ſome by their Praiſes, and others by their ſilent Admiration, ſome in their Words, and ſome in their Minds, and others moving their Bodies as the Waves of the Sea raiſed by the Wind. St. Jerom refers to this, when he tells us [c], how Gregory Nazianzen, his Maſter, once anſwered a difficult Queſtion, which he put to him concerning the Sabbatum, δευτερόπρωτον, the ſecond Sunday after the firſt, mentioned Luke vi. I will inform you, ſays he, of this Matter in the Church, where when all the People are applauding me, you ſhall be forced to confeſs, you underſtand what you do not; or if you alone be ſilent, you ſhall be condemned of Folly by all the reſt. The ſame Cuſtom is often hinted by Sidonius Apollinaris [d], and Iſidore of Peluſium [e], and in abundance of Places of St. Auſtin [f] and St. Chryſoſtom, cited at length by Ferrarius [g], which after what has been ſaid, I think it needleſs to recite in this Place. The Curious Reader may either conſult Ferrarius, or the Paſſages referred to in their Authors. To which he may add many other Paſſages of Chryſoſtom [h], and Socrates [i], and Proſper [k], not mentioned by that diligent Writer, though he ſpends four whole Chapters upon this Subject.

SECT. XXVIII. But more Chriſtian-like expreſs their Approbation by Tears and Groans and Compunction and Obedience.

I think it more material to obſerve out of the chief of thoſe Paſſages, that though the Ancients did not utterly refuſe or diſallow thoſe ſorts of Applauſes, but received them with Humility and Thankfulneſs to God, as good Indications of a towardly Diſpoſition in their Hearers; yet foraſmuch as they were often but fallacious Signs, they neither much commended thoſe that gave them, nor thoſe Preachers that barely by their Eloquence obtained [u] Suicer. Theſaur. Eccleſ. voce κρότος, Vol. 2. p. 173. [x] Caſaub. Notis in Vulcatium Gallican. Vit. Avidii Caſſii, p. 89. [y] Paul. Emiſen. Hom. de Incarnat. Conc. tom. 3. p. 1096. in Actis Concilii Epheſ. Par. 3. cap. 31. [z] Hieron. Ep. 75. cont. Vigilant. Recordare quæſo illius diei, quando, me de Reſurrectione & Veritate corporis prædicante, ex latere ſubſultabas, & plaudebas manu, & applodebas pede, & Orthodoxum conclamabas. [a] Georg. Alex. Vit. Chryſ. ap. Ferrar. de Ritu Concionum. lib. 2. cap. 20. [b] Naz. Somnium de Templo Anaſtaſiæ. t. 2. p. 78. [c] Hieron. Ep. 2. ad Nepot. Præceptor quondam meus Gregorius Nazianzenus rogatus à me, ut exponeret, quid ſibi vellet in Luca Sabbatum δευτερόπρωτον, eleganter luſit, Docebo te, inquiens, ſuper hac re in Eccleſia; in qua, mihi omni populo acclamante, cogeris invitus ſcire quod neſcis; aut certe, ſi ſolus tacueris, ſolus ab omnibus Stultitiæ condemnaberis. [d] Sidon. lib. 9. Ep. 3. [e] Iſid. lib. 3. Ep. 343, & 382. [f] Aug. Serm. 5. de Verb. Domini. Serm. 19, & 28. de Verb. Apoſtoli. Serm. 25. ex Quinquaginta. Serm. 45. de Tempore. Tract. 57. in Joan. Serm. 27. de Diverſis. Serm. in Pſal. 147. De Catechiz. Rudibus. cap. 13. de Doctr. Chriſt. lib. 4. cap. 26. [g] Chryſ. Hom. 1, 4, & 54. in Geneſ. Hom. 2, 5, 6. ad Pop. Ant. Hom. 2. in Lazar. Hom. 2. in Joan. Hom. 3, & 5. De Incomprehenſib. Hom. 30. in Act. ap. Ferrar. lib. 2. cap. 18. [h] Chryſ. Hom. 1. de Verbis Eſai. t. 3. p. 910. Hom. 6. in Gen. p. 918. Hom. 27. in Gen. p. 358. Hom. 1. cont. Judæos. t. 1. p. 433. Hom. 16. in illud, Si eſurierit inimicus. t. 5. p. 220. Hom. 56. Quod non ſit deſperandum. t. 5. p. 742. [i] Socrat. lib. 7. cap. 13. [k] Proſper. de Vita Contemplativa. lib. 1. cap. 23.

them;

them; much leſs thoſe that out of a worldly Spirit, and a popular and vain Ambition laboured at nothing elſe but to court and affect them: But what they chiefly deſired to effect by their grand Eloquence, was to warm their Hearts, and melt them into Tears, to work them into Groans, and Sorrow, and Compunction for Sin, to bring them to Reſolutions of Obedience, and Compliance with the Holy Rules they preached to them, to work in them a Contempt of earthly Things, and raiſe their Souls, by all the Arts of moving the Affections, to a longing Deſire and Aſpiration after the Things of another World. This was their grand Aim in all their elaborate, and all their free and fluent Diſcourſes, and this they valued far above all the popular Applauſes that could be given them. This they reckoned their grand Eloquence, and rejoiced in nothing more, than when they could triumph in the Conviction and Converſion of their Hearers. To this purpoſe, St. Jerom [l] in his Directions to Nepotian, lays it down as a Rule, that in Preaching, he ſhould labour to excite the Groans of the People, rather than their Applauſes; and let the Tears of the Hearers be the Commendation of the Preacher. And ſo he obſerves [m] it was in fact among the Fathers of Egypt; when they diſcourſed of the Kingdom of Chriſt and the Glories of the World to come, then one might behold every one, with a gentle Sigh, and Eyes lift up to Heaven, ſay within himſelf, Oh that I had Wings like a Dove, for then I would flee away, and be at Reſt! In like manner Proſper [n] bids the Preacher, not place his Confidence in the Splendor of his Words, but in the Power of their Operation; nor be delighted with the Acclamations of the People, but their Tears; nor ſtudy to obtain their Applauſes, but their Groans. St. Auſtin did not refuſe theſe Acclamations of the People, yet he always takes Care to remind them rather to repay him with the Fruit of their Lives and Actions. You praiſe the Preacher [o] of the Word, ſays he, but I deſire the Doer of it. Thoſe Praiſes [p] are but the Leaves of the Tree, I deſire the Fruit of it. I would not be praiſed by ill Livers [q], I abhor it, I deteſt it; it is a Grief to me, and not a Pleaſure. But if I ſay, I would not be praiſed by good Livers, I ſhould tell a Lie; if I ſhould ſay, I deſire it, I am afraid of ſeeming deſirous more of Vanity than Solidity. Therefore what ſhall I ſay? I neither perfectly deſire it, nor perfectly refuſe it. I do not deſire it abſolutely, for fear I ſhould be inſnared by humane Praiſe; I do not utterly refuſe it, for fear I ſhould be ungrateful to thoſe, to whom I preach. In his Book of Chriſtian Doctrine [r], where he ſpeaks of that ſort of Eccleſiaſtical Rhetorick, which is called Grand Eloquence, he ſays, A Man ſhould not think he had attained to it, becauſe he frequently received the loud Acclamations of the People: For thoſe were often gained by the Acumens and Ornaments of the ſubmiſs and moderate Style; and the grand Eloquence did often ſuppreſs thoſe Acclamations by its Weight, and extort Tears in their room. He gives there a remarkable Inſtance of his own Preaching once an Occaſional Sermon with ſuch Effect to the People of Cæſarea in Mauritania. It ſeems, in that Place a very barbarous and unnatural Cuſtom had for a long time prevailed, that at a certain Seaſon of the Year for ſome whole Days together, the whole City dividing themſelves into two Parties, were uſed to maintain a bloody Fight by throwing Stones at one another; and this without any Regard to Kindred or Relation. For ſometimes a Man ſlew his Brother, or a Father his Son, or a Son his Father. Now, ſays St. Auſtin, I ſet my ſelf with all the Force of grand Eloquence to root out and expel this cruel and inveterate Evil out of their Hearts and Practice: Yet I did not take my ſelf to have made any Impreſſion to purpoſe upon them, whilſt I heard their Acclamations, but when I ſaw their Tears. For they ſhewed indeed by their Acclamations, that they were inſtructed and pleaſed; but by their Tears, that they were ſenſibly affected and really converted. Which when I perceived, I then began to think I had got the Victory over that barbarous Cuſtom, which had ſo long by Tradition from their Anceſtors poſſeſſed their Souls; before I ſaw any more viſible Proof in their Actions. Whereupon, as ſoon as Sermon was ended, I turned both their Mouths and Hearts to give God Thanks for it. And ſo, by the Help of Chriſt, there are now almoſt eight Years paſs'd, ſince any Thing of this Kind was ever attempted among them. He adds, that he had made many other Experiments of the like nature, by which he had learned, that Men ordinarily ſhewed what Impreſſions the Force of wiſe and powerful Rhetorick made upon them, not ſo much by their Acclamations as by their Groans, and ſometimes by their Tears, and finally by their real Change of Life and ſincere Converſion. So that in the Judgment of this pious Father, the beſt Praiſe of a Sermon, and its Rhetorick, is the Compunction of its Hearers, and melting them into Tears, and ſubduing their Minds by bending them to Obedience, which far exceeds the Honour of the greateſt Acclamations and Applauſes. After the ſame manner the great Orator of the Eaſt, St. Chryſoſtom, often tells his Hearers, he rejoiced not in their Applauſes, but in the Effects which his Diſcourſes had on their Minds, in making them

[l] Hieron. Ep. 2. ad Nepotian. Docente te in Eccleſia, non Clamor populi, ſed Gemitus ſuſcitetur; Lachrymæ auditorum Laudes tuæ ſint. [m] Ep. 22. ad Euſtoch. cap. 15.

[n] Proſper de Vita Contemplativa, lib. 1. cap. 23. Non in verborum ſplendore, ſed in operum virtute totam prædicandi fiduciam ponat; Non vocibus delectetur populi acclamantis ſibi, ſed Fletibus: nec Plauſum à populo ſtudeat expectare, ſed Gemitum.

[o] Aug. Serm. 19. de Verbis Apoſtoli. Tu laudas tractantem: Ego quæro facientem. [p] Serm. 5. De Verbis Domini. Laudes iſtæ folia ſunt arborum, fructus quæritur. [q] Hom. 25. ex 50. Laudari à male viventibus nolo, abhorreo, deteſtor, dolori mihi eſt, non voluptati, &c. [r] De Doctrina Chriſt. lib. 4. cap. 24. Non ſane, ſi dicenti crebrius & vehementius acclametur, ideo Granditer putandus eſt dicere: Grande autem genus plerumque pondere ſuo voces premit, ſed Lachrymas exprimit.

become

become new Men. He says in one place [s], they had made him happy in receiving his Discourses about Prayer with a ready Mind. For happy is the Man that speaks to an obedient Ear. And he judged of their Obedience, not so much from their Acclamations and Praises, as from what he had observed in their Actions. For when he had used this Argument, why they should not pray against their Enemies, because it was a Provocation of God, and setting up a new Law in Opposition to his Law: (For God says, Pray for your Enemies; but they that pray against them do in Effect pray God to disanul his own Law:) he says, upon his mentioning this and the like Arguments, he had observed many of them to smite upon their Face and Breast, and mourn bitterly, and lift up their Hands to Heaven, and ask God Pardon for such unlawful Prayers. Which made him at the same time lift up his own Eyes to Heaven, and give God Thanks, that the Word of his Doctrine had so quickly produced Fruit in them. In another place [t], says he, What do your Praises advantage me, when I see not your Progress in Virtue? Or what Harm shall I receive from the Silence of my Auditors, when I behold the Increase of their Piety? The Praise of the Speaker is not the κρότος, the Acclamations of his Hearers, but their Zeal for Piety and Religion; not their making a great Stir in Time of Hearing, but shewing Diligence at all other Times. Applause, as soon as it is out of the Mouth, is dispersed into the Air, and vanishes; but when the Hearers grow better, this brings an incorruptible and immortal Reward both to the Speaker and the Hearers. The Praise of your Acclamations may render the Orator more illustrious here, but the Piety of your Souls will give him great Confidence before the Tribunal of Christ. Therefore if any one love the Preacher (or if any Preacher love his People) let him not be enamoured with Applause, but with the Benefit of the Hearers. It were easy to transcribe many other such Passages out of Chrysostom, where he shews a great Contempt of such popular Applauses, in Comparison of their Obedience. I will only relate one Passage more, where he gives a severe Rebuke to all Preachers, who made this the only Aim of their Discourses. Many, says he [u], appear in publick, and labour hard, and make long Sermons to gain the Applause of the People, in which they rejoice as much as if they had gained a Kingdom; but if their Sermon ends in Silence, they are more tormented about that Silence, than about the Pains of Hell. This is the Ruin of the Church, that ye seek to hear such Sermons, as are apt not to move Compunction, but Pleasure, hearing them as you would hear a Musician or a Singer, with a tinkling Sound, and Composition of Words. And we act miserably and coldly, whilst we indulge our own Affections, which we ought to discard. We curiously seek after Flowers of Rhetorick and Composition and Harmony, that we may sing to Men, and not profit them; that we may be had in Admiration by them, and not teach them; that we may raise Delight, and not godly Sorrow; that we may go off with Applause and Praise, and no ways edify them in their Morals. Believe me, for I would not otherwise say it, when I raise Applause in Preaching, I am then subject to human Infirmity (for why should not a Man confess the Truth?) I am then ravished and highly pleased. But when I go home, and consider, that my Applauders are gone away without Fruit, though they might have done otherwise, I weep, and wail, and lament that they perish in their Acclamations and Praises, and that I have preached all in vain: And I reason thus with my self, What Profit is there in all my Labours, if my Hearers reap no Fruit from my Words? I have often thought of making it a Law to forbid such Acclamations, and to persuade you to hear in Silence. By this it appears, that St. Chrysostom could rather have wished to have had this Custom wholly banished out of the Church, because it was so frequently abused by vain and ambitious Spirits, who regarded nothing else but to gain the Applause of their Hearers: To which Purpose they sometimes suborned Men to applaud them in the Church, as is complained of Paulus Samosatensis by the Council of Antioch [x]: And sometimes affected to preach in such a manner upon abstruse Subjects, as neither the People nor themselves understood, only to be admired by the ignorant Multitude, who, as St. Jerom complains [y] in this very case, are commonly most prone to admire what they do not understand. For which Reason, it was the Care of all pious Preachers, to shew a tender Regard to the Understandings of Men; and, whether it gained Applause or not, to speak usefully, and as far as might be, to the Capacities and Apprehensions of their Hearers; and by all the Powers of divine Eloquence, and proper Arts of Edification and Persuasion, incline them to Obedience and an heavenly Temper. Without which they imagined the Success and Event of their Preaching, however eloquent and pleasing to the Ear, was no better received than that of the Prophet, complained of Ezek. xxxiii. 32. Thou art unto them as a very lovely Song of one that hath a very pleasant Voice, and can play well on an Instrument: for they hear thy Words, but they will not do them.

SECT. XXIX. Sermons antiently penned by the Hearers.

THERE is one Thing more must be taken Notice of with relation to the Hearers, because it expressed a great deal of Zeal and Diligence in their Attention: Which is, that many of them learned the Art of Notaries, (the Greeks call them ὀξυγράφοι and ταχυγράφοι, ready Writers) that they might be able to take down in Writing the Sermons of famous Preachers, Word for Word, as they delivered them. By [s] Chrys. 56. Quod non sit desperandum. t. 5. p. 742.

[t] Hom. 16 Ibid. p. 220.
[u] Chrys. Hom. 30. in Act.
[x] Ap. Euseb. lib. 7. cap. 30.
[y] Hieron. Ep. 2. ad Nepotian.

this

this Means ſome of their Extempore Diſcourſes were handed down to Poſterity, which otherwiſe muſt have died with the Speaking. As has been obſerved before [a] out of Euſebius concerning ſome of Origen's, which he preached in his latter Years. St. Auſtin makes the ſame Obſervation [b] concerning his own Sermons upon the Pſalms, that it pleaſed the Brethren not only to receive them with their Ears and Heart, but with their Pens likewiſe: So that he was to have Regard not only to his Auditors, but his Readers alſo. [c] Socrates ſays the ſame of Chryſoſtom's Sermons, that ſome of them were publiſhed by himſelf, and others by Notaries, who took them from his Mouth as he ſpake them. But they did not thus honour all Preachers, but only thoſe that were moſt celebrated and renowned. For Sozomen [d] obſerves of the Sermons of Atticus, that they were ſo mean after he gave himſelf to preach Extempore when he was Biſhop of Conſtantinople, that the Notaries did not think fit to write them. Theſe Notaries were ſome of them allowed by the Preacher himſelf, and were therefore a Sort of publick Notaries appointed for this Purpoſe: But others did it privately, according to their Inclination and Diſcretion. This Difference is hinted by Euſebius, when he ſays, Origen allowed no Notaries to take his Sermons, till he was ſixty Years old; and by Gregory Nazianzen in his Farewel Sermon; where he thus takes his Leave of his Church, Farewel ye Lovers of my Sermons, and ye Pens [e] both publick and private. In which he plainly alludes to the two Sorts of Notaries that wrote his Sermons in the Church. The publick Notaries were generally allowed by the Author's Conſent to publiſh what they wrote: In which caſe, it was uſual for the Preacher to review his own Dictates, and correct ſuch Miſtakes, and ſupply ſuch Deficiencies, as might be occaſioned by the Haſte of the Scribe, or ſome Things not ſo accurately ſpoken by themſelves in ſudden and Extempore Diſcourſes. This is evident from what Gregory the Great [f] ſays in his Preface to his Homilies upon Ezekiel, That thoſe Homilies were firſt taken from his Mouth, as he ſpake them to the People, and after eight Years he collected them from the Papers of the Notaries, and reviewed, and corrected, and amended them. So again, in his Preface upon Job, he ſays, ſome of his Homilies were compoſed by himſelf, and others taken by the Notaries; and thoſe which were taken by the Notaries, when he had Time, he reviewed, adding ſome [g] Things, and rejecting others, and leaving many Things as he found them, and with ſuch Emendations he compoſed them into Books, and publiſhed them. But many Times the Notaries publiſhed what they had written, without the Author's Knowledge or Conſent. In which caſe, we ſometimes find them remonſtrating againſt this as a clandeſtine Practice [h]. Thus Gaudentius ſays, he did not own thoſe Homilies, which were firſt taken by the Notaries latently and by ſtealth, and then publiſhed by others imperfectly, and only by Halves, with great Chaſms and Interruptions in them. He would not acknowledge them for his Diſcourſes, which the Notaries had written in extreme Haſte, and publiſhed, without giving him any Opportunity to ſuperviſe and correct them. And probably, there may be Reaſon for the ſame Complaint in other Writers. However, it ſhews a great Diligence and Attention in the Hearers of thoſe Days, and a great Reſpect and Honour paid to their Teachers, that they would be at ſo much Pains to treaſure up and preſerve their pious Inſtructions.

SECT. XXX.

Two Reflections made by the Ancients upon ſome of their corrupt Auditors. 1. The negligent and prophane Hearers.

THESE Things may be juſtly ſpoken to their Honour, and it is no Reflection on them, or Diminution of their good Character, that there were ſome others in thoſe Times (as there will be in all Times) who deſerved a contrary Character, either for their Deficiency and want of Zeal in this Matter, or for their indiſcreet and intemperate Zeal, in placing all Religion in a Sermon, and ſpeaking contemptuouſly of Prayer, or other Parts of Divine Service without it. The two Errors in the contrary Extremes, the one in Exceſs, the other in Defect, the Ancients had ſometimes occaſion to rebuke, and they did it with a becoming Sharpneſs. Though St. Chryſoſtom was ſo much admired, that the People generally ſaid, when he was ſent into Baniſhment, that it was better [i] the Sun ſhould withdraw its Rays, than his Mouth be ſhut up in Silence; yet he was often forced with Grief to complain of ſome for their abſtaining from religious Aſſemblies [k], where they were ſcarce ſeen once a Year; of others, that they ſpent their Time there in nothing but idle Diſcourſe, or Laughing and Jeſting, or tranſacting worldly Buſineſs [l], laying themſelves open to the Aſſaults of the wicked Spirit, who found their Houſe fit for his

[a] Euſeb. lib. 6. cap. 36. & Pamphil. Apol. pro Orig. cited before n. 11. [b] Aug. in Pſal. 51. p. 201. Placuit fratribus, non tantum aure & corde, ſed & ſtylo excipienda quæ dicimus: Ut non Auditorem tantum, ſed & Lectorem cogitare debeamus. [c] Socrat. lib. 6. cap. 4. [d] Sozom. lib. 8 cap. 27. [e] Naz. Orat. 32. p. 528. Χαίρετε γραφίδες φανεραὶ καὶ λανθάνουσαι. [f] Greg. Præfat. in Ezek. Homilias, quæ in Beatum Ezekielem Prophetam, ut coram populo loquebar, exceptæ ſunt, multis curis irruentibus in abolitione reliqueram. Sed poſt annos octo, petentibus fratribus, notariorum Schedulas requirere ſtudui, eaſque favente Domino tranſcurrens, in quantum ab anguſtiis tribulationum licuit, emendavi, &c. [g] Id. Præfat. in Job. Cumque mihi ſpatia largiora ſuppeterent, multa augens, pauca ſubtraherem, atque ita ut inventa ſunt nonnulla derelinquens, ea, quæ me loquente excepta ſub oculis fuerant, per Libros emendando compoſui, &c. [h] Gaudent. Præfat. ad Benevolum. Bibl. Patr. tom. 2. p. 3. De illis vero Tractatibus, quos Notariis, ut comperi, latentur adpoſitis, proculdubio interruptos & ſemiplenos otioſa quorundam ſtudia colligere præſumpſerunt, nihil ad me attinet. Mea jam non ſunt, quæ conſtat præcipiti Excipientium feſtinatione eſſe conſcripta. [i] Chryſ. Ep. 125. ad Cyriacum. [k] Hom. 46. in Lucian. Martyr. t. 1. p. 597. Hom. 48. In Inſcript. Altaris. t. 5. p. 648. [l] Hom. 4. De Incomprehenſibili, t. 1. p. 374.

Reception,

Reception, empty, ſwept and garniſhed; of others, that they turned the Church into a Theatre [m], and ſought for nothing there, but to pleaſe their Ears, without any other Advantage; and finally, of others, who extolled his Diſcourſes by great Applauſe in Words, but diſgrac'd them by the Diſobedience of their Lives and Actions; of whom we have heard ſo much before. In one Place he more particularly reproaches them that abſented from Church, with the Example of the Jews, who could abſtain from Work, for Ten, Twenty, or Thirty Days together, without Contradiction [n], at the Command of their Prieſts, and neither open their Doors, nor light a Fire, nor carry in Water for any neceſſary Uſe, which yet they ſubmitted to, though it was an intollerable corporal Slavery; whereas Chriſtians were only required to ſet apart one Day in ſeven, and only two Hours of the Day for religious Aſſemblies, to obtain the greateſt ſpiritual Advantages to the Soul; and yet they neglected ſuch Opportunities, and choſe any Meetings rather than the Church. St. Ambroſe in like manner upbraids thoſe, who ſpent their Time in Talking in the Church, from the Example of the Heathen [o], who reverenced their Idols by their Silence, whilſt Chriſtians even drowned the Voice of the Divine Oracles, and the Declaration of them, by their confuſed Noiſe and Confabulations in the Church. This, Cæſarius tells them [p], was in effect to offer Men Poyſon or a Sword. For ſuch an one neither heard the Word of God himſelf, nor ſuffered others to hear it: And ſuch muſt expect not only to give Account of their own, but other Men's Deſtruction at the Day of Judgment. Origen [q] and ſome others tell theſe Men, their own Practice, in another Caſe, would riſe up in Judgment againſt them: For they themſelves ſhewed a great Reverence to the Body of Chriſt in the Euchariſt; and yet it was no leſs a Piacular Crime, to ſhew Contempt to the Word of God, than to his Body; and they would be held guilty for a Diſreſpect in the one Caſe as well as the other. Thus they ſhewed Men, what Reverence was due to the Preaching of the Word of God, by ſetting before them the Sin and Danger of thoſe Abuſes ſome were apt to run into, by an Error in Defect and Want of a juſt Reverence to it.

SECT. XXXI. And ſecondly, the Intemperate Zealots, who placed all Religion in a Sermon.

ON the other hand, they were no leſs careful to guard Men againſt Superſtition in the other Extreme. For there was an Error in Exceſs, as well as in Defect of Reverence for Preaching. Some were ſo over-run with an indiſcreet Bigotry and intemperate Zeal for Preaching, as to reckon all other Parts of Divine Service uſeleſs and inſignificant, if they were not accompanied with a Sermon. Theſe Men had their Arguments to plead in their own Behalf, which are thus propoſed and anſwered by St. Chryſoſtom [r]: Why ſhould I go to Church, ſaid they, if I cannot hear a Preacher? This one Thing, ſays St. Chryſoſtom, has ruined and deſtroyed all Religion. For what Neceſſity is there of a Preacher? That Neceſſity ariſes only from our Sloth and Negligence. For why otherwiſe ſhould there be any Need of an Homily? All Things are clear and open in the Holy Scriptures; all Things neceſſary are plainly revealed. But becauſe ye are Hearers that ſtudy only to delight your Ears and Fancy, therefore ye deſire theſe Things. Tell me, I pray, with what Pomp of Words did St. Paul preach? And yet he converted the World. What Pomp did the illiterate Peter uſe? But, ſay they, we cannot underſtand the Things that are written in Scripture. Why ſo? are they ſpoken in Hebrew, or Latin, or any other ſtrange Tongue? Are they not ſpoken in Greek, to you that underſtand the Greek Tongue? Yea, but they are ſpoken darkly. How darkly? What Difficulties do the Hiſtories contain? You underſtand the plain Places, that you may take Pains and enquire about the reſt. There are a thouſand Hiſtories in the Bible: Tell me one of them. But you cannot tell one of theſe. Therefore all this is mere Pretence and Words. Oh but, ſay they, we have the ſame Things read to us every Day out of Scripture. And do you not hear the ſame Things every Day in the Theatre? Have you not the ſame Sight at the Horſe-race? Are not all Things the ſame? Does not the ſame Sun riſe every Morning? Do you not eat the ſame Meat every Day? I would ask you, ſeeing you ſay you hear the ſame Things every Day, What Portion of the Prophets, what Apoſtle, what Epiſtle was read? But you cannot tell: They are perfectly new and ſtrange to you. When therefore you are diſpoſed to be idle, you pretend the ſame Things are read: But when you are asked concerning them, you are as Men that never heard them. If they are the ſame, you ſhould have known them: But you know nothing of them. This is a Thing to be lamented, that the Workman labours in vain. For this Reaſon you ought to attend, becauſe they are the ſame, becauſe we bring nothing ſtrange or new to your Ears. What then, becauſe ye ſay the Scriptures are always the ſame, but what we preach are not ſo, but always contain ſomething new, do ye attend to them? In no wiſe. And if we ask you, why do you not remember them? Ye anſwer, How ſhould we, ſeeing we hear them but once? If we ſay, Why do you not remember the Scriptures? Ye anſwer, They are always the ſame. Theſe are nothing but Pretences for Idleneſs, and mere Indications of a ſceptical Temper. Thus that holy Father rebukes that intemperate Zeal, which ſet up [m] Hom. 2. ad Pop. Antioch. t. 1. p. 31. [n] Hom. 48. De Inſcript. Altaris. t. 5. p. 648. [o] Ambroſ. de Virgin. lib. 3. An quicquam eſt indignius, quam Oracula divina circumſtrepi, ne audiantur, ne credantur, ne revelentur? circumſonare Sacramenta confuſis vocibus, cum Gentiles Idolis ſuis Reverentiam tacendo deferant? [p] Cæſar. Arelat. Hom. 34. [q] Orig. Hom. 13. in Exod. t. 1. p. 102. Quomodo putatis minoris eſſe Piaculi, Verbum Dei neglexiſſe, quam Corpus ejus? Vid. Aug. Hom. 26, ex 50. [r] Chryſ. Hom. 3. in 2 Theſ. p. 1502.

Preaching in Oppoſition to Reading of the Scriptures, under various Pretences of their being obſcure, or tedious Repetitions of the ſame things, when in Truth a fanatical Affectation of Novelty, and a fantaſtical Scepticiſm, and a vicious Deſire of being freed from all the Burden of Attending upon religious Aſſemblies, was really at the Bottom of all their Objections.

SECT. XXXII. How Men were treated, who thought their Sermons too long.

THERE is but one thing more to be obſerved upon this Head: which is, That as there were ſome who complained, that their Sermons were not frequent enough, or too ſhort; ſo there were others that complained, they were too long, and were diſpoſed to leave the Aſſembly before Sermon was ended. Some Canons are pretty ſevere upon ſuch Auditors. The fourth Council of Carthage orders them to be proceeded againſt [s] with Excommunication. But others uſed a more gentle way, contenting themſelves to admoniſh their Auditors of their Duty, and ſometimes uſing ingenious Stratagems, and feign'd Apologues to detain them; and ſometimes ordering the Doors of the Church to be kept ſhut, till all was ended. Which is particularly remarked of Cæſarius Arelatenſis, by the Author of his Life [t]. St. Chryſoſtom conſiders the Matter with ſome Diſtinction. He makes ſome Allowance for the Weakneſs of ſuch as were unable to hold out the whole time at a long Sermon: And for as much as many were more deſirous of long Sermons than ſhort ones, he thinks the Matter was ſo to be ordered, as to accommodate both. Seeing there are ſome, ſays he, in ſo great a Multitude, who cannot [u] bear a long Diſcourſe, my Advice to ſuch is, that when they have heard as much as they can contain, and as much as ſuffices them, they ſhould depart, (for no one hinders them, or compels them to ſtay longer than their Strength is able to bear) that they may not impoſe a Neceſſity on us of making an End before the proper time. For thou art ſatisfied, but thy Brother is yet hungry: Thou haſt drunk thy Fill of what is ſpoken, but thy Brother is yet athirſt. Therefore neither let him burden thy Weakneſs, by compelling thee to receive more than thy Strength will bear; neither be thou injurious to his Deſire of Hearing, by hindring him from taking as much as he is able to receive. For ſo it is at a common Table, ſome are filled ſooner, ſome later, and neither do theſe accuſe thoſe, nor they condemn the other. But there is a Commendation to depart quickly; but here to depart quickly is not commendable, but only pardonable. To ſtay long at a carnal Feaſt, is a Matter worthy of Reproof, becauſe it proceeds from an intemperate Appetite: But to ſtay long at a ſpiritual Feaſt, deſerves the higheſt Praiſe and Commendation, becauſe it proceeds from a ſpiritual Deſire and holy Appetite, and argues Patience and Conſtancy in giving Attention. Thus that holy Father decides the Controverſy about long and ſhort Sermons, and prudently divides the Matter between ſtrong and weak Hearers; commending the one, without condemning the other; and making ſome Apology for the length of his Sermons, without Offence to either Party. I ſhall make the ſame Apology to my Readers for the length of this Chapter: If there be any whoſe Curioſity leads them to know all that relates to the Preaching of the Ancients, they may read the whole, and perhaps will not think it too long; but they whoſe Appetite is not ſo ſharp, may ſhorten it as they pleaſe, and accommodate it to their own Uſe, by ſelecting ſuch Parts as are moſt agreeable to their own Taſte, and proper for their own Inſtruction. And ſo I end the Diſcourſe about Preaching in the antient Church.

CHAP. V.

Of the Prayers for the Catechumens, Energumens, Competentes or Candidates of Baptiſm, and Penitents.

SECT. I. That Prayers in the antient Church were not before, but after the Sermon.

AS ſoon as the Sermon was ended, the publick Prayers of the Church began, and not before. For antiently the Order of Divine Service was a little different in its Method from what it is uſually now in the Church. For antiently the greateſt Part of the publick Prayers came after Sermon. This is expreſly ſaid by Juſtin Martyr in his Apology, where he is giving an Account of the Chriſtian Worſhip on the Lord's Day. He ſays, they firſt read the Scriptures, then the Preſident or Biſhop made a Diſcourſe or Exhortation; after which they roſe up all together and made their common [a] Prayers: And then when theſe were ended, the Biſhop prayed again, and gave Thanks for the Conſecration of the Bread and Wine in the Euchariſt, the People anſwering, Amen. And ſo St. Chryſoſtom affirms alſo, ſaying in one place [b], the Exhortation comes firſt, and then im-

[s] Conc. Carth. 4. Can. 24. Sacerdote Verbum faciente in Eccleſia, qui egreſſus de Auditorio fuerit, excommunicetur.

[t] Cyprian Vit. Cæſar. cap. 12. Sæpiſſime oſtia, lectis Evangeliis, occludi juſſit; donec propitio Deo ipſi gratularentur, ea coercitione ſe profeciſſe, qui ſolebant eſſe fugitivi. Vid. Cæſar. Hom. 12.

[u] Chryſ. 60. Dæmones non gubernare Mundum. t. . p. 784.

[a] Juſtin. Apol. 2. p. 98. ὁ προεστὼς τὴν νουθεσίαν ποιεῖται· ἔπειτα ἀνιστάμεθα κοινῇ πάντες, καὶ εὐχὰς πέμπομεν. &c.

[b] Chryſ. Hom. 28. quæ eſt 3. de Incomprehenſibili. t. 1. p. 364. μετὰ τὴν ἀφάνεσιν ἐυδέως εὐχή.

mediately Prayer. And in another [c] place, You need both Advice and Prayer: Therefore we adviſe you firſt, (meaning in the Sermon) and then we make Prayers for you. They that are initiated know what I ſay. So that when Chryſoſtom, or any others ſay, Prayer went before Sermon, they are to be underſtood either of that ſhort Salutation, which the Miniſter uſed at the Entrance upon every Office, The Lord be with you, the People anſwering, And with thy Spirit: Or of ſome ſhort Prayer of the Preacher; or of the private Prayers of People intermingled with the Pſalmody; and not of the common Prayers of the Church. For many Orders of Men might be preſent at the Sermon, and to hear the Scriptures read, who might not join in Prayers with the Faithful; and for that Reaſon the Sermon and reading of the Scriptures went before, that ſuch Perſons might have the Benefit of them, who were to be diſmiſſed when the Prayers begun, becauſe they had as yet no Title to communicate in them.

SECT. II. Who might, or might not be preſent at theſe Prayers. Infidels and mere Hearers obliged to withdraw.

THESE Prayers were of two Sorts: Prayers peculiar to the Faithful or Communicants only, at which neither Catechumens, nor Penitents, nor Energumens, nor any Perſons yet unbaptized might be preſent: And Prayers made particularly for theſe ſeveral Orders, at which therefore they were allowed to be preſent, and both hear the Prayers, and pray for themſelves. But even from theſe Prayers ſome were obliged to withdraw, who were allowed to be preſent at Sermons for their Inſtruction. Such were all Jews and Infidels, and ſuch of the Catechumens and Penitents as were known by the diſtinct Name of ἀκροώμενοι among the Greeks, and Audientes among the Latins, that is, Hearers only. Therefore as ſoon as Sermon was ended, before any of theſe Prayers began in the Service of the Catechumens, a Deacon was uſed to make Proclamation from ſome Eminency in the Church. Ne quis Audientium, Ne quis Infidelium, Let none of the Hearers, Let none of the Unbelievers be preſent, as it is worded in the Conſtitutions [d].

SECT. III. Of the Prayers for the Catechumens. The genuine Forms of them out of St. Chryſoſtom and the Conſtitutions.

THIS ſaid, and Silence being made, the Deacon cried again, Pray, ye Catechumens: And, Let all the Faithful with Attention pray for them, ſaying, Lord have mercy upon them. Then the Deacon began a Prayer for them, which in the Conſtitutions is called προσφώνησις ὑπὲρ τῶν κατηχουμένων, a Bidding Prayer for the Catechumens, becauſe it was both an Exhortation and Direction how they were to pray for them. We have two antient Forms of this Prayer ſtill remaining, one in St. Chryſoſtom, and another in the Conſtitutions. That in the Conſtitutions is in theſe Words [e]: Let us all beſeech God for the Catechumens; that he who is Gracious, and a Lover of Mankind, would mercifully hearken to their Supplications and Prayers, and accepting their Petitions would help them, and grant them the Requeſts of their Souls according to what is expedient for them; That he would reveal the Goſpel of Chriſt to them; That he would enlighten and inſtruct them, and teach them the Knowledge of God and divine Things; That he would inſtruct them in his Precepts and Judgments; That he would open the Ears of their Hearts to be occupied in his Law Day and Night; That he would confirm them in Religion; That he would unite them to, and number them with his holy Flock, vouchſafing them the Laver of Regeneration, with the Garment of Incorruption, and true Life; That he would deliver them from all Impiety, and give no place to the Adverſary to get Advantage againſt them; but that he would cleanſe them from all Pollution of Fleſh and Spirit, and dwell in them, and walk in them by Chriſt; That he would bleſs their going out and their coming in, and direct all their Deſigns and Purpoſes to their Advantage. Farther yet, Let us earneſtly pray for them, that they may have Remiſſion of Sins by the Initiation of Baptiſm, and be thought worthy of the holy Myſteries, and remain among his Saints.

Then the Deacon addreſſing himſelf to the Catechumens themſelves, ſaid, Catechumens ariſe. Pray for the Peace of God, that this Day, and all the time of your Life may paſs in Quietneſs and without Sin; that you may make a Chriſtian End, and find God propitious and merciful, and obtain Remiſſion of your Sins. Commend your ſelves to the only unbegotten God by his Chriſt.

To every Petition of this Bidding Prayer, the People, and eſpecially Children, are appointed to ſubjoin, κύριε ἐλέησον, Lord have mercy upon them.

After this the Deacon bids them bow down, and receive the Biſhop's Benediction; which is in the following Form of direct Invocation.

O Almighty God, who art without Original and Inacceſſible, the only true God, thou God and Father of Chriſt thy only-begotten Sin, God of the Comforter [*], and Lord of all things; who by Chriſt didſt make Learners become Teachers for the Propagation of Chriſtian Knowledge; Look down now upon theſe thy Servants, who are Learning the Inſtructions of the Goſpel of thy Chriſt: And give them a new Heart, and renew a right Spirit within them, that they may know

[c] Id. Hom. 11. in 1 Theſ. p. 1480. πρότερον συμβεβλώνεις, τότε τὰς ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν ἐυχὰς ποιώμεθα. καὶ τοῦτο ἴσασιν οἱ μεμυημένοι. [d] Conſtit. Apoſt. lib. 8. c. 5. [e] Conſtit. lib. 8. c. 6. [*] This Phraſe, ὁ Θεὸς τῶν παρακλήτων, and a like Phraſe, which occurs in the Prayer of this Author in the Daily Evening Service, lib. 8. cap. 37. where the Father is ſtyled, ὁ τῶν πνευμάτων κύριος, the Lord of the Spirit, are harſh Expreſſions, and not very uſual in Catholick Writers; which makes ſome ſuſpect this Author, as if he were tainted with the Macedonian Hereſy, which denies the Divinity of the Holy Ghoſt, and makes him a mere Creature. But this ſeems not to have been the Intent of our Author, who no where denies the true Divinity of the Son or Holy Ghoſt, but only gives ſuch Titles of Pre-eminence to the Father, as Juſtin Martyr did before him, in regard to the Father's being the Fountain of the Deity, and the Origin of Exiſtence in the Son and Holy Spirit, not as Creatures, but as his Eternal Son and Eternal Holy Spirit, equal to him know and do thy Will with a perfect Heart and a willing Mind. Vouchsafe them thy holy Baptism, and unite them to thy holy Church, and make them Partakers of thy holy Mysteries, through Christ our Hope, who died for them, by whom be Glory and Worship unto thee, World without End. Amen. After this, let the Deacon say, Catechumens, depart in Peace.

St. Chrysostom in one of his Homilies gives us a like Form of the Deacons Bidding Prayer for the Catechumens. The Law [g] of the Church, says he, moves the Faithful to pray for those who are yet unbaptized. For when the Deacon says, Let us pray fervently for the Catechumens, he does nothing else but excite the whole Multitude of the Faithful to pray for them. For the Catechumens are as yet Aliens: They are not yet engrafted into the Body of Christ, nor made Partakers of the holy Mysteries, but remain divided from the spiritual Flock. And for that Reason he says, Let us pray fervently; that you may not reject them as Aliens, that you may not disown them as Strangers. For they are not yet allowed to use the Prayer that was introduced and established by the Law of Christ. He means the Lord's Prayer. They have not yet Liberty or Confidence enough to pray for themselves, but need the Help of those that are already initiated. For they stand without the Royal Gates, and at a distance from the holy Rails. And for that Reason are sent away when the tremendous Prayers are offered at the Altar. Upon this Account the Deacon exhorts you to pray for them, that they may be made Members, and be no longer Foreigners and Aliens. For that Word, Let us pray, is not spoken to the Priests only, but also to the People. For when he says, σῶμεν καλῶς, σταθῶμεν, Let us stand decently, Let us pray, he exhorts all to pray. And then he begins the Prayer in these Words:

That the Merciful and Gracious God would vouchsafe to hear their Prayers; that he would open the Ears of their Hearts; that they may hear what Eye hath not seen, nor Ear heard, neither hath it entred into the Heart of Man; that he would instil into them the Word of his Truth; that he would sow the Word of his Truth in their Hearts; and confirm his Faith in their Minds; that he would reveal unto them the Gospel of Righteousness; that he would give them a divine and heavenly Mind, pure and holy Thoughts, and a virtuous Conversation; always to mind, always to regard, and meditate upon the Things that belong to him, and to be occupied in his Law Day and Night. Let us pray yet more ardently for them, that he would deliver them from all evil and absurd Employments, from all diabolical Sin, and all the Circumventions of the Adversary; that he would vouchsafe to bring them in due time to the Laver of Regeneration, and grant them Remission of Sins, and the Clothing of Incorruption; that he would, during their whole Lives, bless their Going out and their Coming in, their Houses and Families; that he would encrease and bless their Children, and bring them to the Measure of perfect Age with the Instruction of Wisdom; and that he would direct all their Purposes to their Advantage.

After this, the Deacon bids them rise up and pray for themselves, dictating what they were to pray for: Pray, ye Catechumens, for the Angel of Peace; that all your Purposes may be peaceably directed: Pray, that this present Day and all the Days of your Lives may be spent in Peace, and that you may make a Christian End. Commend your selves to the Living God and to his Christ.

This being done, says Chrysostom, we bid them bow their Heads, and receive the Benediction of God, as a Sign that their Prayers are heard. For it is not Man that blesses them, but by his Hands and Tongue we present their Heads, as they stand there, to the heavenly King; and then all the Congregation with a loud Voice cry out, Amen.

Here is a plain Account of the second Prayer that was made for the Catechumens by the Bishop, which is styled here, as it is also in the Constitutions, the Bishop's Commendation or Benediction.

Learned Men think this Homily was preached by Chrysostom when he was Bishop of Constantinople. And if so, we must conclude that these Prayers were the Forms that were used then in the Liturgy of Constantinople.

SECT. IV.

What meant by their Praying for the Angel of Peace in this Form of Prayer.

AND I the rather incline to this Opinion, because there is some little Difference between this Form of Chrysostom's and that in the Constitutions. For in this of Chrysostom's the Catechumens are bid to pray for the Angel of Peace, which is not mentioned in the Form of the Constitutions; tho' it be in another place [h] where Directions are given for the Ordinary Morning and Evening Service. St. Chrysostom often mentions this same Petition for the Angel of Peace in his other Homilies. As in his third Homily upon the Colossians, where he says, every Man has Angels attending him, and also the Devil very busy about him. Therefore we pray [i] and make our Supplicatihim in all Essential Perfections, but only deriving those Divine Perfections from him, as the Author and Fountain of their Being, as God of God, and Light of Light, by eternal Generation and Procession. In this sense, Bishop Bull has observed, that Justin Martyr in his Dialogue with Tryphon, p. 358. uses the very same Expression, in speaking of the Son, as our Author does of the Spirit: For he says, The Father is Κυρίου Κύριος, ὡς πατὴρ καὶ Θεὸς, αἴτιός τε αὐτῷ τοῦ εἶναι καὶ δυνατῷ, καὶ κυρίῳ, καὶ Θεῷ, The Lord of the Lord, as Father and God, and Cause of his Being, of and from whom he has even this, that he is Omnipotent and Lord and God. Where Bishop Bull rightly observes, That God the Father is said to be God and Lord of his Son, not as he is Lord of the Creatures, but quatenus est Fons Divinitatis & Causa Filio, ut sit, As he is the Fountain of the Deity and Cause of his Son's Existence: Which does not make the Son a Creature, but the True, Consubstantial, and Eternal Son of God; or as our Author expresses himself accurately elsewhere, he is hereby Θεὸς μονογενὴς, God the Only-begotten; that is, the true Son of the Father, who is styled Lord of the Son, not as a Creator, but as a Father. [g] Chrys. Hom. 2. in 2 Cor. p. 740. [h] Constit. lib. 8. cap. 36, & 37. [i] Chrys. Hom. 3. in Colos. p. 1338. διὰ τοῦτο εὐχόμεθα, καὶ λέγομεν αὐτοῖς τὸν ἄγγελον τῆς εἰρήνης.

ons for the Angel of Peace. And so in his Sermon [k] upon the Ascension: Speaking of the Air being filled with good and bad Angels, the one always raising War and Discord in the World, and the other inclining Men to Peace, he tells his Auditory, they might know there were Angels of Peace, by hearing the Deacons always in the Prayers bidding Men pray for the Angel of Peace. This undoubtedly refers to the forementioned Form of Prayer, wherein the Catechumens are directed to ask of God the Protection of the Angel of Peace. In like manner in another [l] place, When the Deacon bids Men pray with others, he enjoins them this among the rest of their Petitions, to pray for the Angel of Peace, and that all their Purposes may be peaceably directed. Which are the very Words of the Catechumens Prayer abovesaid.

The Design of all which was, not to teach their Catechumens to pray to their Guardian Angels (according to the modern way of instructing in the Romish Church [m]; though this had been a very proper Season to have admonished the Catechumens of it, had there been any such Practice in the antient Church;) but it was to teach them to pray to the God of Angels: That he who makes his Angels to encamp about his Servants, would by their Ministry defend them from the Incursions of wicked Spirits, those Fomenters of War and Division and Enmity among Men, and so keep them and all their Purposes in a Course of perpetual and uninterrupted Peace, that they might finally make a Christian and a Peaceable End.

SECT. V. Children in some Churches appointed to say this Prayer with the rest of the People.

ANOTHER Thing wherein the Form in the Constitutions differs from that in St. Chrysostom, is, that it appoints the Children of the Church particularly and more especially to join in this common Prayer for the Catechumens; whereas the Form used in St. Chrysostom's Church mentions no such thing: And Chrysostom himself in another place [n] says plainly, that Children were not called upon to join in the Prayers for the Energumens and Penitents (which were of the same sort with these for the Catechumens) but only in the Prayers for the Communicants at the Altar. As these Differences prove the two Forms not to belong to the Liturgy of one and the same Church; so they make it probable, that St. Chrysostom gives us the Form used in the Church of Constantinople, and the Author of the Constitutions the Form that was used at Antioch, or some other eminent Church, whose Rituals he transcribed and put together.

SECT. VI. What Notice we have of this Prayer in other antient Writings.

NOW by having fixed this Prayer in its proper place, we may interpret all other Passages in the antient Writers, which speak of praying over the Catechumens, or praying with them. As that of the Council of Nice, which orders, that if any of those, who were Catechumens properly so called, that is, of that Rank who had these Prayers said over them, became Lapsers, then they should for three Years be thrust down to the Rank of Hearers only, and after that be admitted [o] to pray with the Catechumens again. And that Canon of the Council of Neocæsarea [p], which orders, that if any such Catechumens, as were called γόνυ κλίνοντες, that is, Prostrators or Kneelers, who bowed down to have these Prayers said over them, should fall into any scandalous Sin, then they should be excluded from the Prayers, and be ranked among the Hearers only: And if they fell again when they were Hearers, they should be excluded from the very Entrance of the Church.

SECT. VII. Of the Prayers for the Energumens, or Persons possessed by evil Spirits. The Forms of these Prayers.

THE next sort of Persons for whom Prayers were now made, were the Energumens, that is, such Persons as were seized or possessed by an evil Spirit. For though these were under the peculiar Care of the Exorcists, an Order set apart particularly to attend them, and pray over them in private, as has been shewed more fully in a former [*] Book; yet their Case being pitiable and deplorable, it was thought an Act of becoming Mercy and Charity to let them have the publick Prayers of the Church, and grant them Liberty to be present at such Prayers as immediately respected their Condition. Therefore as soon as the Deacons had dismissed the Catechumens, with the usual Form, Catechumens, depart in Peace: He said again, Pray, ye Energumens, who are vexed with unclean Spirits. And exhorting the Congregation also, he said, Let us ardently pray for them, (as the Form of this Bidding-Prayer runs in the Constitutions) [q] That the Merciful God, through Christ, would rebuke the unclean and evil Spirits, and deliver his Supplicants from the Oppression and Tyranny of the Adversary; that he who rebuked the Legion of Devils, and the Prince of Devils, the Fountain of Evil, would now rebuke these Apostates from Piety, and deliver the Works of his own Hands from the Molestations and Agitations of Satan, and cleanse them which he hath created in great Wisdom. Let us farther most ardently pray for them. Save them, and raise them up, O God, by thy Power.

Then he bids them bow down their Heads, and receive the Bishop's Benediction, which is in the following Form of Words, immediately addressed to Christ.

O Thou Only-begotten God, the Son of the Great [k] Hom. 35. in Ascension. Domini. t. 5. p. 535. Ἵνα μάθῃς ὅτι ἄγγελοι εἰρήνης εἰσὶν, ἄκουσον ἐν ταῖς προσευχαῖς ἀεὶ λεγόντων τῶν διακόνων, τὸν ἄγγελον τῆς εἰρήνης αἰτήσασθε. [l] Hom. 52. in eos qui Pascha jejunant, t. 5. p. 713. ὁ διάκονος ἢ κελεύων εὐχεσθαι μετὰ τῶν ἄλλων, καὶ τοῦτο ἐπιτάττει καὶ τὸν ὑπὲρ εἰρήνης, καὶ τὰ προκείμενα πάντα εἰρηνικά. [m] Vid. Drexel. de Cultu Cœlitum. lib. 2. cap. 3. [n] Chrys. Hom. 71. in Mat. p. 624. [o] Conc. Nicen. can. 14. [p] Conc. Neocæsar. can. 6. [*] Book III. Chap. iv. n. 6, and 7. [q] Constit. lib. 8. cap. 6.

Father;

Father; Thou that bindeſt the ſtrong one, and ſpoileſt his Goods; that giveſt Power unto us to tread on Serpents and Scorpions, and over all the Power of the Enemy: that haſt delivered up the murdering Serpent unto us a Priſoner, as a Sparrow unto Children; Thou, before whom all Things ſhake and tremble at the Preſence of thy Power; that makeſt Satan to fall from Heaven to the Earth as Lightning, not by a local Fall, but by a Fall from Honour to Diſgrace, becauſe of his voluntary Malice; Thou whoſe Looks dry up the Deep, and Threatnings make the Mountains melt, whoſe Truth endures for ever; whom Infants praiſe, and Sucklings bleſs, and Angels celebrate and adore; that lookeſt upon the Earth, and makeſt it tremble; that toucheſt the Mountains, and they ſmoke; that rebukeſt the Sea, and drieſt it up, and turneſt the Rivers into a Wilderneſs; that makeſt the Clouds to be the Duſt of thy Feet, and walkeſt upon the Sea as upon a Pavement: Rebuke the evil Spirits, and deliver the Works of thy Hands from the Vexation of the adverſe Spirit: For to Thee belongs Glory, Honour, and Adoration, and by Thee to thy Father in the Holy Spirit, World without End. Amen.

SECT. VIII. An Account of theſe Prayers out of St. Chryſoſtom and others.

ST. Chryſoſtom has not this whole Form, but he often refers to it as one of the publick Prayers of the Church. Common Prayers, ſays he, are made by the Prieſts [r] and People together for the Energumens, and for the Penitents; we all ſay one and the ſame Prayers, the Prayer that is ſo full of Mercy. And again, For this Reaſon [s] the Deacon at this time brings thoſe that are vexed with evil Spirits, and commands them to bow down their Heads only, and in that Poſture of Body make their Supplications. For they may not pray with the whole Congregation of the Brethren. And for this Reaſon he preſents them before you, that you having Mercy on them, both in regard of their Vexation, and their Diſability to ſpeak for themſelves, may by your Freedom of Acceſs give them Patronage and Aſſiſtance. In another place [t] he more fully explains the Reaſon why this Prayer for the Demoniacks came before the Oblation of the Euchariſt, and why at that time the Deacon commanded them to be brought forth and bow their Heads. Their being poſſeſſed of the Devil, ſays he, is a cruel and grievous Chain, a Chain harder than any Iron. As therefore when a Judge is about to come forth, and ſit upon the Judgment-ſeat, the Keepers of the Priſon bring forth all the Priſoners, and place them before the Rails and Curtains of the Tribunal, in all their Filth and Naſtineſs, with their Hair undreſſed, and clothed in Rags: So our Forefathers appointed, that when Chriſt was in a little time about to ſit as it were upon the high Throne, and ſhortly to appear in the holy Myſteries, then the Demoniacks ſhould be brought forth as ſo many Priſoners in Chains, not to be condemned or ſuffer Puniſhment for their Sins, as other Priſoners; but that when the People and whole City are preſent together in the Church, common Prayer might be made for them, whilſt they all with one Conſent beſought the common Lord for them, and with loud Voices entreated him to ſhew Mercy on them. Here though he does not ſpecify the whole Form, yet he plainly intimates both the Time, and Subject Matter of the Prayer, and alſo the manner of Addreſs; that it was a Prayer ſent up by the common Voice of the People, ſome time before the Appearance of Chriſt in the Euchariſt, and that as an Addreſs to God to implore his Mercy on thoſe pitiable Objects that lay in that forlorn Condition before him. In which reſpect he elſewhere ſtyles it [u] the firſt Prayer of Mercy, ſaying, The firſt Prayer is full of Mercy, when we pray for the Energumens. The ſecond alſo, wherein we pray for the Penitents, ſues equally for Mercy. And the third, when we pray for our ſelves, preſents the Children of the People before God, crying out to him for Mercy. Where by the firſt Prayer, he does not abſolutely mean the firſt Prayer that was made in this Part of Divine Service; for it is plain, the Prayer for the Catechumens came before it: But becauſe the Energumens were in a more miſerable Condition than the Catechumens, and greater Objects of Pity than they were, he therefore ſtyles the Prayer for them the firſt Prayer of Mercy, as he does the Prayer for the Penitents, the ſecond Prayer for Mercy, though it was in order the fourth; and the Prayer for the Faithful, the third Prayer for Mercy, though it belonged to another Part of the Service, of which we ſhall ſpeak more particularly in the firſt Chapter of the next Book.

SECT. IX. Of the third ſort of Prayers for the Competentes or Candidates of Baptiſm.

THE third Prayer that came in the ordinary Courſe of this Part of the Service, was the Prayer for the Competentes, or Candidates of Baptiſm, that is, ſuch as had now given in their Names, and expreſſed their Deſire of receiving Baptiſm at the next approaching Feſtival. This, I conceive, was but an occaſional Prayer, appropriated to certain Seaſons, as the time between Mid-Lent and Eaſter-Day, or other ſolemn Times of Baptiſm, when Men were more than ordinarily intent in preparing themſelves for the Reception of that ſacred Myſtery. The Forms of theſe kind of Prayers we have alſo in the Conſtitutions [x], where, as ſoon as the Deacon has diſmiſſed the Energumens, he is appointed to cry out, εὔξασθε οἱ φωτιζόμενοι, Pray, ye Candidates of Baptiſm: And we that are already Believers, let us ardently pray for them; That the Lord would make them worthy to be baptized into the Death of Chriſt, and to [r] Chryſ. Hom. 18. in 2 Cor. p. 873. καὶ γὰρ ὅταν ἡμῖν ἐνεργουμένων, ὅταν ἡμῖν ἐν μελαγχολίᾳ, κοιναὶ καὶ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἱερέως καὶ παρ' αὐτῶν γίνονται εὐχαὶ· καὶ πάντες λέγουσι μίαν εὐχὴν, εὐχὴν τὴν ἐλέους γέμουσαν. [s] Id. Hom. 3. de Incomprehenſibili. t. 1. p. 365. διὰ τοῦτο καὶ τοὺς ἐνεργουμένους καλῶν ἑκάστοτε ἵστησι τὸν καιρὸν ὁ διάκονος, &c. [t] Chryſ. Hom. 4. de Incomprehenſ. t. 1. p. 374. [u] Chryſ. Hom. 71. al. 72. in Mat. p. 624. [x] Conſt. lib. 8. cap. 7.

riſe

riſe again with him, and to be made Members of his Kingdom, and Partakers of his Myſteries; that he would unite them to his Holy Church, and number them with thoſe that ſhall be ſaved therein. Save them, and raiſe them up by thy Grace.

Then they are ordered to bow down their Heads, and receive the Biſhop's Benediction, which is expreſſed in the following Words:

O God, who didſt by the Prediction of thy holy Prophets, ſay to them that are to be initiated, Waſh ye, make you clean; and by Chriſt didſt appoint a ſpiritual Regeneration: Look down now upon theſe Perſons, who are to be baptized; bleſs and ſanctify them; fit and prepare them, that they may be worthy of thy ſpiritual Gift, and the true Adoption of Sons, and thy ſpiritual Myſteries, and be deſervedly numbred among thoſe that are ſaved, by Chriſt our Saviour, through whom be all Glory, Honour, and Adoration unto Thee, and the Holy Ghoſt, World without End. Amen.

I have nothing farther to remark concerning theſe Prayers, becauſe neither Chryſoſtom nor any other antient Writer, as far as I know, have ſaid any thing particularly about them. Only this Author in another place [y] makes them part of the daily Morning and Evening Service, as has been noted before in ſpeaking of That, under a former Head. 'Tis probable in many Churches they were included in the Forms for the Catechumens in general. For the Council of Laodicea [z], which ſettles the Order of the Divine Service in the Church, and appoints in what Method it ſhould proceed, ſpeaks of the Prayers of the Catechumens, as immediately following the Sermon, and then the Prayers for the Penitents, and after thoſe the Prayers for the Faithful, which began the Communion Service; but makes no mention of any Prayers for the Candidates of Baptiſm, as diſtinct from thoſe of the Catechumens. And this might be one Reaſon, why other Writers make no mention of them. In other Churches they were but occaſional Prayers, for the particular Times of Baptiſm, and therefore it is as little Wonder that other Authors paſs them over without the leaſt Notice taken of them. However, that the Author of the Conſtitutions found them diſtinct in the Rituals of ſome Churches, is not at all unlikely, becauſe ſuch Forms for the Candidates of Baptiſm are now in Uſe in the Greek Church, as may be ſeen in Goar [a]; and Cardinal Bona [b] has obſerved the like in a very antient Ordo Sacramentorum, lately in the Poſſeſſion of the Queen of Sweden, where in the Office for the third Sunday in Lent there is a ſpecial Prayer inſerted for thoſe who were then examined and elected to receive Baptiſm at Eaſter. But I proceed with the Service of the antient Church.

SECT. X. Of the laſt Sort of Prayers for the Penitents.

THE laſt ſort of Prayers in this Part of the Service were thoſe which were made for the Penitents, who were under the Diſcipline and Cenſures of the Church. Some of theſe, called Hearers only, were ſent away with that Order of Catechumens, which were diſtinguiſhed by the ſame Denomination of Hearers: But others of them, called Kneelers or Proſtrators, were permitted to ſtay longer, to receive the Prayers of the Church and the Biſhop's Benediction. Therefore as ſoon as the Candidates of Baptiſm were diſmiſſed, the Deacon cryed out, Orate Pœnitentes, Ye that are under Penance, make your Prayers: And let us ardently pray for our Brethren that are doing Penance; That the God of Mercy [c] would ſhew them the way of Repentance; that he would admit their Recantation and Confeſſion; that he would ſhortly bruiſe Satan under their feet; and deliver them from the Snare of the Devil, and the Incurſion of evil Spirits, and preſerve them from all evil Words, all abſurd Practices, and all impure Thoughts; that he would grant them Pardon of all their Sins, Voluntary and Involuntary, and blot out the Handwriting that is againſt them, and write them in the Book of Life; that he would cleanſe them from all Pollution of Fleſh and Spirit, and unite and reſtore them to his holy Flock; for he knows our Frame; for who can glory that he has a clean Heart? Or who can ſay, that he is pure from Sin? For we are all liable to Puniſhment. Let us ſtill pray more ardently for them, becauſe there is Joy in Heaven over one Sinner that repenteth; that they may turn from every evil Work, and accuſtom themſelves to all that is good; that the merciful God receiving them kindly, may reſtore to them the Joy of his Salvation, and confirm them with his Principal Spirit, that they may never fall or be ſhaken again; that they may Communicate in his holy Solemnities, and be Partakers of his ſacred Myſteries; that being made worthy of the Adoption of Sons, they may obtain Eternal Life. Let us all farther ſay for them, Lord have Mercy upon them: Save them, O God, and raiſe them up by thy Mercy.

This ſaid, the Deacon bids them riſe up, and bow their Heads to receive the Biſhop's Benediction, which is ſtyled alſo Impoſition of Hands and Prayer for the Penitents, and is conceived in the following Words [d].

O Almighty and Eternal God, the Lord of the whole World, the Maker and Governor of all Things, who haſt made Man to be an Ornament of the World, through Chriſt, and haſt given him both a Natural and a written Law, that he might live by the Rules thereof, as a Rational Creature; that haſt alſo, when he hath ſinned, given him a Motive and Encouragement to repent, even thy own Goodneſs: Look down now upon thoſe Men, who bow the Necks of their Souls and Bodies unto Thee; for thou deſireſt not the Death of a Sinner, but his Repentance, that he ſhould turn from his evil way, and live. Thou that acceptedſt the Repentance of the Ninivites; that wouldſt have all Men to be ſaved, and come to the Knowledge of the Truth; that receivedſt again the Prodigal Son, who had ſpent his Subſtance in riotous Living, with the Compaſſionate Bowels of a [y] Conſtit. lib. 8. cap. 35. & 37. [z] Conc. Laodic. can. 19. [a] Goar. Eucholog. p. 339. [b] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 2. cap. 12. n. 4. p. 630. [c] Conſtit. Apoſt. lib. 8. cap. 8. [d] Ibid. cap. 9.

Father, becauſe of his Repentance: Accept now the Repentance of theſe thy Supplicants; for there is no Man that ſinneth not againſt Thee: If thou, Lord, wilt mark what is done amiſs, O Lord, who may abide it? For there is Mercy and Propitiation with Thee. Reſtore them to thy Holy Church, in their former Dignity and Honour, through Chriſt our God and Saviour; by whom be Glory and Adoration unto Thee, in the Holy Ghoſt, World without End. Amen.

SECT. XI. What Notice we have of theſe Prayers in Chryſoſtom and other Writers.

ST. Chryſoſtom does no where give us theſe Prayers entire, but he frequently refers to them as then uſed in the Church in this Part of Divine Service. We have heard him ſay before [e], that Common Prayers were made by the Prieſt and the People jointly together, as well for the Penitents as the Energumens; and that they all ſaid one and the ſame Prayer, the Prayer full of Mercy. In another Place [f], The firſt Prayer is full of Mercy, when we pray for the Energumens: The ſecond Prayer likewiſe, wherein we pray for the Penitents, makes Interceſſion for Mercy. I have given the Reaſon already why both theſe Prayers were ſtyled Prayers for Mercy by Chryſoſtom, and I need here only obſerve, that they were uſed before the Prayers for the Faithful or Communicants, as Chryſoſtom ſays expreſly in the ſame Place; and that they were by a certain Form, becauſe they were offered by the common Voice both of Miniſter and People. The Council of Laodicea [g] alſo mentions this Prayer for the Penitents, as coming after the Sermon, next to the Prayers for the Faithful. And in all antient Canons [h] where-ever we meet with the Names of γόνυ κλίνοντες, ὑποπίπτοντες, and Proſtrati, Kneelers or Proſtrators, we are to underſtand this Order of Penitents, who in this Part of the Service bowed down to receive the Church's Prayerrs and the Biſhop's Benediction.

SECT. XII. In what Part of the Church theſe Prayers were made.

AS to the Greek Church then, it is demonſtrated beyond all Contradiction, that there was a particular Service of Prayers for the Catechumens, Energumens, and Penitents, diſtinct from the Communion Service, in which they were again prayed for, though abſent, among all other States and Conditions of Men. But there remain two Queſtions, which have a little more Difficulty in them. 1. In what Part of the Church theſe Prayers were made? 2. Whether there were any ſuch Prayers at all in Uſe in the Latin Church? As to the firſt Queſtion, ſome learned Perſons [i] are of Opinion, that not only the Oblations were made at the Altar, and the Communion received there, but that all the Prayers of the Church were made at the Altar likewiſe. Which is certainly true of all the Prayers in the Communion Service, but not ſo certain of theſe Prayers in the Service of the Catechumens. For firſt, the ſeveral Orders for whom theſe Prayers were made, and over whom they were made with Impoſition of Hands alſo, had their Station in a different part of the Church; and we do not read that they were ever called up to the Altar to receive their Benediction; but in ſome Canons are expreſly ordered [k] to receive Impoſition of Hands even in Abſolution before the Apſis, or Reading-Desk, in caſe of ſcandalous Offences; though Abſolution was uſually given in ordinary Caſes at the Altar. Now if the Prayer of Abſolution, which was their Reconcilement to the Altar, was ſometimes made before the Reading-Desk, there is little Queſtion, but that the other Prayers, which were but the Introduction to their Reconcilement, were made there alſo. 2. This Service of the Catechumens and Penitents was altogether a diſtinct Service from that of the Fideles or Communicants, and a final Diſmiſſion of them was al vays made before the latter Service began. 3. There is an expreſs Order in the third Council of Carthage, that all Prayers made at the Altar ſhould be directed to the Father only, and not to the Son [l]: And yet it is evident, that the Prayer for the Energumens was directed to the Son, as we have ſeen before in the Form cited [m] out of the Conſtitutions. So that either the Diſcipline of the Eaſtern Churches differed very much from thoſe of the Weſt; or elſe we muſt neceſſarily conclude, that theſe Prayers, ſome of which are directed to the Son, were not made at the Altar.

SECT. XIII. Whether there were any ſuch diſtinct Prayers for the Catechumens and Penitents in the Latin Church.

BUT it may be ſaid, the Prayers in the Latin Church were never directed to the Son: Or perhaps they had no ſuch Prayers for the Catechumens and Penitents in particular, as they had in the Oriental Liturgies, diſtinct from thoſe which were made for all Orders of Men both before and after the Conſecration in the Communion Service. The Matter indeed is not ſo clear, I confeſs, in the Latin Church, as I have ſhewed it to be in the Eaſtern: And that which increaſes the Difficulty, is, that ſome Authors ſeem to intimate, that as ſoon as the Sermon was ended, the Catechumens were diſmiſſed, and then the Communicants betook themſelves to Prayers at the Altar.

[e] Chryſ. Hom. 18. in 2 Cor. cited above, n. 8. [f] Chryſ. Hom. 71. in Mat. p. 624. [g] Conc. Laodic. can. 19. [h] Vid. Conc. Nic. can. 11. Conc. Ancyran. can. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, & 25. Conc. Neocæſar. can. 6. Baſil. Epiſt. Canon. can. 75. [i] Stillingfl. Unreaſon. of Separat. Part III. Sect. 9. p. 250. [k] Conc. Carthag. 3. can. 32. Cujuſcunque Pœnitentis publicum & vulgatiſſimum crimen eſt, quod univerſam Eccleſiam commoverit, ante Apſidem manus ei imponatur. [l] Conc. Carthag. 3. can. 23. Ut nemo in Precibus vel Patrem pro Filio, vel Filium pro Patre nominet: Et cum ad altare aſſiſtitur, ſemper ad Patrem dirigatur Oratio. [m] See before, n. 7.

Behold,

Behold, ſays St. Auſtin, after the Sermon the Catechumens have their Diſmiſſion: But the Faithful abide ſtill, and come [n] to the place of Prayer: meaning the Altar, where the Lord's Prayer was according to Cuſtom to be repeated by the Communicants only. And St. Ambroſe [o], ſpeaking of the ſame Matter, ſays, When the Sermon was done, he diſmiſſed the Catechumens, and rehearſed the Creed to ſome Candidates of Baptiſm in the Baptiſtery of the Church. But theſe do not amount to a Proof, that the Communion Service ſucceeded immediately after the Sermon, and that no other Prayers or Buſineſs came between them. For this very place of St. Ambroſe ſhews, that at leaſt ſome times the Repetition of the Creed to the Candidates of Baptiſm was in the Interval. And one of the forecited Canons of the Council of Carthage makes it evident, that at other Times the Prayer for the Abſolution and Reconcilement of a ſcandalous Offender was made in the Apſis or Reading-Desk, before the Communion Service likewiſe. And the other Canon as plainly intimates, that ſome Prayers were directed to the Son as well as the Father, by the Prohibition that is made of not changing the Name of the Son for the Father, or the Father for the Son. Which Prohibition had been needleſs, had there been no Prayers directed to the Son. Now admitting there were ſome Prayers directed to the Son, theſe muſt be made before the Communion Service, ſince at that Time by the ſame Canon all Prayers are ordered to be directed to the Father only. For theſe Reaſons I conclude, that the Practice of the Greek and Latin Churches was the ſame, and that there were Prayers in both for the Catechumens, Energumens and Penitents in their Preſence, diſtinct from thoſe which were afterwards made for them in their Abſence at the Altar. And ſo I have done with the firſt Part of Divine Worſhip, which the antient Church called her Miſſa Catechumenorum, or Ante-Communion Service.

[n] Aug. Hom. 237. de Tempore, tom. 10. p. 385. Ecce poſt Sermonem fit Miſſa Catechumenis. Manebunt Fideles, venietur ad locum Orationis. Scitis quo acceſſuri ſumus, quid prius Deo dicturi ſumus? Dimitte nobis debita noſtra, ſicut nos dimittimus debitoribus noſtris. [o] Ambroſ. Ep. 33. ad Marcellinam Sororem. Poſt Lectiones & Tractatum, dimiſſis Catechumenis, ſymbolum aliquibus Competentibus in Baptiſteriis tradebam Eccleſiæ.

BOOK

BOOK XV.

Of the Miſſa Fidelium; or Communion Service.

CHAP. I.

Of the Prayers preceding the Oblation.

SECT. I. Of the Prayers called διὰ σιωπῆς, or ſilent Prayer.

WHEN the ſeveral Orders of the Catechumens, Penitents, and Energumens were diſmiſſed, which was the Completion of the Miſſa Catechumenorum; then immediately began that Part of the Service, which is properly called Miſſa Fidelium, or Communion Service, becauſe none but Communicants (or at leaſt ſuch of the Penitents as had gone through all the Stages of Repentance, and were now waiting for Abſolution, called therefore συνισάμενοι, or Co-ſtanders) might be preſent at it. The Entrance on this Service was made by a Mental or ſilent Prayer, made by the People in private, and thence called εὐχὴ διὰ σιωπῆς, the ſilent Prayer, and εὐχὴ κατ' ἐνθύμιαν, the Mental Prayer. This we learn from a Canon of Laodicea, which gives a ſummary Account of the whole Order of the Service of the Church: And therefore for our clearer Proceeding in this Matter, I think it not improper to put it down entire in this place, as being one of the moſt remarkable Canons in the whole Code, and that which will give great Light to the ſubſequent Diſcourſe. The Words of the Canon are theſe: That after the Homily of the Biſhop [a] firſt the Prayer of the Catechumens is to be made; and after the Catechumens are gone forth, then the Prayer for the Penitents; and when they have received their Benediction by Impoſition of Hands, and are withdrawn, then the three Prayers of the Faithful are to be made; the firſt of which is to be performed in Silence, the ſecond and third by the Bidding and Direction [of the Deacon.] After theſe the Kiſs of Peace is to be given; Presbyters ſaluting the Biſhop, and Laymen one another: And then the holy Oblation ſhall be celebrated; thoſe of the Clergy only communicating in the Chancel.

Some learned Perſons take the Prayer in Silence here to mean no more than Prayers made over the Communicants by the Miniſter alone, the People not making any Reſponſes; and by the Prayers called εὐχαὶ διὰ προσφωνήσεως, they underſtand Prayers made by way of Reſponſes, the Miniſter and People mutually anſwering one another. But this Explication does not come up to the Senſe of this Canon. For by the Prayer in Silence we are here to underſtand ſuch private Prayers as each particular Perſon made by himſelf; and by the Prayers διὰ προσφωνήσεως, ſuch Prayers as the whole Church made in Common by the Call and Admonition of the Deacon, who repeated the ſeveral Forms, directing them what Things they were to pray for, to each of which Petitions they ſubjoined their κύριε ἐλέησον, Lord have Mercy, and grant the Petitions we ask; and then the Biſhop added the ἐπίκλησις, or Invocation, which was alſo called Collecta, the Collect, becauſe it was a Collection or Repetition of all the Prayers of the People. That there were theſe three Sorts of Prayers in the antient Church, is evident from the Accounts that are given of each of them. And firſt that there were ſuch private Prayers of every particular Perſon by himſelf, appears not only from this Canon, but from ſeveral antient Writers. St. Chryſoſtom [b] takes Notice that ſome in theſe private Prayers ſpent their Time in nothing elſe but praying for Revenge upon their Enemies. Many Men, ſays he, fall proſtrate upon the Ground, and beat the Earth with their Foreheads, and ſhed abundance of Tears, and groan bitterly within themſelves, ſtretching forth their Hands, and ſhewing great Zeal, and yet uſe all this Fervour and Earneſtneſs only againſt their own Salvation. For they pray to God, not for their own Offences, they do not beſeech him to pardon their own Sins, but they ſpend all this Labour againſt their Enemies.

[a] Conc. Laodic. Can. 19. Περὶ τῶν ἰδίᾳ πρῶτον, μετὰ τὰς ὁμιλίας τῶν ἐπισκόπων, καὶ τοὺς κεκλημένων εὐχὴν ἐπιτελεῖσθαι· καὶ μετὰ τὸ ἐξελθεῖν τοὺς κατηχουμένους, τὴν ἐν μετανοίᾳ εὐχὴν γίνεσθαι, καὶ τότων προσελθόντων τὰς χεῖρας, καὶ τὸν χορηγάντων, ἔτως τῶν πιστῶν τὰς εὐχὰς γίνεσθαι τρεῖς, μίαν μὲν τὴν πρώτην διὰ σιωπῆς, τὴν δὲ δευτέραν καὶ τελευτὴν διὰ προσφωνήσεως πληροῦσθαι, εἶτ' ἔτως τὴν ἀφήνην δίδοσθαι. &c.

[b] Chryſoſtom. 57. De non evulgandis Peccatis. tom. 5. p. 762.

Which is the ſame Thing, as if a Man ſhould whet his Sword, and then not uſe it againſt his Adverſaries, but thruſt it into his own Throat. For ſo theſe Men uſe their Prayers, not to obtain Pardon of their own Sins, but to accelerate the Puniſhment of their Enemies: Which in Effect is to run the Sword into their own Bowels. A little after he tells us the very words of their Prayers, which were theſe: Revenge me of my Enemies, O Lord, and ſhew them that I have a God. By all which it appears, that theſe were the private Prayers of the People, which they might abuſe, and not the publick Prayers of the Church: For the Church never taught her Children to curſe their Enemies, but to bleſs and pray for them. But in theſe private Prayers, which were deſigned for Confeſſion of Sins and Deprecation of God's Judgments, Evil Men took Liberty to tranſgreſs all Rules, and gratify their Paſſions by asking Revenge upon their Enemies. Now though this was a grand Abuſe of theſe private Prayers, yet it ſerves to ſhew us both what the Cuſtom was in the Church's Allowance of ſuch Prayers, and what in her Deſignation was the true Uſe of them. St. Baſil ſpeaking of their Vigils or Night Aſſemblies [c], intimates as plainly, that they were ſpent in ſuch private Prayers intermingled with divers ſorts of Pſalmody. And Caſſian gives the ſame Account of them both in the Eaſtern and Weſtern Churches, as I have ſhewed at large in ſpeaking of the Daily Morning and Evening Service, which began with private Confeſſion in the Eaſtern Churches mentioned by St. Baſil, and ended with publick Confeſſion made in the Words of the LI. Pſalm, which was thence called the Pſalm of Confeſſion, or the Penitential Pſalm [*] for the Morning Service. But as to the private Confeſſions, we are now ſpeaking of, with which the Communion Service here began, we are to note farther, that they were not only made by the People in Silence by themſelves, but by the Miniſter in private alſo. And the Footſteps of this Practice remain in ſome of the oldeſt Liturgies of ſeveral Churches, quite different from the preſent Confeſſions in the Roman Miſſal: For whereas now in the Roman Miſſal the Confeſſion of Sins is made to Saints and Angels, as well as God, all the Offices for at leaſt a Thouſand Years after Chriſt had their Confeſſions only to God. Thus it is in the Forms of Confeſſion in Gregory's Sacramentarium, and others publiſh'd by Menardus. And this is that Manuſcript, which Cardinal Bona ſo much magnifies in the Queen of Sweden's Library, as containing the Offices of the old Gallican Liturgy. To ſhew that theſe Confeſſions were made only to God, and not to any Saints or Angels, and withal that they were particular Confeſſions made by the Prieſt only in private, διὰ σιωπῆς, as the Laodicean Canon words it, I will here tranſcribe that which Bona gives us out of that Antient MS. as the Confeſſion of the Gallican Office. It is there called Apologia [d] Sacerdotis, The Apology of the Prieſt, or the Confeſſion of his Sins, and it runs in theſe Words.

O Thou moſt admirable Majeſty, and great God, Almighty Father, who art of infinite Goodneſs and Power, I who am a moſt vile Sinner, and condemned by the Teſtimony of my own Conſcience, do approach Thee, and preſent my ſelf in the Sight of thy Greatneſs, before the Eyes of thine ineffable Majeſty, before thy holy Face, not without due Reverence, yet with great Unworthineſs and Neglect of Duty. I do not excuſe, but accuſe my ſelf unto Thee. I confeſs, I ſay I confeſs the Unrighteouſneſs of my Impiety, that thou may'ſt forgive the Wickedneſs of my Sin. I confeſs, that if thou doſt not forgive, thou may'ſt puniſh me. I confeſs my ſelf a Criminal before Thee, and yet I know my Amendment is only in Words. In Words I endeavour to appeaſe thee, but in Works I offend thee. I am ſenſible of my Faults, and yet I defer the Amendment. Aſſiſt me therefore, aſſiſt me, O thou ineffable Goodneſs. Pardon me, pardon me, O moſt adorable Trinity. Spare me, ſpare me, ſpare me, I beſeech thee, O merciful God. Hear me, hear me, hear me, I beſeech thee, when I cry in the Words of that prodigal Son, O Father, Eternal God, I have ſinned againſt Heaven and before Thee: I am no more worthy to be call'd thy Son, make me as one of thy hired Servants. And now, merciful Father, I fly to the only Refuge and Haven of thy Mercy under the Protection of Chriſt, that what is vile in me, thou may'ſt favourably vouchſafe to accept in him, who liveſt and reigneſt for ever and ever. Amen.

It is plain here, that as there is no Addreſs to either Saint or Angel in this Prayer, ſo it is a private Prayer of the Prieſt alone for himſelf, whilſt the People were likewiſe employed in making their private Confeſſions to God: Which ſhews us the meaning of that ſilent Prayer ſpoken of in the Council of Laodicea, which is called the firſt Prayer in the Entrance of the Communion Service.

All I ſhall add farther here concerning theſe private Prayers, is to make an Obſervation upon two ancient Forms of Speech, which have ſome Relation to this Matter, and help to confirm it: That is, the Forms, Silentium indicere, and Orationem dare, both which are uſed to denote the Cuſtom of bidding the People fall to their private Devotions. Sometimes the Biſhop was uſed to give the Signal, by ſaying, Oremus, Let us pray; and then the People betook themſelves to their private Devotions, after which the Biſhop ſummed up their Prayers in a ſhort Collect by way of ſolemn Invocation. Thus Uranius [e] deſcribes the Rite in the Life of Paulinus Biſhop of Nola, when he tells us, how a certain Biſhop went into his Throne, and there ſaluting the People, and being ſaluted by them again,

[c] Baſil. Ep. 63. ad Neocæſar. t. 3. p. 96. [*] See Book XIII. cap. 10. n. 13. [d] Bona. Rer. Liturg. lib. 2. cap. 1. n. 1. [e] Uran. Vit. Paulini. Ad Eccleſiam proceſſit, & aſcenſo Tribunali populum ex more ſalutavit, reſalutatuſque a populo Orationem dedit, & collecta Oratione Spiritum exhalavit.

again, he then according to Cuſtom gave the Signal for Prayer, and afterward ſummed up their Prayers in a Collect, and ſo breathed out his Laſt. Sometimes the Deacon gave the Signal, and this was called Silentium indicere. Thus it was in the Gallican Churches, as Biſhop Stillingfleet has obſerved out of Gregory [f] of Tours; and the Prieſt did it by the Mozarabick Liturgy. Where he rightly concludes, that this Phraſe, Silentium indicere, does not barely ſignify making the People attentive, but there was a farther meaning in it, that they were for a Time there to attend to their own private Prayers. Which he thinks not improbable on theſe Conſiderations. "1. Gregory Turonenſis ſaith, in "the place before-mentioned, That the King "took that Time to ſpeak to the People, who "immediately brake forth into a Prayer for the "King; not that any Collect was then read for "him, for that was not the proper Time for "it; but it being a Time of ſecret Prayers, "they were ſo moved with what the King ſaid, "that they all prayed for him. 2. Among the "Heathens, when they were bidden favere Linguis, yet then Briſſonius [g] ſaith, They "made their private Prayers; and as the Deacons commanding Silence ſeems to be much "of the ſame Nature, it is not probable that "the Chriſtians ſhould fall ſhort of their Devotions. 3. The great Argument, ſays he, to "me, is the ſmall Number of Collects in the "ancient Churches; for the Chriſtians ſpent a "great deal of time in the publick Service, on "the Lord's Day, and the Stationary Days (I add "alſo their Vigils;) but all other Offices could "not take up that Time, there being no long "Extemporary Prayers, nor ſuch a Multitude of "tedious Ceremonies in all parts, as the Roman "Breviary and Miſſal introduced; and the Collects of greateſt Antiquity being very few and "ſhort, it ſeems moſt probable, that a competent part of the Time was ſpent in private "Devotions. A Remainder whereof is ſtill preſerved in the Office of Ordination of Prieſts "in our Church, whereby Silence is commanded to be kept for a Time, for the People's "ſecret Prayers. And the ſame Cuſtom was "obſerved at the bidding of Prayers, which "was a Direction for the People what to pray "for in their private Devotions [h].

SECT. II.

Of the Prayers called διὰ προσφωνήσεως, or Bidding-Prayers.

AND this leads us in the next place to conſider the ſecond ſort of Prayers mentioned in the Laodicean Canon, which are there ſtiled εὐχαὶ διὰ προσφωνήσεως, which we may Engliſh, Bidding-Prayers. For they were not only a Call to the People to pray, but a Direction what particulars they were to pray for. We have a Form of this ſort of Prayer in the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions, immediately after the Diſmiſſion of Catechumens and Penitents, where it is called προσφώνησις ἐπὶ τῇ πιστῶν, a Direction or Bidding-Prayer for the Communicants or Believers. It is there uſhered [i] in with theſe Words: Let no one of thoſe that are not allowed, come near. As many as are Believers, let us fall upon our Knees. Let us pray to God through his Chriſt. Let us all intenſely beſeech God through his Chriſt. Then follow the ſeveral Petitions in this Order.

Let us pray for the Peace and Tranquillity of the World and the holy Churches; that the God of the whole World would grant us his perpetual and laſting Peace; and keep us perſevering to the End in all the Fulneſs of Piety and Virtue.

Let us pray for the Holy Catholick and Apoſtolick Church from one End of the Earth to the other; that the Lord would keep it unſhaken and undiſturbed with Storms and Tempeſts, founded on a Rock to the End of the World.

Let us pray for the Holy Church (παροικίας) in this Place; that the Lord of all would grant us Grace to purſue his heavenly Hope without ceaſing; and that we may render him the continual Debt and Tribute of our Prayers.

Let us pray for the whole Epiſcopate or Company of Biſhops under Heaven, that rightly divid the Word of Truth. And let us pray for James our Biſhop and his Churches:

Let us pray for Clemens our Biſhop and his Churches:

Let us pray for Euodius our Biſhop and his Churches: That the merciful God would preſerve them in Safety, Honour, and Length of Days for the Benefit of his Holy Churches; and grant them a venerable old Age in all Piety and Righteouſneſs.

Let us likewiſe pray for our Presbyters, that God would deliver them from every abſurd and wicked thing, and preſerve them ſafe and honourable in their Presbytery.

Let us pray for the whole Order of Deacons and Subdeacons in Chriſt; that the Lord would keep them unblameable in their Miniſtry.

Let us pray for the Readers, Singers, Widows and Orphans.

Let us pray for thoſe that live in Matrimony and Procreation or Education of Children, that God would have Mercy upon them all.

Let us pray for the Eunuchs that walk in Holineſs.

Let us pray for thoſe that live in Continency or Virginity and lead a pious Life.

Let us pray for thoſe that make Oblations in the holy Church, and give Alms to the Poor.

Let us pray for thoſe that offer their Sacrifices and Firſt-fruits to the Lord our God; that the moſt gracious God would reward them with heavenly Gifts, and reſtore them an hundred-fold in this World, and grant them everlaſting Life in the World to come; giving them heavenly Things for their earthly, and for their Temporal Things thoſe that are Eternal.

Let us pray for our Brethren that are newly baptized; that the Lord would confirm and eſtabliſh them.

[f] Stillingfl. Orig. Britan. cap. 4. p. 223. ex. Greg. Turon. lib. 7. c. 8. [g] Briſſon. de Formulis p. 9, 10. [h] Vid. Mat. Parker Concion. in Obit. Buceri. [i] Conſtit. Apoſt. lib. 8. c. 9, & 10. Vid. lib. 2. cap. 57.

Let us pray for our Brethren that are afflicted with Sickneſs; that the Lord would deliver them from all their Diſtempers and Infirmities, and reſtore them again in Health to his Holy Church.

Let us pray for all thoſe that travel by Sea or by Land.

Let us pray for thoſe that are in the Mines, and in Baniſhment, and in Priſon and in Bonds for the Name of the Lord.

Let us pray for our Enemies and thoſe that hate us.

Let us pray for thoſe that perſecute us for the Name of the Lord: That the Lord would mitigate their Fury, and diſſipate their Anger conceived againſt us.

Let us pray for thoſe that are without, and led away with Error, that the Lord would convert them.

Let us remember the Infants of the Church; that the Lord would perfect them in his Fear, and bring them to the Meaſure of adult Age.

Let us pray mutually for one another; that the Lord would keep and preſerve us by his Grace unto the End, and deliver us from the evil one, and from all the Scandals of thoſe that work Iniquity, and conduct us ſafe to his heavenly Kingdom.

Let us pray for every Chriſtian Soul.

Save us, O God, and raiſe us up by thy Mercy.

It is here to be ſuppoſed, that as in the former Prayers for the Catechumens and Penitents [*], ſo here at the End of every Petition the People anſwered, κύριε ἐλέησον, Lord have Mercy upon them. Or, as it is in the Cloſe of this Prayer, Save them, O God, and raiſe them up by thy Mercy.

Any one that will compare either our Litany or the Prayer for the whole State of Chriſt's Church in the Beginning of our Communion Service, will readily perceive, that there is a near Affinity between them and this general Form of the Antient Church. We have not ſo compleat a Form either in Chryſoſtom's genuine Works, or any other Antient Writer, to compare this with, as we did before in conſidering the Form for the Catechumens: But there are two very antient Forms of ſuch a Prayer, without any Addition of Invocation of Saints ſtill preſerved, one in the Ambroſian Liturgy, and the other in an Antient Office tranſcribed by Wicelius out of the Library of Fulda, which becauſe they come near this Antient Form in the Conſtitutions, I will here inſert them [k] in the Margin for the Uſe of the learned Reader, out of Pamelius his Liturgicks, Tom. 3. p. 307. and Cardinal Bona Rerum Liturgicarum, lib. 2. cap. 4. n. 3. and then ſee what Remains of this antient Prayer we meet with in the undoubted Writings of the Fathers. For though none of them gives us the ſame Form entire, yet one may eaſily perceive by the near Alliance of the Fragments that remain, that they all refer to the ſame Original. For there are, both in Chryſoſtom and other Writers, ſeveral Fragments of ſuch a Prayer, and plain Intimations that either this or a like Form was in uſe in many Churches. And therefore it will not be amiſs to collect theſe References and Fragments before we proceed any farther.

SECT. III.

The Form of this Sort of Prayers in the Conſtitutions, compared with the Fragments that occur in Chryſoſtom, and other Writers.

ST. Chryſoſtom in one of his Sermons, ſpoken to the People of Antioch, plainly ſhews that they had ſuch a Form of Bidding-Prayer in Uſe in that Church: For he relates ſome of the Petitions of it, which are ſo like the Form in the Conſtitutions, that he will not judge amiſs, that thinks the [*] See Book XIV. Chap. v.

[k] In Codice Fuldenſi Litania Miſſalis.

Dicamus omnes ex toto corde totaque mente: Domine Miſerere.

Qui reſpicis terram, & facis eam tremere. Oramus te Domine, exaudi & miſerere.

Pro altiſſima Pace & tranquillitate temporum noſtrorum. Oramus te Domine, &c.

Pro Sancta Eccleſia Catholica, quæ eſt à finibus uſque ad terminos orbis terrarum. Oramus te Domine, &c.

Pro Patre noſtro Epiſcopo, pro omnibus Epiſcopis ac Presbyteris & Diaconis, omnique Clero. Oramus te Domine.

Pro hoc Loco & habitantibus in eo. Oramus te Domine, &c.

Pro piiſſimo Imperatore & toto Romano Exercitu. Oramus te Domine, &c.

Pro omnibus qui in ſublimitate conſtituti ſunt, pro Virginibus, Viduis & Orphanis. Oramus te Domine.

Pro Pœnitentibus & Catechumenis. Oramus te Domine.

Pro his qui in Sancta Eccleſia fructus miſericordiæ largiuntur, Domine Deus Virtutum exaudi preces noſtras. Oramus te Domine.

Sanctorum Apoſtolorum & Martyrum memores ſumus, ut orantibus eis pro nobis veniam mereamur. Oramus te Domine.

Chriſtianum ac pacificum nobis finem concedi a Domino comprecemur. Præſta Domine, præſta.

Et divinum in nobis permanere vinculum Charitatis, Dominum comprecemur. Præſta Domine, præſta.

Conſervare Sanctitatem ac Puritatem Catholicæ Fidei, Sanctum Deum comprecemur. Præſta Domine, præſta.

Dicamus omnes, Domine exaudi & miſerere.

Altera Formula ex Ritu Ambroſiano in Dominica prima Quadrageſimæ, incipiente Diacono, & Choro reſpondente.

Divinæ pacis & indulgentiæ munere ſupplicantes ex toto corde & ex tota mente precamur te. Domine miſerere.

Pro Eccleſia Sancta Catholica, quæ hic & per univerſum orbem diffuſa eſt, precamur te. Domine miſerere.

Pro Papa noſtro N. & Pontifice noſtro N. & omni Clero eorum, omnibuſque Sacerdotibus ac Miniſtris precamur te. Domine miſerere.

Pro famulis tuis N. Imperatore & N. Rege, Duce noſtro, & omni exercitu eorum precamur te. Domine miſerere.

Pro Pace Eccleſiarum, Vocatione Gentium, & quiete populorum, precamur te. Domine miſerere.

Pro Civitate hac & conſervatione ejus, omnibuſque habitantibus in ea precamur te. Domine miſerere.

Pro aeris temperie, ac fructu & fœcunditate terrarum precamur te. Domine miſerere.

Pro Virginibus, Viduis, Orphanis, Captivis ac Pœnitentibus, precamur te. Domine miſerere.

Pro Navigantibus, iter agentibus, in carceribus, in vinculis, in metallis, in exiliis conſtitutis, precamur te. Domine miſerere.

Pro iis qui diverſis Infirmitatibus detinentur, quique Spiritibus vexantur immundis precamur te. Domine miſerere.

Pro iis qui in Sancta Eccleſia tua fructus miſericordiæ largiuntur, precamur te. Domine miſerere.

Exaudi nos in omni Oratione atque Deprecatione noſtra, precamur te. Domine miſerere. Dicamus omnes, Domine miſerere.

Author

Author of the Conſtitutions had his Form from the ſame Original, whence we are ſure St. Chryſoſtom had his, viz. the Liturgy of the Church of Antioch. For, ſays he, when you all [l] in common hear the Deacon bidding this Prayer, and ſaying, Let us pray for the Biſhop, and for his old Age, and for Grace to aſſiſt him, that he may rightly divide the Word of Truth, and for thoſe that are here, and thoſe that are in all the World; you refuſe not to do what is commanded you, but offer your Prayers with all Fervency, as knowing what Power there is in Common Prayer. They that are initiated know what I ſay. For this is not yet allowed in the Prayer of the Catechumens. For they are not yet arrived to this Boldneſs and Liberty of Speech. But the Deacon, who miniſters in this Office, exhorts you to make Prayers for the whole World, and for the Church extended from one End of the Earth to the other, and for all the Biſhops that rule and govern it; and ye obey with Readineſs, teſtifying by your Actions, that great is the Power of Prayer, when it is offered up by the People with one Voice in the Church. Here we may obſerve, That this was the Bidding-Prayer; for it was done by the Celeuſma, or Call and Admonition of the Deacon, telling them what they were to pray for. Then again, that it was a Prayer peculiar to the Communicants, and uſed only in the Communion Service: For the Catechumens were not allowed to join in it. And farther, that the Petitions for the whole World, for the Church over all the Earth, for all Biſhops whereſoever governing the Church, and particularly for the Biſhop of the Place, that he might live to a good old Age, and have the help of God's Grace to enable him rightly to divide the Word of Truth, are the ſame Petitions that occur in the Conſtitutions: Which makes it evident that theſe Forms of Bidding-Prayer were then commonly uſed in the Catholick Church. Chryſoſtom in another Place ſpeaks of this ſame Prayer as performed in common both by Miniſters and People; and by both of them in the Poſture of kneeling or Proſtration. For giving an Account of the ſeveral Prayers of the Church, in which the People bear a Part with the Miniſter, he ſays, They prayed in common for Perſons poſſeſt with evil Spirits, and for the Penitents; and then after they were excluded, who could not partake of the holy Table, they made another Prayer [m], in which they all fell proſtrate upon the Earth together, and all in like manner roſe up together. This is a plain Reference to that Bidding-Prayer, before which the Deacon commanded all to fall down upon the Ground, and make thoſe ſeveral Petitions in that Poſture, and then gave the Signal to riſe again, by ſaying, ἀναςῶμεν, Let us Riſe, as it is worded in the Conſtitutions. Chryſoſtom has many other Paſſages, which ſpeak of Prayers for the whole State of the Church, for Biſhops, for the Univerſe, and the Publick Peace; but becauſe theſe refer more peculiarly to the Prayer immediately following the Conſecration and Oblation (where a more ſolemn Commemoration of all States was again made) I will refer the Notice of them to the Diſcourſe upon that Prayer in its proper place.

However I cannot omit mentioning one remarkable Thing more out of St. Chryſoſtom relating to this Prayer, which is, That this Prayer was eſteemed ſo much the Common-Prayer of the People, that the Children of the Church were particularly enjoined to bear a Part in it. For in one of his Homilies upon St. Matthew ſpeaking firſt of the Prayer for the Demoniacks, ſecondly of the Prayer for the Penitents, thirdly of this Prayer for the Communicants, he obſerves, That the two former were offered by the People alone, as Interceſſors for Mercy for others; but this Prayer, which was for themſelves, was preſented alſo by the innocent Children of the People [n], crying to God for Mercy: It being ſuppoſed, that their Innocency and Humility, the Imitation of which qualifies Men for the Kingdom of Heaven, were good Recommendations of their Prayers, when they ſolemnly implored the Divine Mercy. Which plainly ſhews, that this was a general Prayer of all Degrees of Perſons in the Church. We may note farther out of St. Auſtin, that the univerſal Church, or the greateſt Part of it, had ſuch Prayers preceding the Conſecration of the Euchariſt, which were properly called Precationes, or Deprecationes, Supplications for themſelves and others, & Communis Oratio, Common-Prayer, becauſe they were performed by the common Voice of the Deacon and the People. In one of his Epiſtles [o] he divides the whole Service of the Church into theſe five Parts. 1. Singing of Pſalms. 2. Reading of the Scriptures. 3. Preaching. 4. The Prayers of the Biſhops and Presbyters. 5. The Common-Prayers indicted by the Voice or Direction of the Deacons: Which were the Bidding-Prayers we are now diſcourſing of. Whence we learn the meaning of the Deacon's being ſaid, Indicere Communem Orationem; that it means not barely his commanding them to pray, but his going before them in a Form of Words, to which they might joyn their common Reſponſes.

[l] Chryſ. Hom. 2. de Obſcurit. Prophetiarum. tom. 3. p. 946. κοινῇ πάντες ἀκούοντες τῦ διακόνε τῦτο κελεύοντ@-, καὶ λέγοντ@, δεηθῶμεν ὑπὲρ τῦ ἐπισκόπε, καὶ τῦ γήρως, καὶ τῆς ἀντιλήψεως, καὶ ἵνα ὀρθοτομῇ τὸν λόγον τῆς ἀληθείας, καὶ ὑπὲρ τ ἐνταῦθα, καὶ ὑπὲρ τ ἀπανταχῦ, ὁ δεδιττιῶν ποιεῖν τὸ ἐπίταγμα, &c. [m] Chryſ. Hom. 18. in 2 Cor. p. 873. πάλιν ἐπειδὰν ἔρχομαι πρὸ ἱερῶν θεικόλων τῦ ὁ δυναμένης τῆς ἱερᾶς μελαχεῖν τραπέζης, ἑτέρων δεῖ γειέδς εὐχῆν, καὶ πάντες ὁμοίως ἐπ' ἐδάφες κάμεθα, καὶ πάντες ὁμοίως ἀνιςάμεθα. [n] Chryſ. Hom. 71. al. 72. in Mat. p. 624. ἡ δὲ τείτη πάλιν εὐχὴ ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν αὐτῶν, καὶ ἄυτη τὰ παιδία τὰ ἄμωμα τῦ δήμε προσβάλλεται, τ Θεὸν ἐπὶ ἔλεον προκαλῦντα. [o] Aug. Ep. 119. ad Januar. cap. 18. Quando autem non eſt tempus (cum in Eccleſia fratres congregantur) Sancta cantandi, niſi cum legitur, aut diſputatur, aut Antiſtites clara, voce deprecantur, aut Communis Oratio voce Diaconi indicitur?

In

In another [p] Epiſtle, he divides the Communion Service into four Parts, according to that Diviſion of St. Paul, 1 Tim. ii. 1. I exhort therefore, that firſt of all, Supplications, Prayers, Interceſſions, and giving of Thanks, be made for all Men; taking Supplications for theſe Common Prayers made for all Men before the Conſecration of the Elements; and Prayers, in the Greek called εὐχαὶ, for the Prayers of Conſecration, of which the Lord's Prayer was one, becauſe the People did then ſolemnly dedicate themſelves to Chriſt, which is the moſt common Notation of the Word εὐχὴ, a Vow. By Interceſſions, he underſtands the Benedictions of the People by Impoſition of Hands, uſed at that time by the Biſhops and other chief Miniſters, recommending them to the Mercy of God; and by Thankſgiving, the Doxologies and Returns of Praiſe after the Participation was over. So that here we have a plain Account of the Church's Service, and particularly that the Prayers before the Conſecration were thoſe ſolemn Addreſſes, which were made chiefly by the Deacon and People, and therefore were called, Communis Oratio voce Diaconi indicta, The Common Prayers of the People, enjoyned and order'd by the Bidding of the Deacon. In another Place he mentions ſome of the Particulars then prayed for. For writing to one Vitalis of Carthage, who maintained that Infidels were not to be prayed for, he urges him with the known Practice of the Church. Diſpute then, ſays he, againſt the Prayers of the Church, and when you hear the Prieſt of God [q] exhorting the People of God at the Altar, to pray for Infidels, that God would convert them to the Faith; and for Catechumens, that God would inſpire them with a Deſire of Regeneration; and for the Faithful, that they may perſevere by his Grace in that wherein they have begun; Mock at theſe pious Words, and ſay you do not do what he exhorts you to do, that is, that you do not pray to God for Infidels, that he would make them Believers. Here we ſee the Prayers for the Converſion of Infidels, and the Perſeverance of Believers are the ſame with thoſe that occur in the Conſtitutions, and in both Places are ſaid to be done at the Bidding or Exhortation of the Miniſter.

St. Baſil alſo ſpeaks of theſe Prayers, under the Name of Κηρύγματα ἐκκλησιαστικὰ, which is not to be underſtood of Preaching in the Church, but of theſe Prayers, which the Deacon, as the common Κήρυξ or Proclaimer and Director of the Service, appointed the People to make for all Orders of Men in the Church. And ſo St. Baſil himſelf explains his own Meaning. For writing to a Friend in a Foreign Country, he tells him it was impoſſible he ſhould forget him in his Prayers, unleſs he ſhould forget the Work to which the Lord had appointed him. For you, ſays he, who are by the Grace of God a Believer, remember very well the Bidding-Prayers of [r] the Church; How we there pray for all our Brethren that travel in Foreign Countries, and for all thoſe that are muſtered in the Camp, and for thoſe that undertake any brave and bold Thing for the Name of the Lord, and for all ſuch as ſhew forth any Fruits of the Spirit: For all theſe we make Prayers in the Holy Church. And he tells his Friend, that he being a Perſon ſingularly eminent, and in all thoſe Capacities, as a Traveller, as a Warrior, as a Confeſſor, as a virtuous Man, was always remembred in the publick Prayers of the Church. He mentions no other Particulars, becauſe he had no occaſion to ſpecify any more but what related to this particular Man's Caſe; but we need not doubt but that there were many other ſuch Petitions in the Liturgy of the Church of Cæſarea, as there were in thoſe of Antioch, and the African Churches. Cæſarius Arelatenſis alſo ſpeaks of theſe Bidding-Prayers, as uſed in the Gallican Churches. For in one of his Homilies to the People [s] he exhorts them, that as often as the Clergy prayed at the Altar, or Prayer was enjoined by the Bidding of the Deacon, they ſhould bow not only their Hearts, but their Bodies alſo. For it was a very irregular thing, and unbecoming Chriſtians, that when the Deacon cryed out, Let us bend the Knee, the greateſt part of the People ſhould ſtand erect like Pillars, as he had obſerved them to do in their Devotions. Here though we have none of the particular Petitions, yet there is a plain Reference to them, and two of the Circumſtances mentioned, that is, that they were to be made Kneeling, and by the Indiction or Direction of the Deacon.

SECT. IV. Of the Invocation or Collect following the Prayers of the People.

AND in theſe Circumſtances they differed from the following Prayer, made by the Biſhop or chief Miniſter, which the Greeks called ἐπίκλησις, the Invocation, and the Latins Collecta, the Collect, becauſe it was the Recollection or Recapitulation of the preceding [p] Aug. Ep. 59. ad Paulin. Quæſt. 5. Eligo in his verbis hoc intelligere, quod omnis vel pene omnis frequentat Eccleſia, ut Precationes accipiamus dictas, quas facimus in celebratione Sacramentorum, antequam illud quod eſt in Domini menſa, incipiat benedici: Orationes, cum benedicitur & ſanctificatur, & ad diſtribuendum comminuitur quam totam petitionem fere omnis Eccleſia Dominica Oratione concludit.—Interpellationes autem, ſive ut veſtri Codices habent, Poſtulationes, fiunt cum Populus benedicitur. Tunc enim Antiſtites, velut Advocati, ſuſceptos ſuos per manus Impoſitionem miſericordiſſimæ offerunt Poteſtati. Quibus peractis, & participato tanto Sacramento, Gratiarum actio cuncta concludit, quam in his etiam verbis ultimam commendavit Apoſtolus. [q] Aug. Ep. 107. ad Vital. p. 187. Exercere contra Orationes Eccleſiæ Diſputationes tuas, & quando audis ſacerdotem Dei ad altare exhortantem populum Dei, orare pro Incredulis, ut eos Deus convertat ad Fidem; & pro Catechumenis, ut eis deſiderium Regenerationis inſpiret; & pro Fidelibus, ut in eo quod eſſe cœperunt, ejus munere perſeverent; ſubſanna pias voces, & dic te non facere quod hortatur, &c. [r] Baſil. Ep. 241. μέμνησαι γὰρ πάλιν τῶν κηρυγμάτων τῶν ἐκκλησιαστικῶν, πιστὸς ὢν τῇ τοῦ Θεοῦ χάριτι, ὅτι καὶ ὑπὲρ τῶν ἀποδημίας ἀδελφῶν δεόμεθα. &c. [s] Cæſar. Arelat. Hom. 34. Rogo vos & admoneo, Fratres Chariſſimi, ut quotieſcunque juxta altare a Clericis oratur, aut Oratio Diacono clamante indicitur, non ſolum corda, ſed etiam corpora inclinetis. Nam dum frequenter, ſicut oportet, & diligenter attendo, Diacono clamante, Flectamus genua, maximam partem populi velut columnas erectas ſtare conſpicio, quod Chriſtianis omnino nec licet nec expedit.

Prayers

Prayers of the People. As the former Prayer was said by the Deacon and People kneeling, so this was presented by the Bishop standing. And therefore the Deacon was used to say immediately after the former Prayer, ἐγειρώμεθα, Let us rise up, and praying earnestly, Let us recommend our selves and one another to the living God by his Christ. After which, the Bishop makes this Prayer, as the Form runs in the Constitutions [t].

O Lord Almighty and most High, thou that dwellest in the Highest, thou holy One that restest in thy Saints, (or Holy Places) that art without Original, the great Monarch of the World; who by thy Christ hast caused thy Knowledge to be preached unto us, to the Acknowledgment of thy Glory and Name, which he hath manifested to our Understandings: Look down now by him upon this Thy Flock, and deliver it from all Ignorance and wicked Works. Grant that it may fear thee, and love thee, and tremble before the Face of thy Glory. Be merciful and propitious unto them, and hearken to their Prayers; and keep them Unchangeable, Unblameable, and without Rebuke: That they may be holy both in Body and Soul, not having Spot or Wrinkle or any such thing; but that they may be perfect, and none among them deficient or wanting in any respect. O thou their Defender, thou Almighty, that regardest not Persons, be thou the help of this thy People, whom thou hast redeemed with the precious Blood of thy Christ. Be thou their Defence and Succour, their Refuge and Keeper, their impregnable Wall, their Bulwark and Safety. For no one can pluck them out of thy Hand. There is no other God like Thee: In thee is our Hope and strong Consolation. Sanctify them by thy Truth: For thy Word is Truth. Thou that dost nothing out of Partiality and Favour; thou that canst not be deceived, deliver them from Sickness and Infirmity, from Sin, from all Injury and Fraud, and from the Fear of the Enemy, from the Arrow that flieth by Day, and the Danger that walketh in Darkness; and vouchsafe to bring them to eternal Life, which is in Christ thy only-begotten Son, our God and Saviour; by whom be Glory and Worship unto Thee in the Holy Ghost, now and for ever, World without End. Amen.

This, I conceive, is of the same nature with that Prayer mentioned by the Council of Laodicea [u], as the second of those that are said to be made διὰ προσφωνήσεως: For though the Author of the Constitutions distinguishes between the Deacons Bidding-Prayer and the Bishop's Invocation, calling the former προσφώνησις, and the latter ἐπίκλησις; yet they both agreed in several Things to distinguish them from the silent Prayer that went before. For first they were both pronounced audibly by the Minister, so as the whole Congregation might join with them, either by making Responses to every particular Petition of the Deacon's Prayer, or by saying Amen at the Conclusion of the Bishop's Prayer; whereas the silent Prayers of the People were such as every Man said privately by himself, and might be very different from one another, and sometimes were such as were not fit to be heard, because some Men abused this Opportunity to pray to God for Revenge upon their Enemies. 2. Both these Prayers were made at the Call or Admonition of the Deacon, and so might have the Name of προσφώνησις. For he said before the one, Let us fall down upon our Knees and pray to God: And before the other, Let us rise and commend ourselves to God. προσευώμεθα ἑαυτὲς τῷ Θεῷ. Whence also this and all such Prayers of the Bishop had the Name of προσφόρεις, Commendations, because they recommended the People to the Mercy and Protection of God. As we find in one of the Canons of the African Code [x], which made an Injunction that no Prayers should be used in the Church but such as were authorized by a Synod, whether they were Prefaces, or Commendations, or Impositions of Hands, lest any Prayers contrary to the Faith should surreptitiously creep into the Church. Where, as by Prefaces are meant certain proper Prayers used at the Eucharist; and by Impositions of Hands, Prayers made over the Penitents or People by way of Benediction; so by Commendations are to be understood partly Prayers for the Catechumens, and partly these Prayers of the Bishop for the People, recommending their Persons, and Prayers, and Concerns to the Favour of God. This Canon was first made in the Council of Milevis, where what the Greeks call προσφόρεις, is by the Latins [y] called Commendationes. But the more usual Name in the Latin Church was Collectæ, Collects, because these Prayers of the Bishop, which in any part of the Service followed the joint Prayers of the Deacon and Congregation, were both a Recollection and Recommendation of the Prayers of the People. In this Sense Cassian takes the Phrase, Colligere Orationem, when speaking of the Service in the Egyptian Monasteries and Eastern Churches, he says, After the Psalms they had private Prayers, which they said partly standing, and partly kneeling: Which being ended, he that collected the Prayer [z] rose up, and then they all rose up together with him; none presuming to continue longer upon the Ground, lest he should seem rather to pursue his own Prayers, than go along with him who collected the Prayers, or closed up all with his concluding Collect. Where we may observe, that a Collect is taken for the Chief Minister's Prayer at the close of some Part of Divine Service, collecting and concluding the Peoples preceding Devotions. As here in Cassian it is the Close of the Ordinary or Daily Morning-Service, which was the same as the Close of that part of the Communion-Service, which immediately comes before the Consecration, as has been [t] Constit. Apost. lib. 8. cap. 11. [u] Conc. Laod. Can. 19. [x] Cod. Afric. can. 106. ἤρεσεν καὶ τοῦτο, ὥστε τὰς κεκυρωμένας ἐν τῇ συνόδῳ ἱκεσίας, εἴτε ὁίμια, εἴτε προσφόρεις, εἴτε τῆς χειρὸς ἐπιθέσεις, ὑπὸ πάντων ἐπιτελεῖσθαι. &c. Vid. Conc. Toletan. 4. can. 12. [y] Conc. Milevitan. can. 12. [z] Cassian. Institut. lib. 2. cap. 7. Cum autem is qui Orationem collecturus est, e terra surrexerit, omnes pariter surgunt, ita ut nullus remorari præsumat, ne non tam secutus fuisse illius Conclusionem, qui Precem colligit, quam suam celebrasse credatur.

shewed

ſhewed before, in ſpeaknig of the Daily Morning-Service, more fully in another Place. Book XIII. Chap. x.

Parallel to this Paſſage in Caſſian, is that of Uranius [a], where ſpeaking of one John Biſhop of Naples, who died in the Celebration of Divine Service, he ſays, He gave the Signal to the People to pray, and then having ſummed up their Prayers in a Collect, he yielded up the Ghoſt. The Council of Agde [b] in France made it a ſtanding Rule for the Gallican Churches, that after all other things were performed in the daily Courſe of Morning and Evening Service, the Biſhop ſhould conclude the whole Office, Collecta Oratione, with his Collect, and diſmiſs the People with his Benediction. From which it appears, that theſe Collects among the Latins were the ſame ſort of Prayers, which the Greeks called ἐπικλήσεις and ἀναθέσεις, Invocations and Commendations, with which the Biſhop concluded the Prayers of the Deacon and People in each diſtinct part of Divine Service. As we have ſeen it in the Service of the Catechumens and Penitents, and in the Offices for the Daily Morning and Evening Prayer, and here now in this part of the Communion Service which goes before the Conſecration. Of which I have nothing more to add, but only a ſhort Paſſage [c] of St. Auſtin, who in his Book of the Gift of Perſeverance, ſeems plainly to intimate, that it was one Petition in this Prayer, of common Uſe in the African Churches, to pray for God's Grace to enable Believers to perſevere to the end of their Lives. For writing of the Neceſſity of Grace, to guard Men againſt the Error of the Pelagians, he puts them in mind of the Common Prayer of the Church, wherein the Prieſt makes Invocation for the Faithful or Communicants in theſe Words, Grant them Grace, O Lord, to perſevere in thee unto the End. And who is there, ſays he, that hearing the Prieſt thus praying, dares either in Word or Thought reprehend him, and is not rather ready, both with a Believing Heart and a Confeſſing Mouth, to anſwer Amen to ſuch a Benediction? 'Tis obſervable here, 1. That this Prayer has the ſame Name which the Greeks gave it in the Eaſtern Church, The Invocation of the Biſhop or Prieſt over the Faithful. And therefore, 2dly, That it was a Part of the Communion Service, where ſuch Prayers were only made. 3. That it was not the Deacon's Bidding-Prayer, which had the Peoples Reſponſes to every particular Petition, but a Prayer to which in the End they only anſwered Amen. 4. That it was a direct Invocation of God, by way of Benediction, ſuch as the Biſhop uſed to make, and not an Exhortation to pray, which was the Office of the Deacon. 5. That the Petition in Subſtance is the ſame with that of the Biſhop's Prayer in the Conſtitutions, Keep them Unchangeable, Unblameable, and without Rebuke; that they may be Perfect both in Body and Soul, not having Spot or Wrinkle, or any ſuch thing, but that they may be perfect, and none among them be found wanting in any Reſpect. All which Circumſtances make it highly probable, that this Prayer referred to by St. Auſtin, was the very Prayer we are ſpeaking of, as uſed in the Cloſe of the firſt Part of the Communion Service in the African Churches. Theſe are the Footſteps, by which we are to trace the Practice of the antient Church in that Part of her Devotions, which was appropriated to the Communicants or Believers only, in the Entrance of the Communion Service, and which anſwers to the Prayer for the whole State of Chriſt's Church Militant here upon Earth, in the Beginning of our Communion Service.

CHAP. II.

Of the Oblations of the People, and other Things introductory to the Conſecration of the Euchariſt.

SECT. I. Of the Cuſtomary Oblations which the People made at the Altar.

THE next Part of this Service, was the great Thankſgiving and the Conſecration of the Elements of Bread and Wine for the Euchariſt. Which becauſe they were generally taken out of the Oblations which the People made at the Altar, it will be neceſſary to give ſome Account of theſe Oblations, and of the Elements of Bread and Wine taken out of them. It was an antient Cuſtom, derived from Apoſtolical Practice, for all Communicants, that were of Ability, to make their Oblations of Bread and Wine, and ſometimes other Things, at the Altar; out of which both the Elements were taken, and a common Feaſt was made for the Poor. This the Apoſtle plainly refers to in that Reproof which he gives the Corinthians for their Exceſs, 1 Cor. xi. 21. In eating every one taketh before others his own Supper, and one is hungry, and another is drunken. Juſtin Martyr [a] takes notice of these Oblations, saying, They that are wealthy, and they that are willing, give according as they are disposed; and what is collected, is deposited with the Bishop, who out of it relieves the Orphans and Widows and those that are in Sickness, or in Want, or in Bonds, and Strangers and Travellers: In a word, he is the Curator of all that are in Need. Tertullian gives the like Account of this Practice [b] in his Time, only he distinguishes between the weekly and the monthly Collection. Every one, says he, offers a small Alms monthly, or when he will, and as he will, and as he can; for no one is compelled, but makes a voluntary Collation. This is our Bank for Piety. For it is not expended in Feasting and Drinking, and abusive Excesses, but in feeding and burying the Poor, in providing for Orphans that are bereft of their Parents, and aged People, and such as suffer Shipwrack, or languish in the Mines, or in Banishment, or in Prison. Only one Part of it, he adds, was spent upon a sober Feast of Charity, where the Poor had a Right to feed as well as the Rich. St. Cyprian [c] also speaks of this, when he asks a rich Woman, how she could think she celebrated the Lord's Supper, who had no Respect to the Corban; or how she could come into the Lord's House without a Sacrifice, and eat part of the Sacrifice which the Poor had offered? Parallel to which is that of St. Austin [d], that a Man of Ability ought to be ashamed to communicate of another Man's Oblation; and therefore he exhorts every one to bring their own Oblations to be consecrated at the Altar.

[a] Uran. Vit. Paulin. Populo Orationem dedit, & Collecta Oratione ſpiritum exhalavit. [b] Conc. Agathen. can. 30. In concluſione Matutinarum vel Veſpertinarum Miſſarum, poſt Hymnos Capitella de Pſalmis dici, & plebem, Collecta Oratione ad veſperam ab Epiſcopo cum Benedictione dimitti. [c] Aug. de Dono Perſeverantiæ, cap. 23. tom. 6. An quis Sacerdotem ſuper Fideles Dominum invocantem, ſi quando dixit, Da illis, Domine, in te perſeverare uſque in finem, non ſolum voce auſus eſt, ſed ſaltem cogitatione reprehendere, ac non potius ſuper ejus talem Benedictionem & corde credente & ore confitente reſpondit, Amen.

SECT. II. What Persons were allowed to make them, and what not.

THERE was a very near Alliance and great Affinity between these Oblations, and that of the Eucharist; and therefore as they had the same common Name of Oblation and Sacrifice, so in many respects the same Rules were observed about them. As first, that none but actual Communicants should have the Privilege to offer them. For in those Days it was a Privilege to be allowed to make their Oblations, and a sort of lesser Excommunication to be debarred from it. They would not receive the Oblations of Persons that were at Enmity or Variance with their Brethren [e], neither at the Altar, nor into the Treasury. And this, as Optatus [f] tells us, was grounded upon that Rule of our Saviour, that no Mens Gifts should be offered at the Altar, but those which were seasoned with Peace and Reconciliation with their Brethren. If thou bring thy Gift to the Altar, and there remember'st that thy Brother hath ought against thee: Leave there thy Gift before the Altar, and go, first be reconciled to thy Brother, and then come and offer thy Gift. Matth. v. 23. For the same Reason they refused the Oblations of noted and known Oppressors of the Poor, as appears from another Canon [g] of the Council of Carthage. With which agrees the Rule in the Constitutions, that [h] they should not receive the Gifts of a Thief or an Harlot. Which is repeated again with an Addition of many other such like Criminals [i]. A Bishop must know, whose Gifts he ought to receive, and whose not. He shall not receive the Gifts of Fraudulent Hucksters, κάπηλοι: For an Huckster shall not be free from Sin. Ecclus xxvi. 29. And Esaias speaks of these, when he upbraids Israel, saying, Thy Hucksters mix Wine with Water, (so the Septuagint reads it. Esai. i. 22.) Neither shall he receive the Oblations of Whore-mongers. For thou shall not offer to the Lord the Hire of a Whore. Deut. xxiii. 18. Nor the Oblations of Covetous and Adulterers: For the Sacrifices of such are Abomination to the Lord. Nor the Oblations of such as afflict the Widow, and oppress the Fatherless by their Power, and fill the Prisons with innocent Persons, and evil intreat their Servants with Stripes, Famine, and hard Bondage; and lay waste whole Cities: All such are to be rejected, and their Offerings are abominable. He shall also refuse all Corrupters, and Lawyers that plead for Injustice, and Makers of Idols, and Thieves, and unrighteous Publicans, and those that use Frauds in Weight or Measure; all Soldiers that are false Accusers, and not content with their Wages, but oppress the Poor; all Murderers and Hangmen, and unrighteous Judges, Drunkards, Blasphemers, and Abusers of themselves with Mankind; all Usurers, and in a Word every wicked Man, that lives in Rebellion against the Will of God. St. Chrysostom particularly inveighing against Oppressors, who offered Alms out of what they had violently taken from others, says elegantly [k], that God will not have his Altar covered with Tears: Christ will not be fed with Robbery; such sort of Sustenance is most ungrateful to him: It is an Affront to the Lord, to offer unclean Things to him: He had rather be neglected and perish by Famine (in his poor Members) than live by such Oblations. The one indeed is Cruelty, but the other is both Cruelty and an Affront. It is better to give nothing, than to give that which is the Property of others. What the Author of the Constitutions observes of Idol-makers, is confirmed by Tertullian [l] who wrote his whole

[a] Justin. Apol. 2. p. 98 & 99. [b] Tertul. Apol. cap. 39. Modicam unusquisque stipem menstrua die, vel quum velit, & si modo velit, & si modo possit, apponit: Nam nemo compellitur, sed sponte confert. &c. [c] Cypr. de Opere & Eleemos. p. 203. Locuples & Dives es, & Dominicum celebrare te credis, quæ Corbonam omnino non respicis; quæ in Dominicum sine Sacrificio venis; quæ partem de Sacrificio, quod Pauper obtulit, sumis? [d] Aug. Ser. 215. de Tempore. Oblationes, quæ in altario consecrentur, offerte: Erubescere debet homo idoneus, si de aliena Oblatione communicaverit.

[e] Conc. Carthag. 4. can. 93. Oblationes dissidentium Fratrum, neque in Sacrario, neque in Gazophylacio recipiantur. [f] Optat. lib. 6. p. 93. Altaria, in quibus Fraternitatis munera non jussit salvator poni, nisi quæ essent de Pace condita. [g] Conc. Carth. 4. can. 94. Eorum qui pauperes opprimunt, Dona à sacerdotibus refutanda. [h] Constit. lib. 3. cap. 8. [i] Id. lib. 4. cap. 6. [k] Chrys. Hom. 86. al. 87. in Mat. p. 722. Vid. Hom. 72. in Joan. p. 466. Et Epiphan. exposit. Fidei. n. 23. [l] Tertul. de Idololat. cap. 5. Respondebimus ad excusationes hujusmodi Artificum, quos nunquam in Domum Dei admitti oportet, si quis eam disciplinam norit.

Book of Idolatry in a manner againſt them, where among many other Things, he ſays, they that followed that Trade were not to be admitted into the Houſe of God. And it is very remarkable what St. Ambroſe told Valentinian, when he was about to reſtore the Heathen Altars at the Interceſſion of Symmachus, that if he ſo far contributed toward the Re-ſettlement of Idolatry, the Church would no longer receive his Oblations: What will you anſwer, ſays he, to the Prieſt [m], when he ſhall ſay unto you, The Church requires not your Gifts, becauſe you have adorned the Temples of the Heathen with your Gifts. The Altar of Chriſt refuſes your Oblations, becauſe you have erected an Altar to the Idol-gods. By which it is plain, they rejected the Oblations not only of profeſt Idolaters, but all ſuch as were Abetters of them, or any ways inſtrumental in giving Aid or Encouragement to Idolatrous Practices. Again, it was a ſtanding Rule among them not to admit the Oblations of thoſe, who having a Right to communicate, would not ſtay to participate of the Communion. This is expreſly ordered by the Council of Eliberis [n]: And the Rule extended farther to all thoſe that for any Crime or Hereſy were excluded from Communion by the Diſcipline of the Church, or were not in full Communion with her. Such as all excommunicate Perſons, all Catechumens, Penitents, Energumens, and Strangers that travelled without Commendatory Letters, and ſuch of the Clergy as for ſome leſſer Offences were reduced to the Communion of Strangers. For, as Albaſpineus notes rightly upon that Canon, all theſe were in ſome meaſure Non-communicants, as not being in the perfect and full Communion of the Church. The Energumens are particularly ſpecified [o] in the next Canon of that Council, as Perſons whoſe Oblations ſhould not be received, nor their Names mentioned at the Altar, whilſt they were actually under the Agitation of an evil Spirit. And all Penitents, whilſt they were under Diſcipline, were in the ſame Claſs; only they had this Privilege, that if they chanced to die ſuddenly whilſt they were doing Penance, and were deſirous to be reconciled, by ſome Canons [p] their Oblations were allowed to be received after Death, as a Teſtimony of their Reconciliation and Admiſſion into the Communion of the Church again: Except they were of that ſort of Penitents, to whom the Church thought fit in the Severity of her Diſcipline to deny all External Communion at the hour of Death; of which there are many Inſtances in the Councils of Sardica, Eliberis, and others: For then their Oblations were not received either living or dying: or elſe when they had been ſo careleſs as not to deſire Reconciliation at the hour of Death. In which Caſe, as Pope Leo ſays [q], their Cauſe was reſerved to the Judgment of God, in whoſe Hand it was that their Life was not prolonged till they could have the Remedy of Communion. As to the Church, ſhe did not communicate with thoſe after Death, with whom ſhe did not communicate when they were alive. Nay ſometimes they would not receive the Oblations of thoſe that died in their Communion, if their laſt Act happened to have any Thing irregular in it. As appears from a Caſe in Cyprian [r], who tells us, That it had been determined by an African Synod, that no one ſhould appoint any of God's Miniſters a Curator or Guardian by his Will, becauſe they were to give themſelves to Supplications and Prayer, and to attend only upon the Sacrifice and Service of the Altar: And therefore when one Geminius Victor had made Geminius Fauſtinus, a Presbyter of the Church of Furni, Guardian or Truſtee by his laſt Will and Teſtament, Cyprian wrote to the Church of Furni, that they ſhould make no Oblation for him, or name him in the Sacrifice of the Altar. But in After-ages this piece of Diſcipline was a little moderated in France: For by a Canon of the ſecond Council of Orleance it was ordered [s], that if any one died in the Communion of the Church, his Oblation ſhould be received, though he happened to be ſlain in ſome Fault, provided he had not laid violent Hands upon himſelf. But this Privilege was not allowed the Catechumens that died without Baptiſm, becauſe they never were perfectly in the Communion of the Church. Therefore Chryſoſtom [t] ſays, no mention was ever made of them after Death in the Prayers of the Church, as was uſual for Believers, in the Oblation or Sacrifice of the Altar. The only Thing that could be done for ſuch, was to give private Alms to the Poor. If they had not the Benefit of Baptiſm, they were to be buried as Perſons who laid violent Hands upon themſelves, or fell by the Arm of Juſtice, without any Solemnity [u] of Burial, or Commemoration at the Altar. In ſhort, the Oblations of all Perſons who were not in actual or full Communion with the Church, were absolutely rejected: And therefore those Penitents who had gone through all the Stages of Discipline, and were now allowed to stay, and hear the Prayers with the rest of the Faithful, were not yet allowed to make any Oblations, as being not yet fully reconciled to the Communion of the Altar. Upon this Account the antient Canons [x] style them κοινωνοῦντας χωρὶς προσφορᾶς, such as communicated in Prayers only, without any Oblation. But this was more precisely observed in the Beginning of their Censures. For if a great Delinquent, an Heretick or other Excommunicate Person, would have given his whole Estate to the Church, in such a case they would not accept his Oblation. There goes an Epistle under the Name of St. Austin to Count Boniface [y], wherein he tells him, he had forbidden all his Clergy to accept the Oblation of his House, and interdicted him all Communion, till he had done Penance for a certain bold Attempt, and offered to God first the Sacrifice of an humble and contrite Heart for his Error. The Epistle probably is not St. Austin's, but it contains nothing disagreeable to the Discipline of those Times, when the greatest Gift would not be accepted from an Emperor, if he were an Heretick, or under the Censure of Excommunication. As it is clear, not only from what has been observed before out of St. Ambrose's Epistle to Valentinian, but from what Gregory Nazianzen [z] says of St. Basil, That he refused the Oblations of the Emperor Valens, because he was a profest Enemy of the Divinity of Christ, and a furious defender of the Arian Heresy. So Liberius refused the Offering of Eusebius the Arian Statesman under Constantius, as we are told by Athanasius [a] and Theodoret [b] who reports the Story with all its Circumstances in this manner: When Constantius drove Liberius into Banishment, because he would not subscribe the Condemnation of Athanasius with the Nicene Faith, he sent him Five hundred Shillings (ὁλοσχοίνους) to bear his Charges. But Liberius bid the Messenger that brought them, return them to the Emperor, for his Soldiers had more need of them. The Empress also sent him the same Sum, which he returned to the Emperor with a like Answer, That he might keep them for his own Expeditions. Last of all, when he had refused both the former, Eusebius the Eunuch was sent to make him another Offer. To whom Liberius replied, Thou hast harassed and laid waste the Churches over all the World, and dost thou now offer me an Alms as a condemn'd Criminal? But go thou first, and learn to become a Christian. 'Tis no less remarkable what Tertullian tells us of the Church's Treatment of Marcion the Heretick, when he was excommunicated with Valentinus for his Heresy: They cast him out with his two hundred [c] Sestertia, which he had brought into the Church. They were so far from receiving the Gifts of such Men, that they rejected them with Scorn, as St. Peter did Simon Magus, Thy Money perish with thee: Or as Abraham rejected the Gifts of the King of Sodom, saying, I will not take from a Thread even to a Shoe-latchet, I will not take any Thing that is thine, lest thou should'st say, I have made Abraham rich.

[m] Ambroſ. Ep. 30. ad Valent. Quid reſpondebis ſacerdoti dicenti tibi: Munera tua non quærit Eccleſia, quia Templa Gentilium muneribus ornaſti. Ara Chriſti Dona tua reſpuit, quia Aram ſimulacris feciſti. [n] Conc. Eliber. can. 28. Epiſcopos, placuit, ab eo qui non communicat, munera accipere non debere. [o] Conc. Eliber. can. 29. Energumenus, qui erratico ſpiritu exagitatur, hujus nomen neque ad Altare cum Oblatione recitandum, neque permittendum ut ſua manu in Eccleſia miniſtret. [p] Conc. Arelatenſe 2. can. 12. Vaſenſe 1. can. 2. Tolet. 11. can. 12. [q] Leo Ep. 92. ad Ruſticum cap. 6. Horum Cauſa Dei Judicio reſervanda eſt, in cujus manu fuit, ut talium obitus non uſque ad communionis remedium differretur. Nos autem, quibus viventibus non communicavimus, mortuis communicare non poſſumus. [r] Cypr. Ep. 66. al. 1. ad Cler. Furnitan. p. 3. Ideo Victor cum contra Formam nuper in Concilio a Sacerdotibus datam, Geminium Fauſtinum Presbyterum auſus ſit Tutorem conſtituere, non eſt quod pro Dormitione ejus apud vos fiat Oblatio, aut Deprecatio aliqua nomine ejus in Eccleſia frequentetur. [s] Conc. Aurelian. 2. can. 14. Oblationem defunctorum, qui in aliquo crimine fuerint interempti, recipi debere cenſemus, ſi tamen non ipſi ſibi mortem probentur propriis manibus intuliſſe. [t] Chryſ. Hom. 3. in Philip. p. 1225. Vid. Hom. 1. in Act. & Hom. 24. in Joan. [u] Conc. Bracar. 1. can. 35. Catechumenis ſine redemptione Baptiſmi defunctis, ſimili modo, non Oblationis ſanctæ commemoratio, neque Pſallendi impendatur Officium.

SECT. III.
What Oblations might be received at the Altar, and what not.

AND as they thus made a Distinction in the Persons, of whom they received, so secondly they made a Distinction in the Oblations themselves, which were to be received. For the most antient Custom was only to offer such Things at the Altar, as were proper for the Service of the Altar. To this purpose there are several Canons among those called the Apostolical Canons. One says [d], No Bishop or Presbyter under pain of Deposition shall offer any Thing in the Sacrifice on the Altar contrary to the Lord's Command, as Honey, Milk, or strong Beer instead of Wine, or Birds, or living Creatures, excepting only the First-fruits of Corn and Grapes in their proper Season. Another forbids any Thing to be brought to the Altar [e] besides Oyl for the Lamps, and Incense in the Time of the Oblation. And a Third [f] orders all other First-fruits to be carried home to the Bishop and Presbyters, to be divided between them and the Deacons and the rest of the Clergy. Some of the African Canons are to the same purpose. The Third Council of Carthage orders [g] that in the Sacraments of the Body and Blood of the Lord nothing else be offered but what the Lord commanded, that is, Bread and Wine mingled with Water. Nor in the Oblation of First-fruits any Thing more be offered but only Grapes and Corn. The Collections of African Canons [h] both Greek and Latin give us this Canon a little more at large in these Words: Nothing shall be offered in the Sacraments of the Body and Blood of the Lord, but what the Lord himself commanded, that is, Bread and Wine mingled with [x] Conc. Nicen. can. 11. Conc. Ancyr. can. 4, 5, 8, &c. [y] Aug. Ep. 6. ad Bonifac. in Appendice. Tom. 2. Oblatio domus tuæ à Clericis ne suscipiatur, indixi, Communionemque tibi interdico, donec —— pro hoc facto corde contrito & humiliato dignum offeras sacrificium Deo. [z] Naz. Orat. 20. de Laud. Basil. p. 351. [a] Athan. Ep. ad Solitarios. p. 834. [b] Theod. lib. 2. cap. 16. [c] Tertul. de Præscript. cap. 30. Marcion & Valentinus semel & iterum ejecti: Marcion quidem cum ducentis sestertiis, quæ ecclesiæ intulerat. [d] Canon. Apost. can. 3. [e] Can. 4. [f] Can. 5. Vid. Conc. Eliber. in can. 49. [g] Conc. Carth. 3. can. 24. Ut in Sacramentis corporis & sanguinis Domini nihil amplius offeratur, quam ipse Dominus tradidit, hoc est, Panis & Vinum aqua mixtum. Nec amplius in sacrificiis (al. in Primitiis) offeratur, quam de Uvis & Frumentis. [h] Conc. African. can. 4. ap. Crab. t. 1. p. 503. Ut in sacramentis corporis & sanguinis Domini nihil amplius offeratur, quam quod ipse Dominus tradidit, hoc est, panis & vinum aqua mixtum. Primitiæ verò, seu Mel & Lac, quod uno die solenniſſimo in Infantum Mysterio solet offerri, quamvis in altari offerantur, suam tamen propriam habeant Benedictionem, ut à Sacramento Dominici corporis & sanguinis distinguantur. Nec amplius in Primitiis offeratur, quam de uvis & frumentis. Vid. Cod. Eccles. Afric. can. 37. ap. Justellum.

Water. But the First-fruits, and Honey and Milk, which is offered on one most solemn Day for the Mystery of Infants, though they be offered at the Altar, shall have their own peculiar Benediction, that they may be distinguished from the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of the Lord. Neither shall any First-fruits be offered but only of Grapes and Corn. Here we see, Milk and Honey was only to be offered on one solemn Day, that is, on the great Sabbath, or Saturday before Easter, which was the most solemn Time of Baptism; and that for the Mystery of Infants, that is, Persons newly baptized, who were commonly called Infants in a mystical Sense, from their new Birth, in the African Church: For it was usual to give them a Taste of Honey and Milk immediately after Baptism, as has been shewed in a former Book [*]; and upon that Account an Oblation of Honey and Milk is here allowed to be made for this Mystery of Infants, which was to be offered and consecrated with a peculiar Benediction, that it might not be thought to come in the Room of the Eucharist. And no other First-fruits are allowed to be offered at the Altar but only Grapes and Corn, as being the Materials of Bread and Wine, out of which the Eucharist was taken. In the Time of the Council of Trullo the Offering of Milk and Honey at the Altar was universally [k] forbidden. But the Oblation of the First-fruits of Grapes was still allowed: Only, whereas a corrupt Custom prevailed in some Places, to join them in the same Sacrifice with the Eucharist, and distribute them together with it to the People, the Rule of the African Code is revived, and Orders given [l], That they shall have a distinct Consecration, and a distinct Distribution, if the People were desirous to eat their First-fruits in the Church. In the mean Time we may observe, that in other Churches not only the First-fruits of Grapes and Corn, but all other Things which the People were voluntarily disposed to offer, whether Money or the like Gifts, were received at the Altar. For in France the first Council of Orleans made it a Rule [m], that of such Oblations one Moiety should fall to the Bishop, and the other be divided among the rest of the Clergy. But it is severely censured by Strabo [n] as a gross Piece of Superstition in the Roman Church, that they were used to offer and consecrate a Lamb, and eat the consecrated Flesh of it, out of a pretended Reverence to the Immaculate Lamb of God, which was slain for the Sins of the World. Photius carries the Charge a little higher, and objects to them, that they offered it together with the Body of Christ upon the Altar. But this is commonly [o] said to be an Aggravation of the Thing, and therefore is rejected by Cardinal Bona as a Slander. But he owns the Fact so far as is related by Strabo, because the old Ordo Romanus has such a Form for the Consecration of a Lamb on Easter Day, and it is agreeable to their present Practice. Only he blames Strabo for being too zealous in his Censure of this Rite, and inveighing against it as a superstitious and erroneous Practice. Which only shews how much Bona was inclined to defend the Superstitions that were crept into his Church, without any Foundation in antient Practice.

SECT. IV. The Names of such as made Oblations of any considerable Value, rehearsed at the Altar.

BUT I proceed with the Practice of the antient Church, and observe thirdly, that when their Oblations were receiv'd, it was usual in many Places to rehearse the Names of such as offered, that a Commemoration of them might be made, and Prayers and Praises be offered to God for them at the Altar. I have already had Occasion to say something of this Custom [†] out of St. Cyprian [p] and St. Jerom [q], in speaking of Deacons, whose Office it was to recite the Names. To these, I shall now add some farther Evidences both out of these and other Writers. Cyprian in one of his Epistles to the Churches of Numidia, speaking of a Collection that had been made at Carthage for them [r], says, he had sent them the Names of every Brother and Sister, that had contributed willingly to so necessary a Work (it was to redeem Captives) that they might remember them in their Prayers, and requite their good Work in their Sacrifices and solemn Supplications; he had also added the Names of such of his Fellow-Bishops as were then present, and had contributed both in their own Names, and the Names of their respective Churches; and he had signified the Sums that every one gave, that as the common Faith and Charity required, Mention might be made of them in their Supplications and Prayers. St. Jerom says [s] the same in another Place, That now the Names of such as offered were publickly rehearsed, and that which was the Redemption of Sins, was made matter of Praise and Glory: And Men did not remember the Widow in the Gospel, whose two Mites cast into the Treasury, exceeded all [*] Book XII. Chap. iv. n. 6. [k] Conc. Trull. can. 57. [l] Ibid. can. 28. [m] Conc. Aurelian. 1. can. 16. Antiquos Canones relegentes, priora statuta credimus renovanda, ut de his quæ in Altario Oblatione Fidelium conferuntur, medietatem sibi Episcopus vendicet, &c. Vid. ibid. can. 17. [n] Strabo de Rebus Eccles. cap. 18. Du Pin says also, that there is an Example of this Usage in the Life of St. Uldarick, and that both Ratramnus and Æneas Parisiensis wrote in Defence of it against Photius, but he says, it was not authorized in all the Latin Churches. Du Pin. Cent. 9. p. 113. [o] Nicolai Papæ Epist. ap. Baron. tom. 10. an. 867. Bona. Rer. Liturg. lib. 2. cap. 8. n. 5. Hoc putidum mendacium est, &c. [†] Book II. Chap. XX. n. 5. [p] Cypr. Ep. 10. al. 16. p. 37. [q] Hieron. Com. in Ezek. 18. p. 537. [r] Cyprian. Ep. 60. al. 62. ad Episcopos Numidas. p. 147. Ut autem Fratres nostros ac sorores, qui ad hoc opus tam necessarium prompte ac libenter operati sunt, ut semper operentur, in mentem habeatis in Orationibus vestris, & eis vicem boni operis in sacrificiis & precibus representetis, subdidi nomina singulorum, &c. [s] Hieron. in Jerem. 11. lib. 2. p. 354. Nunc publice recitantur offerentium nomina, & redemptio peccatorum mutatur in Laudem: nec meminerunt viduæ illius in Evangelio, quæ in Gazophylacium duo æra mittendo, omnium divitum vicit donaria.

the

the Gifts of the Rich, who caſt in of their Abundance. Some think [t] St. Jerom here reflects upon the Practice of the Church, as if he diſliked the mentioning of the Sums offered, which they ſay without doubt was a Corruption. But they miſtake St. Jerom's Meaning: For he is not blaming the Practice of the Church, but the Practice of thoſe who gave out of Oſtentation and Vain-glory; and when they were privately guilty of Theft or Oppreſſion, thought to get Eſteem and Reputation, by giving a little of their ill-gotten Goods to the Poor; pleaſing themſelves with the Applauſe of the People, whilſt their own Conſciences muſt needs laſh and torment them, as he expreſſes it in another [u] Place. It was fit for them to remember the Widow's Mites, which were a more acceptable Sacrifice to God than the greateſt Gifts of Injuſtice that they could offer him. So he does not condemn the Cuſtom of rehearſing the Names of the Donors as a Corruption, but only the private Abuſes that by the Viciouſneſs of Men did ſometimes accompany it. St. Chryſoſtom [x] and the Author of the Conſtitutions [y] have ſome Reference to the ſame Cuſtom: The latter orders the Biſhop to acquaint the Poor, who were their Benefactors, that they might pray for them by Name. And Cotelerius obſerves [z] a like Paſſage in the Acts of Cecilian and Felix, where the Form runs thus: Such an one gives ſo much of his Subſtance to the Poor; for which thoſe Acts appeal to the People's own Eyes and Ears. When the Oblations were thus preſented, and the Names of the Donors rehearſed, then it was uſual in ſome Places to make a commendatory Prayer, by way of Oblation to God, antecedent to thoſe Euchariſtical Prayers which were appropriated to the Conſecration of the Euchariſt. This may be collected from the Epiſtle of Pope [a] Innocent to Decentius a neighbouring Biſhop of Eugubium, where he ſpeaks of ſuch an Oblation by a commendatory Prayer going before the Conſecration: Which, he ſays alſo, in the Roman Church was uſed to be made before the Recital of the Names of the Offerers, which were not rehearſed till they came to the Conſecration. But whether ſuch a diſtinct Oblation of the Creatures was made in all Churches, ſeems not ſo very clear, becauſe other Writers, Juſtin Martyr, Irenæus and the Conſtitutions, ſay nothing of it.

SECT. V.
The Euchariſtical Elements uſually taken out of the Peoples Oblations.

FOURTHLY, we are to obſerve upon this Head, that ſo long as the People continued to make Oblations of Bread and Wine, the Elements for the Uſe of the Euchariſt were uſually taken out of them; and by Conſequence ſo long the Bread was that common leavened Bread, which they uſed upon other Occaſions; and the Uſe of Wafers and unleavened Bread was not known in the Church till the eleventh or twelfth Centuries, when the Oblations of common Bread began to be left off by the People. This will ſeem a great Paradox to all who look no farther than the Schoolmen, and only read their Diſputes with the Greeks about leavened and unleavened Bread, which are fierce enough on both Sides, and have little of Truth on either: As commonly ſuch Diſputes evaporate into Smoke, and end in bitter and falſe Reproaches, the Greeks terming the Latins Azymites, for conſecrating in Azymis, that is, unleavened Bread; and the Latins on the other hand charging the Greeks with deviating from the Example of Chriſt, and the Practice of the antient Church. I will not enter into the Detail of the Arguments on both Sides, which belongs not to this place; but only acquaint the Reader, that now the moſt wiſe and learned Men in the Roman Church, who have more exactly ſcanned and examined this Matter, think fit to deſert the Schoolmen, and maintain That the whole Primitive Church, and the Roman Church herſelf for many Ages, never conſecrated the Euchariſt in any other but common and leavened Bread. The firſt that ventured to break the Ice, and confront the Schoolmen, was Latinus Latinius in an Epiſtle to Antonius Auguſtinus. After him Sirmondus wrote a particular Diſquiſition upon it, which was followed and commended by Cardinal Bona [b], who has a long Diſſertation to eſtabliſh the Opinion, wherein he expoſes the Prejudices and falſe Argumentations of Thomas Aquinas and the reſt of the Schoolmen. And though Chriſtianus Lupus [c] ſet himſelf again with all his Might to defend the common Opinion of the Schoolmen againſt Sirmondus; yet his Arguments are of no Weight with Schelſtrate [d] and Pagi, who readily give into the Poſition of Bona and Sirmondus, as founded upon the juſteſt Reaſons. The chief Argument of the Schoolmen is no ways concluſive, That the Primitive Church followed the Example of Chriſt, who celebrated his laſt Supper with unleavened Bread. For that was only upon the Account of the Paſſover, when no other but unleavened Bread could be uſed among them. After his Reſurrection he probably celebrated in leavened Bread, and ſuch as was in common Uſe at all other Times, except the Time of the Paſſover. And that the Church always uſed common Bread, appears from the following

And conſequently, no Uſe of Wafers or unleavened Bread.

[t] Comber of Liturgies. p. 196. [u] Hieron. in Ezek. 18. [x] Chryſ. Hom. 18. in Act. p. 175. [y] Conſtit. lib. 3. cap. 4. [z] Geſta Purgationis Cæciliani & Felic. Vel audiſti, vel vidiſti, ſi dictum eſt pauperibus, Dat & vobis de re ſua Lucilla. [a] Innoc. Ep. 1. ad Decentium. cap. 2. De nominibus vero recitandis, antequam preces Sacerdos faciat, atque eorum Oblationes, quorum nomina recitanda ſunt, ſua Oratione commendet, quam ſuperfluum ſit, & ipſe per tuam prudentiam recognoſcis, ut cujus Hoſtiam necdum Deo offeras, ejus ante nomen inſinues, quamvis illi incognitum ſit nihil. Prius ergo Oblationes ſunt commendandæ, ac tunc eorum nomina, quorum ſunt Oblationes, edicenda, ut inter Sacra Myſteria nominentur, non inter alia, quæ ante præmittimus, ut ipſis Myſteriis viam futuris precibus aperiamus. [b] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 1. cap. 23. [c] Lupus Not. in Concil. tom. 3. p. 686. &c. [d] Pagi Critic. in Baron. an. 313. n. 15. & Schelſtrate Diſciplina Arcani. cap. 7. Par. 5. ap. Pagi. ibidem.

following Arguments. 1. That the Elements were uſually taken out of the Oblations of the People, where doubtleſs common Bread and Wine were offered. 2. It is noted by Epiphanius [e] as a peculiar Rite of the Ebionite Hereticks, that they celebrated in unleavened Bread and Water only. Which plainly argues, that the Church did otherwiſe. 3. The Ancients ſay expreſly their Bread was common Bread, ſuch as they made for their own Uſe [f] upon other Occaſions. To which purpoſe there is a remarkable Story in the Life of Gregory the Great [g] of a Woman who, when he gave her the Euchariſt in the uſual Form of Words, The Body of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt preſerve thy Soul, laughed at the Form, and being asked the Reaſon of her ſo doing, ſaid, it was becauſe he called that the Body of Chriſt, which ſhe knew to be Bread that ſhe had made with her own Hands 4. The Ancients are wholly ſilent as to the Uſe of unleavened Bread in the Church. But they many Times ſpeak of leavened Bread, and ſometimes the Euchariſt is called Fermentum, Leaven, upon that Account. As appears from the Pontifical in the Lives [h] of Melchiades, and Siricius, and a Letter of Pope Innocent, where he ſays, it was the Cuſtom at Rome to conſecrate the Fermentum, (that is, the Euchariſt) in the Mother Church, and ſend it thence on the Lord's Day to the Presbyters in the Tituli, or leſſer Churches, that they might not think themſelves ſeparated from the Biſhop's Communion. But they did not ſend it to any Country Pariſhes, becauſe the Sacraments were not to be carried to places at any great Diſtance. What is here called the conſecrated Fermentum, is by Baronius and others, who tread in the Track of the Schoolmen, interpreted of the Eulogia, or Panis Benedictus, the Bread that was bleſſed for ſuch as did not communicate. But Innocent plainly ſays, he meant it of the Sacrament, which was conſecrated by the Biſhop, and ſent to the Presbyters for the Uſe of leſſer Churches. Which ſhews, that at that Time, even in Rome itſelf, the Euchariſt was conſecrated in common or leavened Bread. 5. It is obſervable, That neither Photius, nor any other Greek Writer, before Michael Cerularius, An. 1051, ever objected the uſe of unleavened Bread to the Roman Church: Which argues, that the Uſe of it did not prevail till about that Time; elſe there is no doubt but Photius would among other Things, have objected this to them. Theſe Arguments put the Matter beyond all Diſpute, that the Church for a thouſand Years uſed no other but common or leavened Bread in the Euchariſt; and how the Change was made, or the Time exactly when, is not eaſy to determine. But Bona's Conjecture is very probable, That it crept in upon the Peoples leaving off to make their Oblations in common Bread, which occaſioned the Clergy to provide it themſelves, and they, under pretence of Decency and Reſpect, brought it from leaven to unleaven, and from a Loaf of common Bread, that might be broken, to a nice and delicate Wafer, formed in the Figure of a Denarius, or Penny, to repreſent the Pence (as ſome Authors [i] about that time will have it) for which our Saviour was betrayed: And then alſo the People, inſtead of offering a Loaf of Bread, as formerly, were ordered to offer a Peny, which was either to be given to the Poor, or to be expended upon ſomething appertaining to the Sacrifice of the Altar. This is the ſhort Hiſtory of a great Change made inſenſibly in a matter of ſmall Moment, if we conſider barely the Queſtion about the Uſe of leavened and unleavened Bread: For it is very indifferent in itſelf, whether is uſed, ſo long as Peace is preſerved in the Church: But in the Conſequences and Progreſs of the Diſpute it was no ſmall Matter: For the Eaſt and Weſt divided about it, and the Weſtern Church ran ſo far into an Extream, as almoſt to loſe the Nature of the ſacramental Element, by introducing a Thing that could hardly be called Bread, inſtead of that common Staff of Life which the Lord had appointed to be the Repreſentation of his Body in the Euchariſt.

SECT. VI. The Uſe of Wafers inſtead of Bread, condemned in their firſt Original.

THERE wanted not ſome diſcerning and judicious Men in a dark Age, who complained of the Abuſe as ſoon as it began to be introduced. For Bernoldus, a learned Presbyter of Conſtance, about the Year 1089, wrote a Book De Ordine Romano, wherein he thus reflects upon theſe Wafer-Hoſts or Oblations: If no leſs Meaſure than an Handful be found mentioned in all the Old and New Teſtament; and nothing ought to be done in the Temple of the Lord without Meaſure and Reaſon; theſe minute Oblations ſeem not [k] to appertain to Chriſt or his Church, becauſe they are without Meaſure and Reaſon. This Author was a little too bold and free with the Corruptions and Abuſes of the Roman Church, ever to ſee the Light. But Trithemius mentions [l] the Book, and gives an honourable Character of the [e] Epiphan. Hær. 30. Ebionit. n. 16. [f] Ambroſ. de Sacram. lib. 4. cap. 4. Tu forte dicis, Meus Panis eſt uſitatus, &c. [g] Greg. Vita. lib. 2. cap. 41. [h] Pontifical. Vit. Melchiadis. Hic fecit ut Oblationes conſecratæ per Eccleſias ex conſecratu Epiſcopi dirigentur, quod declaratur Fermentum. Id. Vit. Siricii. Hic conſtituit ut nullus Presbyter Miſſas celebraret per omnem Hebdomadam, niſi conſecratum Epiſcopi loci deſignati ſuſciperet declaratum, quod nominatur Fermentum. Innoc. Ep. ad Decentium. cap. 5. Presbyteri Fermentum à nobis confectum per Acolythos accipiunt, ut ſe à noſtra Communione maxime illa die non judicent ſeparatos. Quod per Parochias fieri debere non puto, quia non longe portanda ſunt Sacramenta, &c. [i] Honorius Gemma Animæ lib. 1. cap. 66. ap. Bonam. Quia populo non communicante non erat neceſſe Panem tam magnum fieri, Statutum eſt eum in modum Denarii formari vel fieri; & ut populus pro oblatione farinæ Denarios offerret, pro quibus traditum Dominum recognoſcerent, &c. [k] Bernoldus de Ordine Romano. ap. Caſſandrum in Liturgicis. cap. 27. Si minor menſura quam pugillus non invenitur in toto ſerie Veteris & Novi Teſtamenti; & ſi nihil omnino debet fieri intra vel extra Templum Domini abſque Menſura & Ratione; videntur Oblatarum Minutiæ ad Chriſtum & ad Eccleſiam nihil pertinere, quia ſunt abſque Menſura & Ratione. [l] Trithem. de Scriptor. Eccleſ. Fol. 66.

Author. And Caſſander ſaw it in Manuſcript, and publiſhed this Fragment of it in his Liturgicks [m]; where he alſo makes a ſevere Reflection upon the Corruption and Vanity of that Age, for departing from the antient Practice, and introducing an imaginary ſort of Bread, which deſerved more the Name of the Shadow than the Subſtance. Which juſt Reflection is repeated from Caſſander, not only by Voſſius [n], but ingenuouſly alſo by Cardinal Bona [o] in his Animadverſions upon this unwarrantable Alteration. Yet ſome there are who pretend Antiquity for this alſo. Durantus [p] thought he had found this Wafer-Bread in Epiphanius, becauſe he ſays, the Bread was ἄρτῳ στρογγυλοειδὴς καὶ ἀνοίδητῳ [q], which they render, Bread of a circular Figure, and ſo minute that it could hardly be perceived by the Senſes. Whereas it ſhould be render'd, Bread of a ſolid, round, globular Figure, without Life or Senſe, which yet might repreſent him, who is all Life, and Infinite, and Incomprehenſible. Which agrees well to the Character of the Euchariſtical Bread uſed in Epiphanius's Time, when it was the Cuſtom to offer round and whole ſolid Loaves of Bread, but has no Relation to the Wafer-Bread of later Ages. Durantus urges farther the Teſtimony of Gregory the Great [r], who calls the Oblations, Oblationum Coronas, Crowns of Bread; which may imply, that they were round Loaves of Bread; but not therefore Wafers, unleſs every Thing that is round be a Wafer. He adds St. Chryſoſtom alſo, but he miſquotes him, for the Greek [s] has nothing of what is cited. But he might have added truly Cæſarius, Gregory Nazianzen's Brother [t], who comparing the natural and the ſacramental Body of Chriſt together, ſays, the one was diſtinguiſhed into ſeveral Members, but the other was round. And Iſo the Monk [u], who calls the Oblations, Rotulas Panis, Rowls of Bread, no doubt from the Roundneſs of their Figure: And the ſixteenth Council of Toledo [x], which ſpeaks of their Rotundity alſo. But as Cardinal Bona rightly obſerves, this Rotundity implies round Loaves of Bread, and not round Wafers; of which there was no Uſe or Knowlege in former Ages, when they uſed ſuch Loaves of common Bread as the People offered, or elſe ſuch as were prepared particularly for the Purpoſe; yet ſtill Loaves of Bread, not Wafers; and common or leavened Bread, not unleavened, of which there is not the leaſt Intimation given in any part of the Church for above a thouſand Years, as that learned Cardinal has proved beyond all Exception, to whoſe Diligence we chiefly owe the Illuſtration of this Matter, in that curious Diſſertation of his upon the Subject.

SECT. VII. Wine mixed with Water commonly uſed in the Antient Church.

THE other Part of the Sacrament was always Wine, and that taken alſo out of the Oblations of the People. Some of the antient Hereticks, under Pretence of Abſtinence and Temperance, changed this Element into Water, and conſecrated in Water only. Theſe were ſome of them Diſciples of Ebion, and ſome the Followers of Tatian, commonly called Hydroparaſtatæ, and Aquarii, from the Uſe of Water; and ſometimes Encratitæ, from their abſtaining wholly from Fleſh and Wine. And this ſeems to have been the Ground of their Errors, that they thought it univerſally unlawful to eat Fleſh or drink Wine. Under this Character they are frequently condemned, by Epiphanius [y], who terms them Encratites, and by St. Auſtin [z] under the Name of Aquarians, and by Theodoret [a], who ſays they ſprung from Tatian, and were called Hydroparaſtatæ, becauſe they offered Water inſtead of Wine; and Encratitæ, becauſe they wholly abſtained from Wine and living Creatures. St. Chryſoſtom [b] calls it the pernicious Hereſy of thoſe that uſed only Water in their Myſteries, whereas our Lord inſtituted them in Wine, and drunk Wine at his common Table after his Reſurrection, to prevent the Budding of this wicked Hereſy. The like may be read in Philaſtrius [c], and long before in Irenæus and Clemens Alexandrinus, not to mention the Council of Trullo [d] or any later Writers. But it is to be obſerved, that beſide theſe there were another ſort of Aquarians, who did not reject the Uſe of Wine as ſimply unlawful either in itſelf, or in the Euchariſt: For in their Evening Service they conſecrated the Euchariſt in Wine, but not in their Morning Aſſemblies, for fear the ſmell of the Wine ſhould diſcover them to the Heathen. St. Cyprian gives a long Account of theſe in one of his Epiſtles [e], which is particularly deſigned againſt them. From which it alſo appears, that the Cuſtom of the Church then was to uſe Wine mixed with Water, and he pleads for both as neceſſary from the Command and Example of Chriſt; adding ſome other Reaſons why it ſhould be ſo, as that the Water repreſents the People, as the Wine [f] does the Blood of Chriſt: And when in the Cup the Water is mingled with the Wine, Chriſt and his People are united together. And ſo, he ſays, in ſanctifying the Cup of the Lord, Water cannot be offered alone: as neither can the Wine be offered alone: For if the Wine be [m] Caſſander. Liturgic. cap. 27. [n] Voſs. Theſ. Theol. de Symbolis cœnæ Domin. p. 441. [o] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 1. cap. 23. n. 11. [p] Durant. de Ritibus. lib. 2. cap. 38. n. 6. [q] Epiphan. Anchorat. n. 57. [r] Greg. Dialog. lib. 4. cap. 55. [s] Chryſ. Hom. 83. in Mat. [t] Cæſar. Dialog. 3. Quæſt. 169. [u] Iſo de Miraculis S. Othmari. cap. 3. [x] Conc. Tolet. 16. can. 6. [y] Epiph. Hær. 46. Encratit. Hær. 30. Ebionit. n. 16. [z] Aug. de Hæreſ. cap. 64. [a] Theod. de Fabulis Hæret. lib. 1. cap. 20. [b] Chryſ. Hom. 83. in Mat. p. 780. [c] Philaſtr. de Hæreſ. cap. 77. Iren. lib. 5. cap. 1. Clem. Strom. 1. p. 375. Pædag. lib. 2. c. 2. [d] Conc. Trull. can. 32. Vid. Cod. Theodoſian. lib. 16. tit. 5. de Hæreticis. leg. 7. It. Theodoſii Novel. 3. ad calcem tom. 6. [e] Cypr. Ep. 63. ad Cæcilium. [f] Ibid. p. 153. Videmus in aqua populum intelligi, in vino verò oſtendi ſanguinem Chriſti —— Sic autem in Sanctificando calice Domini, offerri aqua ſola non poteſt, quomodo nec vinum ſolum poteſt: Nam ſi vinum tantum quis offerat, ſanguis Chriſti incipit eſſe ſine nobis: ſi verò aqua ſit ſola, plebs incipit eſſe ſine Chriſto.

offered

offered by itſelf, the Blood of Chriſt begins to be without us: And if the Water be alone, the People begin to be without Chriſt. The third Council of Carthage ſeem to have had the ſame Opinion of the Neceſſity of Water, when they determined, as we have heard before, that nothing ſhould be offered at the Altar [g] but what the Lord himſelf commanded, that is, Bread, and Wine mingled with Water. And St. Auſtin was a Member of that Council, and therefore may be ſuppoſed to have been of the ſame Judgment. He alſo quotes the foreſaid Epiſtle of Cyprian with Approbation [h]. Gennadius [i] aſſigns two Reaſons for the Uſe of mixing Water with Wine; firſt becauſe it is according to the Example of Chriſt; and ſecondly becauſe when our Saviour's Side was pierced with the Spear, there came forth Water and Blood. This later Reaſon is alſo aſſigned by St. Ambroſe, or whoever wrote the Book de Sacramentis under his Name [k]; and by Martin Bracarenſis [l] in his Collection of Greek Canons. The Author of the Epiſtle to the Egyptians under the Name of Pope Julius [m] inſiſts upon Cyprian's Reaſon, that it is to ſhew the Union of Chriſt with his People. And the third Council of Braga relates Cyprian's Words, correcting ſeveral other Abuſes that were crept into the Adminiſtration of this Sacrament [n]; as of ſome who offered Milk inſtead of Wine; and others who only dipped the Bread into the Wine, and ſo denied the People their Complement of the Sacrament; and others who uſed no other Wine but what they preſſed out of the Cluſters of Grapes that were then preſented at the Lord's Table. All which they condemn, and order that nothing but Bread, and Wine mingled with Water, ſhould be offered, according to the Determination of the antient Councils. The Council of Auxerre notes ſome others who offer Mead, or Honey and Water mixed together [o], who are alſo condemned, as going againſt the common Rule of offering nothing but Wine and Water in the Sacrifice of the Altar. The Author of the Commentaries upon St. Mark under the Name of St. Jerom [p] gives another Reaſon for mixing Water with Wine, that by the one we might be purg'd from Sin, and by the other redeemed from Puniſhment. Theſe Reaſons indeed are no ways demonſtrative; however that the Practice was both antient and general, is evident from Juſtin Martyr [q] and Irenæus [r], who mention it as the Cuſtom of the Church, without aſſigning any farther Reaſon for it: And ſo likewiſe Gregory Nyſſen [s] and Theodoret [t] with ſome others produced by Voſſius in his Diſſertation [u] upon this Subject. The Armenians are ſaid to have conſecrated only in Wine, but that is reckoned an Error in them by Theophylact [x], and they are equally condemned with the Hydroparaſtatæ or Aquarians by the Council of Trullo [y], which produces the Authority of St. James and St. Baſil's Liturgy againſt them. To which may be added the Liturgies under the Name of St. Mark and St. Chryſoſtom, and the Conſtitutions [z]. Yet after all, as there is no expreſs Command for this in the Inſtitution, notwithſtanding this general Conſent of the antient Church, it is commonly determined by modern Divines, as well of the Roman as Proteſtant Communion, that it is not eſſential to the Sacrament itſelf, as the Reader that is curious may find demonſtrated in Voſſius [a] in his Diſſertation upon this Subject.

SECT. VIII. Of ſome Hereticks who made Alterations or Additions to the Elements in the Euchariſt.

As to the Ancients, they are not to be blamed in keeping ſtrictly to this Cuſtom, becauſe they thought it a Part of the Inſtitution. Upon which Account they cenſured all that made any Alteration in the Elements, either by Addition, or Subtraction, or changing one Element for another. The Aquarians, as we have heard, were condemned, for taking away the Wine; the Armenians and others for not uſing Water alſo; others were condemned for changing the Wine into Milk, or Honey mixed with Water; others ſubſtituted Grapes inſtead of Wine, others Pulſe inſtead of Bread. Of all which becauſe we have ſpoken before in the two foregoing Sections, I need ſay no more in this place. But beſide theſe there was once a ſenſeleſs Sect, which thought they did not celebrate the Euchariſt in Perfection, unleſs they offered Cheeſe together with the Bread. Whence they had the Name of Artotyritæ, from ἄρτος, which in Greek ſignifies Bread, and τυρὸς Cheeſe. This is the Account which Epiphanius [b] gives of them, and after him St. Auſtin [c] ſaying, The Artotyrites are ſo called from their Oblation: For they offer Bread and Cheeſe, ſaying, That the firſt Oblations that were offered by Men in the Infancy of the World, were of the Fruits of the Earth and of Sheep.

[g] Conc. Carth. 3. can. 24. [h] Aug. de Doctrina Chriſt. lib. 4. cap. 21. [i] Gennad. de Eccleſ. Dogm. c. 75. In Euchariſtia non debet pura aqua offerri, ut quidam ſobrietatis falluntur imagine, ſed vinum aqua mixtum: quia & vinum fuit in redemptionis noſtræ myſterio, cum dixit, Non bibam amodo de hoc genimine vitis, & aqua mixtum, quod poſt cœnam dabatur, ſed & de latere ejus lancea perfoſſo aqua cum ſanguine egreſſa, &c. [k] Ambroſ. de Sacram. lib. 5. cap. 1. [l] Martin. Bracar. Collect. Canonum. cap. 55. [m] Julii Epiſt. ap. Gratian. de Conſecrat. Diſt. 2. cap. 7. [n] Conc. Bracar. 3. can. 1. Audivimus quoſdam Schiſmatica ambitione detentos, Lac pro vino in diviniis Sacrificiis dedicare; alios quoque intinctam Euchariſtiam populis pro Complemento Communionis porrigere; quoſdam etiam expreſſum vinum in Sacramento Dominici calicis offerre. &c. Ideo nulli deinceps licitum ſit, aliud in Sacrificiis divinis offerre, niſi juxta antiquorum ſententiam Conciliorum panem tantum, & calicem vino & aqua permixtum. [o] Conc. Antiſſiodor. can. 8. Non licet in altario in Sacrificio divino mellitum, quod mulſum appellatur, nec ullum aliud poculum, extra vinum cum aqua mixtum, offerre. [p] Hieron. in Marc. 14. Accepit Jeſus panem, &c. formans ſanguinem ſuum in calicem vino & aqua mixtum, ut alio purgemur à culpis, alio redimamur à pœnis. [q] Juſtin. Apol. 2. p. 97. [r] Iren. lib. 4. cap. 57. & lib. 5. cap. 2. [s] Nyſſen. Orat. Catechet. c. 37. [t] Theod. Dialog. 1. [u] Voſſ. Theſ. Theol. p. 494. [x] Theophyl. Com. in Joan. 19. [y] Conc. Trull. Can. 32. [z] Conſtit. lib. 8. cap. 12. [a] Voſſ. Theſ. Theol. ibid. [b] Epiphan. Hær. 49. [c] Aug. de Hæreſ. cap. 48. Artotyritæ ſunt, quibus Oblatio eorum hoc nomen dedit: Offerunt enim Panem & Caſeum, dicentes, à primis hominibus oblationes de fructibus terræ & ovium fuiſſe celebratas.

SECT. IX. And of others who rejected the Use of the Sacrament altogether.

THERE were others who wholly rejected the Use of all external Symbols or Sacraments in general, and consequently both Baptism and the Eucharist, upon a Pretence that Faith and Knowledge and spiritual Worship were the only Things that were required of Christians. Upon this Pretence the Ascodrutæ, who were a sort of Gnosticks, neither administred Baptism nor the Eucharist in their Society: They said the Divine Mysteries were incorporeal and invisible Things, and therefore not to be represented by such corporeal and visible Things as Water, or Bread and Wine; but perfect Knowledge was their Redemption. So Theodoret [d] describes them. And so both he and Epiphanius [e] describe another abominable Sect, who from one of their principal Tenets were called Archonticks. They taught, that the World was not made by the Supreme God, but by certain Inferior Powers, seven or eight in Number, whom they called Archontes, Rulers of the several Orbs of the Heavens one above another, to the chief of which they gave the Name of Sabaoth: And they pretended, that Baptism and the Eucharist were only Institutions of this Sabaoth, the God of the Jews and Giver of the Law, and not the Ordinances of the Supreme God; for which Reason they wholly rejected the Use of them. Some other such Sects there were among the antient Heresies, who despised the Eucharist [f] upon the like Pretences: But these are sufficient to shew us what sort of Men they were, that antiently contemned this holy Ordinance; and therefore without farther digressing to make any nicer Enquiry after them, I now return to the Business and Service of the Church.

CHAP. III.

Of the Oblation and Consecration-Prayers.

SECT. I. The Form of Thanksgiving and Consecration Prayers described out of the Constitutions.

AS soon as the Peoples Offerings were made, and Bread and Wine were set apart for the Eucharist, they proceeded to the solemn Consecration of them. The Manner of which is described at large in the Constitutions; which I will first set down here, and then compare the several Parts of it with the authentick Accounts we have in other antient Writers. Immediately then after the first Prayers for the Faithful are ended, the Deacon is ordered [a] to give a solemn Admonition, saying, προσχωμεν, Let us give Attention. Then the Bishop or Priest salutes the Church, saying, The Peace of God be with you all: And the People answer, And with thy Spirit. After this, the Deacon says to them all, Salute ye one another with an holy Kiss. Then the Clergy salute the Bishop, and Laymen their Fellow-Laymen, and the Women the Women; the Children standing before the Bema, that is, either the Reading-Desk or the Altar; with a Deacon attending them, to see that they keep good Order; others of the Deacons walking about the Church, and inspecting the Men and Women, that there be no Tumult, nor making of Signs to one another, nor Whispering, nor Sleeping; and others standing at the Mens Gate, and the Subdeacons at the Womens Gate, that the Doors be not opened for any to go in or out in the time of Oblation. After this, the Subdeacon brings Water to the Priests to wash their Hands, as a Sign of the Purity of those Souls that are consecrated unto God. Immediately after this [b] a Deacon cries out, Let none of the Catechumens be present, none of the Hearers, none of the Unbelievers, none of the Heterodox Party. Ye that have made the first Prayer, go forth, προελθετε (or rather, as Cotelerius thinks it ought to be read, προσελθετε, Ye that have made the first Prayers, draw near: For this seems to be spoken to the Communicants, as an Invitation,) Ye Mothers, take your Children, and bring them with you. Let no one come with Enmity against another; no one in Hypocrisy. Let us stand upright before the Lord with Fear and Trembling, to offer our Sacrifice. This said, the Deacons bring the τα δωρα (the Elements) to the Bishop at the Altar; the Presbyters standing on each Hand of him, and two Deacons with their Fans to drive away the little Insects, that none of them fall into the Cup. Then the Bishop standing at the Altar with the Presbyters, makes a private Prayer by himself, having on his white or bright Vestment, and signing himself with the Sign of the Cross in his Forehead. Which done, he says, The Grace of Almighty God, and the Love of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the Fellowship of the Holy Ghost be with you all. And the People answer with one Voice, And with thy Spirit. Then the Bishop says, Lift up your Hearts: And they all answer, We lift them up unto the Lord. The Bishop says again, Let us give Thanks to the Lord: And the People answer, It is meet and right so to do. Then the Bishop says, It is very meet, and right, above all Things, to praise Thee the true God, who art before all Creatures, of whom the whole Family in Heaven and Earth is named, who art the only Unbegotten, without Original, without King, without Lord, who [d] Theod. de Fabulis Hæret. lib. 1. cap. 10. [e] Theod. ibid. cap. 11. Epiphan. Hær. 40. de Archonticis, n. 2. [f] Vid. Orig. περι ευχης. n. 13. Ea penitus auferentes quæ sensibus percipiuntur, nec Baptismum nec Eucharistiam usurpantes, &c.

[a] Constit. lib. 8. cap. 11. [b] Ibid. cap. 12.

haſt need of Nothing, who art the Author of all Good, who art above all Cauſe and Generation, and always the ſame, of whom all Things have their Original and Exiſtence. For Thou art Original Knowledge, Eternal Sight, Hearing without Beginning, and Wiſdom without Teaching; the firſt in Nature, and the Law of Exiſting, exceeding all Number. Who madeſt all Things to exiſt out of Nothing by Thy Only-begotten Son, whom Thou didſt beget before all Ages by Thy Will, and Power, and Goodneſs, without the Intervention of any, who is Thy Only-begotten Son, the Word that is God, the living Wiſdom, the Firſt-born of every Creature, the Angel of Thy great Counſel, Thy High-Prieſt, but the King and Lord of all the Creatures both viſible and inviſible, who is before all Things, and by whom all Things conſiſt. For Thou, O Eternal God, didſt create all Things by Him, and by Him thou doſt vouchſafe to rule and govern them in the orderly Ways of thy Providence. By whom Thou didſt give them Being, by Him alſo Thou didſt give them a Well-being. O God and Father of Thy Only-begotten Son, who by Him didſt create the Cherubims and Seraphims, the Ages and Hoſts, the Dominions and Powers, the Principalities and Thrones, the Archangels and Angels, and after them didſt by Him create this viſible World, and all Things that are therein. For Thou art He that haſt eſtabliſhed the Heavens as an Arch, and extended them like a Curtain; that haſt founded the Earth upon Nothing by thy ſole Will; that haſt fixed the Firmament, and formed Night and Day; that haſt brought the Light out of thy Treaſures, and ſuperadded Darkneſs for a Covering, to give Reſt to the Creatures that move in the World; that haſt ſet the Sun in the Heaven to govern the Day, and the Moon to govern the Night; and ordered the Courſe of the Stars, to the Praiſe of thy Magnificent Power; that haſt made the Water for Drink and Purgation, and the vital Air both for Breathing and Speaking; that haſt made the Fire to be a Comfort in Darkneſs, to ſupply our Wants, and that we ſhould be both warmed and enlightened thereby; that haſt divided the great Sea from the Earth, and made the one Navigable, and the other Paſſable on Foot; that haſt filled the one with ſmall and great Animals, and the other with tame and wild Beaſts; that haſt crowned the Earth with Plants and Herbs of all ſorts, and adorned it with Flowers, and enriched it with Seeds; that haſt eſtabliſhed the Deep, and ſet a great Barrier about it, walling the great Heaps of ſalt Water, and bounding them with Gates of the ſmalleſt Sand; that ſometimes raiſeſt the ſame Deep to the Magnitude of Mountains by thy Winds, and ſometimes layeſt it plain like a Field; now making it rage with a Storm, and then again quieting it with a Calm, that they which ſail therein may find a ſafe and gentle Paſſage; that haſt begirt the World, which Thou createdſt by Chriſt, with Rivers, and watered it with Brooks, and filled it with Springs of living Water always flowing, and bound up the Earth with Mountains, to give it a firm and unmoveable Situation. Thou haſt filled thy World, and adorned it with odoriferous and medicinal Herbs, with a Multitude and Variety of Animals, weaker and ſtronger, ſome for Meat, and ſome for Labour, ſome of a mild and ſome of a fiercer Nature; with the hiſſing of Serpents, and ſweeter notes of Birds of divers Kinds; with the Revolutions of Years, and Numbers of Months and Days, and Orders of ſtated Seaſons; with flying Clouds producing Rain, for the Procreation of Fruits, and Preſervation of Animals; with Winds to blow in Order at thy Command, and a multitude of Plants and Herbs. Neither haſt thou only made the World, but created Man in it to be Citizen of the World, and made him the Ornament of thy beautiful Structure. For thou ſaidſt to thy own Wiſdom, Let us make Man in our own Image and Likeneſs, and let them have Dominion over the Fiſh of the Sea, and over the Fowl of the Air. And therefore Thou madeſt him of an Immortal Soul, and a diſſolvable Body; creating the one out of nothing, and the other out of the four Elements: And gaveſt him in his Soul a rational Knowledge, a Power to diſcern between Piety and Impiety, and a Judgment to diſtinguiſh between Good and Evil; and in his Body the Privilege and Faculty of five ſeveral Senſes, with the Power of local Motion. For Thou, O God Almighty, didſt by Chriſt plant Paradiſe in Eden towards the Eaſt, adorning it with all Kinds of Plants meet for Food, and placing Man therein as in a well-furniſhed Houſe: And in his Creation Thou gaveſt a natural Law implanted in his Mind, that thereby he might have within himſelf the Seeds of Divine Knowledge. And when Thou hadſt placed him in the Paradiſe of Delights and Pleaſure, Thou gaveſt him Power to eat of all Things, only forbidding him to taſte of one Kind, in Expectation of ſomething better: That if he obſerved that Command, he might attain to Immortality, as the Reward of his Obedience. But he neglecting this Command, and by the Fraud of the Serpent and the Counſel of the Woman taſting the forbidden Fruit, Thou didſt juſtly drive him out of Paradiſe; and yet in Goodneſs didſt not deſpiſe him, when he had deſtroyed himſelf; for he was thy Workmanſhip; but Thou who didſt put the Creatures in Subjection under him, didſt appoint him to get his Food by Labour and Sweat, thy Providence concurring to produce, augment and bring all Things to Maturity and Perfection. Thou didſt ſuffer him for a while to ſleep the Sleep of Death, and then with an Oath calledſt him again to a Regeneration: Diſſolving the Bands of Death, and promiſing him Life by a Reſurrection. And not only ſo; but giving him an innumerable Poſterity, Thou didſt glorify ſuch of them as adhered to Thee, and puniſhedſt thoſe that apoſtatized from Thee; receiving the Sacrifice of Abel as an holy Man, and rejecting the Offering of Cain as abominable for murdering his Brother. Thou didſt alſo receive Seth and Enos, and tranſlate Enoch. For Thou art the Creator of Men, and the Author of Life, and the Supplier of all their Wants, their Lawgiver, that rewardeſt thoſe that keep thy Laws, and puniſheſt thoſe that tranſgreſs them. Thou didſt bring an univerſal Deluge upon the World becauſe of the multitude of the Ungodly, but deliveredſt righteous Noah out of the Flood with eight Souls in thy Ark, making him the End of the preceding Generation, and the Father of thoſe that were to come. Thou didſt kindle a dreadful Fire againſt the five Cities of the Sodomites, and turn a fruitful Land into a Vale of Salt for the Wickedneſs of them that dwelt therein, but didſt de- liver righteous Lot from the Burning. Thou art he that didſt deliver Abraham from the Impiety of his Anceſtors, and madeſt him to become Heir of the World, and didſt manifeſt thy Chriſt unto him. Thou didſt appoint Melchiſedech to be the High-Prieſt of thy Service. Thou didſt declare thy Servant Job, after many Sufferings, to be Conqueror of the Serpent, that firſt Author of Evil. Thou madeſt Iſaac to be the Son of Promiſe. Thou madeſt Jacob to be the Father of twelve Children, and his Off-ſpring to be innumerable, and broughteſt Threeſcore and fifteen Souls into Egypt. Thou, Lord, didſt not deſpiſe Joſeph, but for his Chaſtity madeſt him to rule over the Egyptians. Thou, Lord, didſt not forget the Hebrews, when the Egyptians oppreſſed them, becauſe of the Promiſe made to their Fathers; but didſt puniſh the Egyptians, and deliver thy People. And when Men had corrupted the Law of Nature written in their Minds, and ſome began to think the Creatures had their Exiſtence of themſelves, and honoured them above what was meet, placing them in the ſame Rank with Thee the God of all; Thou didſt not ſuffer them to wander in Error, but raiſing up thy holy Servant Moſes, Thou didſt by him promulge a written Law to revive and ſupport the Law of Nature; ſhewing the Creatures to be the Work of thy Hands, and thereby expelling the Error of Polytheiſm out of Religion. Thou didſt honour Aaron and his Poſterity with the Dignity of the Prieſthood. Thou didſt chaſtize the Hebrews, when they ſinned; and receive them into Favour, when they turned unto Thee. Thou didſt puniſh the Egyptians with ten Plagues; and dividing the Sea, madeſt the Iſraelites to paſs through it; drowning the Egyptians that purſued them. Thou madeſt the bitter Water ſweet with Wood; Thou broughteſt Streams out of the Rock, when thou hadſt divided the Top of it; Thou didſt rain down Manna out of Heaven, and give them Food out of the Air, a Meaſure of Quails for every Day; ſetting up a Pillar of Fire to give them Light by Night, and the Pillar of the Cloud to ſhadow them from Heat by Day. Thou didſt conſtitute Joſhua the Captain of thy Armies, and by him deſtroy the ſeven Nations of the Canaanites, dividing Jordan, and drying up the Rivers of Ethan, and laying flat the Walls (of Jericho) without any Engines of War or Concurrence of human Power. For all theſe Things we glorify Thee, O Lord Almighty. The innumerable Armies of Angels adore Thee; the Archangels, Thrones, Dominions, Principalities, Dignities, Powers, Hoſts and Ages; the Cherubims, and Seraphims alſo with ſix Wings, with two of which they cover their Feet, and with two their Faces, and two fly, ſaying, with thouſand thouſands of Archangels, and ten thouſand times ten thouſand Angels, all crying out without reſt and intermiſſion: And let all the People ſay together with them, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord of Hoſts: Heaven and Earth are full of thy Glory: Bleſſed art Thou for ever. Amen. And after this let the Biſhop ſay: For Thou truly art Holy, the moſt Holy, the moſt High, far exalted above all Things for evermore. Holy alſo is thy Only-begotten Son, our Lord and God, Jeſus Chriſt; who miniſtring to Thee his God and Father in all Things, both in various Works of Creation and Providence, did not deſpiſe loſt Mankind; but after the Law of Nature, after the Admonitions of the written Law, after the Reprehenſions of the Prophets, after the Adminiſtrations and Preſidency of Angels; when Men had corrupted both the natural and written Law, and eraſed the Memory of the Flood, and the Burning of Sodom, and the Plagues of Egypt, and Devaſtations and Slaughters of Paleſtine, and were now all ready to periſh; He, who was the Creator of Man, choſe by thy Will to become Man; the Lawgiver, to be under the Law; the High-prieſt, to be the Sacrifice; the Shepherd, to be made a Sheep: Whereby he appeaſed Thee his God and Father, and reconciled the World, and delivered all Men from the Wrath that hanged over their Heads, being born of a Virgin, and made Fleſh, God the Word, the beloved Son, the Firſt-born of every Creature; according to the Prophecies which he himſelf predicted of himſelf, made of the Seed of David and Abraham, and of the Tribe of Judah: He who was the Former of all Things that are made, was formed himſelf in the Virgin's Womb; he who is without Fleſh, was made Fleſh; and he who was begotten, ἀχρόνως, before all Time, was born in Time: He lived an holy Life, and taught an holy Doctrine; expelling all manner of Sickneſſes and Infirmities from the Bodies of Men, and working Signs and Miracles among the People; He who Feeds all that have need of Food and fills every living Creature of his own good Pleaſure and Bounty, did himſelf partake of Meat and Drink and Sleep; he manifeſted thy Name to them that knew it not; he put Ignorance to flight, and revived true Piety and Godlineſs, fulfilled thy Will, and finiſhed the Work which Thou gaveſt him to do: And when all Things were thus ſet in Order and rectified by him, he was betrayed by the incurable Malice of one of his own Diſciples, and apprehended by the Hands of the Wicked, Prieſts and High-prieſts falſely ſo called, together with a ſinful People; of whom he ſuffered many Things, and underwent all manner of Indignities by thy Permiſſion; he was delivered to Pilate the Governour; the Judge himſelf was judged; the Saviour of the World condemned; He who is Impaſſible, was nailed to the Croſs; He who is Immortal by Nature, was made ſubject to Death; and the Author of Life, who quickens all Things, was laid in the Grave, that he might deliver thoſe from Suffering, for whoſe Sake he came, and ſet them free from Death, and break the Bonds of the Devil, and deliver Men from his Frauds and Impoſtures: He roſe again the third Day from the Dead, and converſed forty Days with his Diſciples, and was taken up into Heaven, and ſet at thy right Hand, his God and Father.

We therefore in Commemoration of theſe Things, which he ſuffered for us, give Thanks to Thee, Almighty God, not as thou deſerveſt and as is our Duty, but (ὅσον δυνάμεθα,) as far as we are able, ſo fulfilling his Command. For in the ſame Night that he was betrayed, he took Bread in his Holy and Immaculate Hands, and looking up to Thee his God and Father, he brake it, and gave it to his Diſciples, ſaying, This is the Myſtery of the New Teſtament; Take of it, and eat it; This is my Body, which is broken for many for the Remiſſion of Sins. Likewiſe he mixed a Cup of Wine and Water, and ſancti- ſanctifying it, he gave it unto them, ſaying, Drink ye all of this: For this is my Blood, which is ſhed for many for the Remiſſion of Sins. This do in Remembrance of me. For as often as ye eat this Bread, and drink this Cup, ye do ſhew forth my Death, till I come. We therefore being mindful of his Paſſion, and Death, and Reſurrection from the Dead, and his Return into Heaven; and alſo of his ſecond coming, when he ſhall return with Glory and Power to judge the Quick and Dead, and to render to every Man according to his Works, do offer unto Thee, our King and God, this Bread and this Cup, according to his Appointment, giving Thanks to Thee by him, for that thou doſt vouchſafe to let us ſtand before Thee, and Miniſter unto Thee; and we beſeech Thee to look propitiouſly upon theſe Gifts here ſet before Thee, our God, who haſt need of nothing, and to accept them favourably to the Honour of thy Chriſt, and to ſend thy Holy Spirit upon this Sacrifice, who is the Witneſs of the Suffering of our Lord Jeſus, that it may make this Bread the Body of thy Chriſt, and this Cup the Blood of thy Chriſt; that they who partake of it, may be confirmed in Godlineſs, and obtain Remiſſion of Sins, may be delivered from the Devil and his Impoſtures, may be filled with the Holy Ghoſt, and be made worthy of Chriſt, and obtain eternal Life, Thou being reconciled to them, O Lord Almighty.

We beſeech thee farther, O Lord, for thy holy Church from one End of the Earth to the other, which Thou haſt purchaſed with the precious Blood of thy Chriſt, that thou wouldſt be pleaſed to keep it unſhaken and immoveable by any Storms or Tempeſts to the End of the World. We pray alſo for the whole Epiſcopacy (or univerſal College of Biſhops) rightly dividing the Word of Truth. We pray for me thy unworthy Servant, who am now Offering unto thee, and for the whole Presbytery, and Deacons, and all the Clergy, that thou wouldſt give them all Wiſdom, and fill them with thy holy Spirit. We pray thee, O Lord, for the King and all that are in Authority, and for the whole Army, that our Affairs may be tranſacted in Peace: That paſſing our Time in Quietneſs and Concord, we may glorify thee through Jeſus Chriſt our Hope all the Days of our Life. We offer unto thee for all thy Saints, that have lived well-pleaſing in thy Sight from the Foundation of the World, for Patriarchs, Prophets, holy Men, Apoſtles, Martyrs, Biſhops, Confeſſors, Preſbyters, Deacons, Subdeacons, Readers, Singers, Virgins, Widows, Laymen, and all whoſe Names thou knoweſt. We offer unto thee for this People, that thou wouldſt make them, to the Glory of thy Chriſt, a Royal Prieſthood, and an holy Nation; for all that live in Virginity and Chaſtity; for the Widows of the Church; for all that live in honeſt Marriage and Procreation of Children; for the Infants of thy People, that none of us be a Caſt-away. We pray thee for this City, and all that dwell therein; for thoſe that are in Sickneſs, in cruel Bondage and Slavery, in Baniſhment, or under Confiſcation and Proſcription, for all that travel by Sea or by Land, that thou wouldſt be their Succour, and an univerſal Helper and Defender to them all. We pray thee for thoſe that hate us, and perſecute us for thy Name, for them that are yet without, and wandering in Error, that thou wouldſt convert them to Good, and mitigate their Fury. We pray thee for the Catechumens of the Church; for the Energumens, that are toſſed and tormented by the Adverſary the Devil; for all our Brethren that are doing Penance, that thou wouldſt perfect the former in Faith, and cleanſe and deliver the ſecond from the Power and Agitation of the wicked One; and receive the Repentance of the laſt, and pardon both them and us whatever Offences we have committed againſt Thee. We offer unto Thee likewiſe for the Temperature of the Air, and the Increaſe of the Fruits of the Earth, that we continually partaking of thoſe good Things which thou beſtoweſt on us, may without ceaſing praiſe Thee, who giveſt Food unto all Fleſh. We alſo pray for thoſe, who upon any juſt and reaſonable Cauſe are now abſent, that thou wouldſt vouchſafe to preſerve us all in Godlineſs, and keeping us without Change, Blame, or Rebuke, to gather us into the Kingdom of thy Chriſt, the God of all Things in Nature, viſible and inviſible, and our King For to thee, Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, is due all Glory and Worſhip and Thankſgiving and Honour and Adoration, now and for ever throughout all Ages World without End. And let all the People anſwer, Amen.

After this the Biſhop is appointed to ſay again, The Peace of God be with you all: To which the People anſwer, And with thy Spirit. And then the Deacon calls upon the People to join with him in another Prayer, which is termed προσφώνησις, &c. A Bidding-Prayer for the faithful after the Divine Oblation, in theſe Words: Let us pray [c] yet again and again to God by his Chriſt, for this Gift which is offered to the Lord God; that the good God would receive it to his Altar in Heaven for a ſweet-ſmelling Savour by the Mediation of his Chriſt. Let us pray for this Church and People; for the whole Society of Biſhops, and Presbyters, and Deacons, and Miniſters, and the whole Catholick Church; that the Lord would keep and preſerve them all. Let us pray for Kings and all that are in Authority; that our Affairs may go on with Tranquillity, and that we may lead a quiet and peaceable Life in all Godlineſs and Honeſty. Let us commemorate the Holy Martyrs, that we may be thought worthy to have Fellowſhip in their Conflicts and Engagements. Let us pray for thoſe that reſt in Faith; Let us pray for the Temperature of the Air, and Increaſe of the Fruits of the Earth, that they may grow to Perfection. Let us pray for thoſe that are newly Baptized, that they may be confirmed in Faith. Let us all exhort and excite one another. Let us riſe and commend our ſelves to God by his Grace. Then let the Biſhop ſay: O God, that art Great, great in Name, great in Counſel, and mighty in Works; the God and Father of thy Holy Son Jeſus our Saviour; look favourably upon us and this thy Flock, which thou haſt choſen in him to the Glory of thy Name. Sanctify our Bodies and Souls; and grant, that we being pure from all Filthineſs of Fleſh and Spirit may obtain the good Things that are ſet before us; and that thou may'ſt judge none of us unworthy, but be our Helper, Defender and Protector, through thy Chriſt; to whom with thee and the Holy Spirit, be Glory, Honour, and Praiſe, Doxology and Thankſgiving for ever. Amen.

[c] Conſtit. lib. 8. cap. 13.

And when all the People have ſaid, Amen: Let the Deacon cry again, προσχωμεν, Let us give Attention. Then the Biſhop ſhall ſpeak to the People, ſaying, τὰ ἅγια τοῖς ἁγίοις, Holy Things for thoſe that are Holy. And the People ſhall anſwer, There is one Holy, one Lord, one Jeſus Chriſt, to the Glory of God the Father, Bleſſed for ever. Amen. Glory be to God on high, and in Earth Peace, good Will towards Men. Hoſanna to the Son of David: Bleſſed be the Lord God, that came in the Name of the Lord, and manifeſted himſelf unto us: Hoſanna in the Higheſt.

This is the whole Service preceding the Act of Communicating, as it is deliverd in the Conſtitutions; which I have here repreſented all together as it lies there, that the Reader may ſee it in one View. I ſhall now compare the ſeveral Parts and Branches of it with the certain Accounts we have of them in other Authentick Writers; beginning with that which was the firſt in Order, the Miniſter's Salutation of the People.

SECT. II.

This Account compared with what is ſaid in other Authors. Firſt, As to the Form of Salutation, Peace be with you, &c.

IT has been obſerved before [*] that this Form of ſaluting the People, by ſaying, Peace be with you, or The Lord be with you, or, The Grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, &c. be with you, was the uſual Preface and Introduction to all Holy Offices, and therefore always uſed before Prayers, eſpecially thoſe that were offered up at the Altar. Theodoret ſays, it was uſed both at the Entrance of their Sermons and the Myſtical Service [d], by which he means this part of the Communion-Office. Cyril of Alexandria ſays the ſame, that they uſed it in the Beginning [e] of their Myſteries; and that Chriſt made it a Law, as it were unto the Church by ſaying ſo often to his Diſciples, Peace be unto you. But no one ſpeaks more fully of it than St. Chryſoſtom. He ſays, they uſed it in all their Offices; when they firſt came into the Church; when they preached; when they gave the Benediction; when they commanded the People to ſalute one another with the Kiſs of Peace; when the Sacrifice [f] was offered; and at other times in the Communion-Service. Where it is obſervable, that he ſpeaks of this Salutation as uſed four times at leaſt in this part of the Communion-Office, beſides other Occaſions. In another place exhorting Chriſtians not to follow the Cuſtoms of the Jews, but to be at Unity and Peace among themſelves, he uſes this Argument, There is nothing comparable to Peace and Concord. Therefore when the Biſhop firſt enters the Church, before ever he goes up to his Throne, he ſays, Peace be unto you all: When he riſes up to preach, he does not begin, before he has given the Peace to all: When the Prieſts are about to make the Benediction-Prayers, they firſt [g] uſe this Salutation, and then begin their Benedictions. So alſo the Deacon, when he bids you pray in common, among other things he reminds you to pray for the Angel of Peace; and when he diſmiſſes you from this Aſſembly, he prays for you in the ſame manner, ſaying, Go in Peace. And there is nothing at all ſaid or done without this. In another Homily upon the Deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt, [h] he gives the Reaſon, why it was more particularly uſed at the Lord's Table. The Biſhop, ſays he, not only when he goes into his Throne, and when he preaches, and when he prays, uſes this Form, but when he ſtands at this Holy Table, when he is about to offer the tremendous Sacrifice, he does not touch the Oblation, before he has prayed that the Grace of the Lord may be with you, and ye have anſwered, And with thy Spirit: By which Anſwer ye remind your ſelves, that it is not the Miniſter who effects any thing in this Matter, neither is the Conſecration of the Gifts there lying the Work of Human Nature, but that it is the Grace of the Spirit then preſent, and deſcending upon the Elements, that makes this Myſtical Sacrifice. There are ſeveral other Paſſages to the ſame Purpoſe in his other Homilies [i] upon the Goſpels and St. Paul's Epiſtles, which becauſe the Reader may find them at large in the Extract of the Liturgy above [†] out of St. Chryſoſtom's Works, I will not here repeat them. The ſame Cuſtom was always obſerved in the Latin Church. For Tertullian [k] plainly refers to it, when he objects it to the Hereticks, that they gave the Peace to all without Exception; implying that the Church uſed it, but with ſome Diſtinction. Optatus ſays, [l] the Donatiſts retained the Form, but groſly abuſed it in their Practice. They could not omit the ſolemn Words: They ſaid, Peace be unto you. But why, ſays he, doſt thou ſalute Men with that, which thou haſt not? Why doſt thou name Peace, that haſt deſtroyed it? Thou ſaluteſt Men with the Words of Love and Peace, who haſt nothing of the Reality and Subſtance of it. In the Spaniſh Church they uſed a like Form, though not altogether the ſame. For by an Order of the first Council of Braga [m] it was appointed that both Bishops and Presbyters should use one and the same Form of Salutation, that is, The Lord be with you, as it is in the Book of Ruth; and that the People should answer, And with thy Spirit: As all the East receive it by Tradition from the Apostles, and not as the Priscillian Heresy hath changed it. What Change the Priscillianists had made in this matter, is not very clear: Some learned Men are of Opinion [n] that they would allow the Bishops to use no other Form but Pax vobis, and the Presbyters only to say, Dominus vobiscum: Whence they conclude that the Word Oriens, the East, must have crept into the Canon instead of the West, because it is so evident, that all the Eastern Church used the Form, Pax vobis, both in the Salutation of Bishops and Presbyters. But I should rather think the Priscillian Pravity here complained of, was their denying the People the Liberty of making their proper Response, and bearing their part in the Service, by saying, And with thy Spirit, as had been the Custom of all the East from the time of the Apostles. However this be, I cannot forbear to say, it is the very Error and Pravity which the Church of Rome has since run into. For Bona owns himself [o], that though it was customary in the antient Church for all the Congregation, and not only the Clerks, to answer the Priest, by saying, And with thy Spirit: Yet now it is otherwise in the Church of Rome, where the Clerks only make this Response, and the People are wholly excluded from it. For which no other Reason can be assigned, but the Magisterial Authority of that Church, pretending to prescribe what she pleases to the People, with a Non obstante to any Rule or Tradition of the antient Church. St. Chrysostom's Reasoning in behalf of the People's bearing a part in Prayer with the Priest, is of much more weight, and with it I will conclude this Paragraph.

[*] Book XIV. Chap. iv. n. 14. [d] Theod. Ep. 146. p. 1032. τοῦτο ἐν πάσαις ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις τῆς μυστικῆς θείας λειτουργίας προοίμιον. [e] Cyril. lib. 12. in Joan. 20. p. 1093. παρ' αὐτὰς τὰς μυστείας τὰς ἀρχὰς τοῦτο καὶ ἀλλήλοις ἡμεῖς φαμέν. Vid. Iſidor. Peluſ. lib. 1. Ep. 112. [f] Chryſ. Hom. 3. in Coloſ. p. 1338. [g] Chryſ. Hom. 52. in eos qui Paſcha jejunant. t. 5. p. 713. [h] Chryſ. Hom. 36. de Pentecoſt. t. 5. p. 553. [i] Chryſ. Hom. 18. in 2 Cor. p. 873. Hom. 36. in 1 Cor. p. 652. Hom. 33. in Mat. p. 318. [†] Book XIII. Chap. vi. [k] Tertul. de Præſcript. cap. 41. Pacem cum omnibus miſcent. [l] Optat. lib. 3. p. 73. Non potuiſtis prætermittere quod Legitimum eſt. Utique dixiſtis, Pax vobiſcum.—Quid ſalutas, de quo non habes? Quid nominas, quod exterminaſti? Salutas de Pace, qui non amas.

Great is the Power of the Congregation, that is, of the whole Church, says he [p]. It was their Prayer that delivered Peter from his Bonds, and opened the Mouth of Paul. Their Suffrage is a peculiar Ornament to those who are called to the Spiritual Offices of Government. And therefore he who is about to perform the Office of Ordination, at that time requires their Prayers, and they joyn their Suffrage, crying out in those Words, which they that are initiated in the holy Mysteries know: For we may not speak all things openly before the Unbaptized. There are some things wherein there is no Difference between Priest and People, as when they are to partake of the tremendous Mysteries. For we are all alike admitted to them: Not as under the Old Testament, when the Priest eat one thing, and the People another; and it was not lawful for the People to partake of those things which the Priest alone might partake of. It is not so now, but there is one Body, and one Cup proposed in common to all. So also in the Prayers, one may now observe the People to contribute a great deal. For Common-Prayers are made for the Energumens, and for the Penitents, both by the Priests and People. For they all say that one and the same Prayer, the Prayer so full of Mercy. Again, when we exclude those from the Sanctuary, who cannot partake of the Holy Table, we are all obliged to make another Prayer, in which we all fall down alike on the Earth, and all rise up together. Again, when we are to give and receive the Peace, or Kiss of Peace, we all in like manner salute each other. And again in celebrating the Holy Mysteries the Priest prays for the People, and the People for the Priest. For these words, And with thy Spirit, are nothing else but the People's Prayer. In like manner the Prayer of Thanksgiving is a Common-Prayer. For not only the Priest gives Thanks, but all the People also. For when he has first received their Answer, declaring their Consent, that it is meet and right so to do, then he begins the Thanksgiving. And why should you wonder, that the People sometimes speak with the Priest, when they are allowed to send up those holy Hymns in common with the very Cherubims and Cœlestial Powers above? I have spoken all this, adds he, to make every Member of the Church, though he be an Inferior, to become watchful and vigilant; and to teach us, that we are all One Body, and only differ from each other, as Members do from the Members of the same Body; and that we should not cast all upon the Priests, but every one bear his Share in his concern for the whole Church, as one common Body. I will now leave any ingenuous Reader to judge, whose Reasons are strongest and most Rational; those of Chrysostom, who thus pleads the People's Right in bearing a part in the publick Service of God; or theirs, who by an overbearing Authority deny them their just Right; and as they have taken away the Cup, and the Bible, and the Key of Knowledge from them, so have also denied them the Liberty of joining in Common-prayer with the Priest, which was their uncontested Privilege in the antient Church.

SECT. III. Secondly, The Kiss of Peace.

BUT I proceed with the Constitutions. As there immediately after the Priest has given the Salutation of Peace, and the People have returned their Answer, a Deacon goes on to proclaim solemnly, that they should salute one another with an Holy Kiss: And so the Clergy salute the Bishop, and Laymen their Fellow-Laymen, and Women one another: It is in the very same manner represented in other Writers. The Council of Laodicea describing the Order of the an-

[m] Conc. Bracar. 1. can. 21. Placuit ut non aliter Episcopi, & aliter Presbyteri Populum, sed uno modo salutent, dicentes, Dominus sit vobiscum: sicut in Libro Ruth legitur, & ut respondeatur à populo, Et cum Spiritu tuo: Sicut & ab ipsis Apostolis traditum omnis retinet Oriens, & non sicut Priscilliana pravitas immutavit. [n] Garsias Loaisa in Loc. Bona de Reb. Liturg. lib. 2. cap. 5. n. 1. Habertus Archieratic. p. 330. Hamon Lestrange, Alliance of Div. Offic. cap. 3. p. 82. [o] Bona ibid. p. 501. Nunc soli Clerici vel Ministri respondent. [p] Chrys. Hom. 18. in 2 Cor. p. 872.

tient

tient Service, says, after the Prayers [q] of the Faithful, the Peace should be given: And after the Presbyters have given the Peace to the Bishop, and Laymen the Peace to one another, the Holy Oblation should be offered. After the same manner, Cyril of Jerusalem [r] speaks of it as coming before the Sursum Corda, Lift up your Hearts to the Lord. A Deacon cries, Receive one another, salute one another with an Holy Kiss. Which, he says, was a Symbol of Reconciliation, and forgiving all Injuries whatsoever. St. Chrysostom [s] often mentions it among other Arguments to excite Men to Unity and Charity; reminding them of this Symbol of Peace and Reconciliation, and how great a Piece of Pageantry and mere Hypocrisy it was to give this Kiss, as Judas did, without cordial Love, and sincere Affection. Particularly in one Place [†] he notes the Circumstance of Time when this Ceremony was used, that is, before the Oblation, when the Sacrifice was about to be offered: Which agrees exactly with the Time specified in the Constitutions. The same is noted long before by Justin Martyr [t], that it was between the Common-Prayers for the whole State of Christ's Church, and the Prayers of Consecration. For, says he, when Prayers are ended, we salute one another with a Kiss: And after that, Bread and Wine and Water is brought to the President of the Brethren, who receiving them, gives Praise and Glory to the God of all things, in the Name of the Son and the Holy Spirit. In the Latin Church the same Custom was observed, only with this Difference, that it came not before, but after the Consecration-Prayers, and the Lord's Prayer, immediately before the Distribution. For so S. Austin or Cæsarius Arelatensis represents it, in describing the Order of the Service. When the Consecration [u] is ended, we say the Lord's Prayer: and after that, Peace be with you: And then Christians salute one another with an Holy Kiss, which is a sign of Peace, if that be really in their Hearts, which they pretend with their Lips. He mentions the thing in other Places, and seems to intimate, that the Donatists observed the same Ceremony, though they had nothing of the Peace that was intended by it. In his Books against Petilian [x] speaking of one Optatus Gildonianus a Donatist Bishop, who had been a great Oppressor of Widows and Orphans, and infamous for many other barbarous Cruelties, he says, Notwithstanding all this, they gave him the Kiss of Peace, when they received the Sacrament at his Hands. In another place [y] he compares the Donatists to Crows, and the Catholicks to Doves; because they both gave the Kiss of Peace, yet the one tare the Church in pieces, and fed upon its Ruins, but the other were innocent and harmless as Doves; and by those Characters they might be distinguish'd from each other. It appears also from Pope Innocent's Letter [z] to Decentius Bishop of Eugubium, that it was the general Custom of the Italick Churches to give the Kiss of Peace, not before the Consecration, but after: For it blames those that gave it before, and says, it ought to come after, as a Testimony of their Consent to all that was done, and as a Seal of the Consecration-Prayer, to signify that all was ended. Tertullian [a] probably upon this account gave it the Name of Signaculum Orationis, the Seal of their Prayers; as being in his Time used when all the Prayers of Consecration were ended. He seems to intimate also that it was given promiscuously, and without Distinction between Men and [b] Women. For among other Arguments, which he uses why a Christian Woman should not marry an Heathen, this is one, that he would be unwilling to suffer her to go into the Prisons to kiss the Martyrs Chains, or at any other times to give the Kiss of Peace to a Brother. And this is as plainly intimated by the antient Writer of the Passion of Felicitas and Perpetua, about Tertullian's Time, when he says [c] that Felicitas, Perpetua, and Saturus did mutually kiss each other before they suffered, that they might consummate their Martyrdom by the solemn Rite of Peace. Alluding to the usual Custom of giving the Kiss of Peace without Distinction, though it was otherwise observed in the Greek Church. There is one thing more proper to be observed out of Tertullian [d], that some made a Scruple of giving the Kiss of Peace upon a Fast-Day, though it were but a private Fast of their own; whom he reproves, telling them that the [q] Conc. Laodic. 19. εἰ δ' ἔτως τὴν εἰρήνην διδόασι. ἢ μετὰ τὸν προεσβύτερος δοῦναι τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ τὴν εἰρήνην, πότε τὸν λαικὸς τὴν εἰρήνην διδόναι. ἢ ἔτω τὴν ἁγίαν προσφορὰν ἐπιτελεῖται. [r] Cyril. Catech. Myst. 5. n. 2. [s] Chrys. Hom. 20. in Mat. p. 205. Hom. 22. in Rom. p. 251. Hom. 30. in 2 Cor. p. 995. Hom. 14. in Ephes. p. 1128. Hom. 77. in Joan. p. 500. Hom. 30. de Proditore. t. 5. p. 565. Hom. 50. ibid. p. 686. [†] Chrys. de Compunct. Cordis lib. 1. cap. 3. t. 4. p. 118. ἀσπαζόμενοι ἀλλήλους μέλλοντ[ες] τῶ δώρῳ προσφέρεσθαι. &c. [t] Justin. Apol. 2. p. 97. ἀλλήλους φιλήμα[τι] ἀσπαζόμεθα παυσάμενοι τῶν εὐχῶν. ἔπειτα προσφέρεται τῷ προεστῶτι τῶν ἀδελφῶν ἄρτ[ος] καὶ ποτήριον ὕδατ[ος] καὶ κεράματ[ος]. Vid. Clem. Alex. Pædagog. lib. 3. cap. 11. Athenag. Legat. p. 36. Dionys. Eccl. Hierarch. cap. 3. Sect. 8. [u] Aug. Hom. 83. de Diversis. t. 10. p. 556. Ubi peracta est sanctificatio, dicimus Orationem Dominicam. Post ipsam dicitur, Pax vobiscum, & osculantur se Christiani in Osculo sancto, quod est signum Pacis, si quod ostendunt labia, fiat in Conscientia. [x] Aug. cont. Literas Petilian. lib. 2. cap. 23. Cui Pacis Osculum inter sacramenta copulabatis, &c. [y] Id. Tract. 6. in Joan. p. 21. Osculantur Corvi, sed laniant: a laniatu innocens est natura Columbarum. Ubi ergo Laniatus, non est vera in Osculis Pax, &c. [z] Innoc. Ep. 1. ad Decent. cap. 1. Pacem ergo asseris ante confecta Mysteria quosdam populis imperare, vel sibi inter sacerdotes tradere: cum post omnia, quæ aperire non debeo, Pax sit necessario indicenda, per quam constet populum, ad omnia quæ in Mysteriis aguntur, atque in Ecclesia celebrantur, præbuisse consensum, ac finita esse Pacis concludentis signaculo demonstrentur. [a] Tertul. de Orat. cap. 14. [b] Ad Uxor. lib. 2. cap. 4. Quis patietur alicui Fratrum ad Osculum convenire? [c] Passio Perpetuæ ad calcem Lactant. de Mort. Persec. p. 35. Ante jam osculati invicem, ut Martyrium per solennia Pacis consummarent. [d] Tertul. de Orat. cap. 14. Alia jam consuetudo invaluit, jejunantes habita Oratione cum fratribus subtrahunt Osculum Pacis, quod est signaculum Orationis. Quando autem magis conferenda cum fratribus Pax est, nisi cum Oratione commendabilior ascendit? — Quæ Oratio cum divortio sancti Osculi integra? Quem Domino officium facientem impedit Pax? Quale sacrificium est, à quo sine Pace receditur? &c.

Kiss

Kiſs of Peace was the Seal of Prayer; that it was never more proper than when joined with Prayer; that there was no Prayer perfect without Peace; that Peace was no Impediment to a Man in doing his Duty to the Lord; that whatever Reaſon they had for it, their Reaſon was not ſtronger than the Obſervation of the Precept which obliges us to conceal our Faſts. Whereas when we refrain from the Kiſs of Peace, that diſcovers us to be Faſting. We may at home omit this Ceremony of Giving the Peace, becauſe there our Faſts cannot be wholly concealed from the Family: But in other places where you may conceal your Action, you ought to remember the Precept of the Lord; and ſo you may obſerve the Diſcipline of the Church abroad, and your own Cuſtom at home. Tertullian, we ſee, ſpeaks this of private Faſts, which he thinks no reaſon for Men's refuſing the Kiſs of Peace in publick. As to publick Faſts the Caſe was otherwiſe. For by the Laws of the Church, this Ceremony was omitted on ſome more ſolemn Days of Faſting. As upon the Day of our Saviour's Paſſion. For Tertullian adds immediately in the next Words, that on that Day [e], becauſe it was a publick and common Faſt, ordained by the Laws of the Church, they omitted the Kiſs of Peace, and no one then regarded the Omiſſion, becauſe it was done by general Conſent and Agreement. And this ſeems to have been an Exception of Univerſal Extent in the Church: For Procopius notes it in the Life of Juſtinian and Theodora, who began their Reign on this Day, An. 527, that they began it with an ill Omen, on a Day [f] that no one uſed the Kiſs of Peace in the Church. And thus much of this antient Ceremony, ſo often enjoined by the Apoſtle, Rom. xvi. 16. 1 Cor. xvi. 20. 2 Cor. xiii. 12. 1 Theſ. v. 26. 1 Pet. v. 14. Of which ſome have written [†] whole Volumes: But I content myſelf to have ſaid ſo much, as may ſerve to confirm the Obſervation made upon the Author of the Conſtitutions, that this was an antient Rite univerſally obſerved in the Church in one part or other of the Communion Service.

SECT. IV. Thirdly, Waſhing of Hands before Conſecration.

THE next Thing mentioned in the Conſtitutions, is the Ceremony of the Prieſts Waſhing his Hands before Conſecration. This is alſo noted by Cyril of Jeruſalem in his Myſtagogical Explication of the Communion Service, where ſpeaking to the newly Baptized, he ſays, Ye have ſeen the Deacon bring Water to the Biſhop and Presbyters [g] ſtanding about the Altar, to waſh their Hands. Did he give it to waſh the Filth of their Bodies? By no means. For we do not uſe to go into the Church with Bodies defiled: But that Waſhing of Hands is a Symbol, that you ought to be pure from Sin and Trangreſſions of the Law. For the Hands are the Symbol of Action, and Waſhing them denotes the Purity and Cleanneſs of our Actions. Have you not heard holy David explaining this Myſtery, and ſaying, I will waſh my Hands among the Innocent, and ſo will I compaſs thine Altar, O Lord. Therefore Waſhing the Hands, is a Symbol or Indication that we are not obnoxious or liable unto Sin. The Author of the Queſtions upon the Old and New Teſtament under the Name of St. Auſtin [h] takes notice of the ſame Cuſtom as uſed in all Churches, only with this Difference, that whereas in other Churches it was commonly the Office of the Deacons to bring Water to Prieſts, in the Roman Church it was devolved upon the Subdeacons, becauſe there was a Multitude of inferior Clergy in that Church above many others. And in the Author under the Name of Dionyſius the Areopagite, a great deal more may be read to the ſame Purpoſe.

SECT. V. Fourthly, The Deacon's Admonition to all Non-communicants to withdraw; and to all Communicants to come in Charity and Sincerity.

IN the next Place, whereas in the Conſtitutions the Deacon is appointed again to make a ſolemn Proclamation, ordering all Non-communicants, Catechumens, Penitens, and Unbelievers to be excluded; and admoniſhing all Communicants to approach in Charity and Sincerity, not in Enmity with their Brethren, or in Hypocriſy towards God, but in Reverence and Fear: The very ſame is ſuggeſted by Chryſoſtom: Doſt thou not hear the Deacon, the Herald of the Church, ſtanding and crying, All ye that are [i] under Penance, be gone. All they that do not partake of the Communion, are in Penance. If thou art in Penance, thou mayſt not partake. And Severianus Biſhop of Gabala, in one of his Homilies among St. Chryſoſtom's Works [k] ſpeaks of the ſame: Ye have ſeen the Deacons traverſing the Church, and crying, Let no Catechumen be preſent, none of thoſe that may not ſee the heavenly Blood ſhed for the Remiſſion of Sins, &c. Ye remember after this how the Angels from Heaven ſing the Hymns and Praiſes, ſaying, Holy is the Father, Holy is the Son, Holy is the Holy Ghoſt. By which it is plain, theſe Admonitions of the Deacon were here repeated as preparatory to the Oblation.

SECT. VI. Of the ῥιπίδια or Fans to drive away Inſects.

THE Circumſtance of the ῥιπίδια or Fans to drive away the Inſects, is ſo minute, that it is no great Wonder it ſhould be omitted in moſt other Writers beſide the Conſti- tutions,

[e] Ibid. Die Paſchæ, quo communis & quaſi publica Jejunii religio, deponimus Oſculum; nihil curantes de Oſculando, quod cum omnibus faciamus. [f] Procop. Hiſt. Arcana. cap. 9. [†] Mullerus de Oſculo ſancto. Jenæ 1675. 4to. Martin Kempius de Oſculo, &c. Lipſiæ, 1665. [g] Cyril. Catech. Myſt. 5. n. 1. [h] Aug. Quæſt. Vet. & Novi Teſtamenti. Q. 101. Ut autem non omnia miniſteria obſequiorum per ordinem agant, multitudo facit Clericorum. Nam utique & altare portarent & Vaſa ejus, & aquam in manus funderent Sacerdoti, ſicut videmus per omnes Eccleſias, &c. [i] Chryſ. Hom. 3. in Epheſ. p. 1051. [k] Ap. Chryſ. tom. 6. Hom. 37. de Filio Prodigo. p. 375. See before Book XIII. Chap. vi. n 6. Vide Chryſ. Hom. 1, contra Judæos. T. 1. p. 400. ἐπιγινώσκετε ἀλλήλους, &c.

tutions. Bona [l] says, they are mentioned in Jobius [m] and Germanus Theoria, and the Liturgies that go under the Name of St. Chryſoſtom and St. Baſil. Suicerus [n] thinks, that in moſt of thoſe Writings the Word ῥιπίδια ſignifies one of their holy Veſſels, a Basket or the like, in which they were uſed to carry the ſacred Elements to and from the Altar; ſuch as that ſpoken of by St. Jerom, when deſcribing the glorious Poverty of Exuperius Biſhop of Tholouſe, he says [o], he was uſed to carry the Lord's Body in a Basket of Oſiers, and the Blood in a Glaſs Cup. And indeed in Herodotus the Word ῥιπίδιον is by ſome Lexicographers ſaid to ſignify a Basket: But in the Liturgies of St. Chryſoſtom and Baſil, it is taken in the common Senſe of Greek Authors, and as it is uſed in the Conſtitutions, for a Fan to blow with. For in Chryſoſtom's Liturgy the Deacon is to ventilate [p] or blow over the Elements with a Fan; or if there be no Fan, then to do it with the Covering of the Cup. And in St. Baſil's Liturgy there is mention [q] made of the ſame Utenſils, ῥιπίδιον ἢ κάλυμμα, either the Fan or the Covering of the Cup, to be uſed for the ſame Purpoſe. And ſo the Word ῥιπίδιον [r] is taken both by Germanus, and Jobius, and Suidas. So that there was no reaſon for Suicerus to reckon the Author of the Conſtitutions ſo ſingular in this Opinion. But as theſe Authors are not very antient, I have mentioned them rather to explain an hard Word, than eſtabliſh an Eccleſiaſtical Cuſtom. St. Jerom's Authority is produced by Durantus [s], but it is nothing to the Purpoſe: For though he mentions the Uſe of Muſcaria [t], that is, Fans; yet it is plain he ſpeaks of them not as any Eccleſiaſtical Utenſil, but as a Civil Preſent made by Marcella to the Matrons, though he gives a Tropological Turn of Wit, to draw ſomething of a myſtical Meaning out of them. So I let this Matter paſs as a minute Circumſtance in the Conſtitutions, about which it is not worth our while to be farther ſolicitous in our Inquiries, to give collateral Evidence out of the antient Writers.

SECT. VII. Of the Uſe of the Sign of the Croſs at the Lord's Table.

THE next Thing mentioned in the Conſtitutions, is, the Uſe of the Sign of the Croſs, before the Miniſter proceeds to the Conſecration. And of this there is more certain Evidence in the antient Writers. For Chryſoſtom says expreſly [u] that it was not only uſed by Chriſtians every Day, but particularly at the holy Table, and in the Ordinations of Prieſts, and that its Glory ſhined with the Body of Chriſt in the Myſtical Supper. Which implies, that it was uſed more than once in the time of Celebration. St. Auſtin says likewiſe, that it was uſed [x] in all their Offices, in conſecrating the Waters of Baptiſm, in the Unction of Confirmation, and in the Sacrifice of the Euchariſt; without which none of them were ſolemnly performed.

SECT. VIII. Of the uſual Preface, call'd, Surſum Corda, or the Preparation to the great Thankſgiving.

NEXT after this, immediately before the great Thankſgiving in the Conſtitutions, the Prieſt having given the People another Salutation in the Words of St. Paul, The Grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, &c. be with you; and they anſwering again, And with thy Spirit: The Prieſt goes on and ſays, Lift up your Hearts: To which the People anſwer, We lift them up unto the Lord. The Prieſt ſays again, Let us give Thanks to the Lord; and the People anſwer, It is meet and right ſo to do. Now this is mentioned almoſt by all Eccleſiaſtical Writers, that have ſaid any thing of the Euchariſt or Prayer. St. Cyprian [y] calls it the Preface that was premiſed by the Prieſt, to prepare the Brethrens Minds to pray with an heavenly Temper. St. Auſtin mentions it above ten times in his Writings: The Places have been noted above [*] in the general Diſcourſe of Liturgies, and therefore I need not here repeat them. I will only remark, that he ſays, It was the Cuſtom of the whole Church throughout the World [z] to ſay daily almoſt with one Voice, We lift up our Hearts unto the Lord. And that therefore the Hearts [a] of Chriſtian People were a ſort of Heaven, becauſe they are daily lift up to Heaven, whilſt the Prieſt ſays, Lift up your Hearts; and they anſwer, We lift them up unto the Lord. St. Chryſoſtom alſo [b] frequently mentions the Uſe of this Preface in his Homilies, which becauſe I have related at length in a former Book [†], I forbear to repeat them again in this Place. The Reader that is curious, may find the ſame Forms related in Cyril's Myſtical Catechiſms [c], and Anaſtaſius Sinaita [d], and Cæſarius Arelatenſis [e], and Eligius Noviomenſis [f], not to mention the [l] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 1. cap. 25. n. 6. [m] Jobius ap. Photium. Cod. 222. [n] Suicer. Theſaur. Eccleſ. voce ῥιπίδιον. Tom. 2. [o] Hieron. Ep. 5. ad Ruſticum. Nihil illo ditius, qui Corpus Domini caniſtro vimineo, ſanguinem portat in vitro. [p] Chryſ. Liturg. Bibl. Patr. Gr. Lat. T. 2. p. 78. ῥιπίζει ἐπάνω τῶν ἁγίων μετὰ ῥιπιδίου ξυλαβῶς. εἰ δὲ μὴ ἔχει ῥιπίδιον, ποιεῖ τοῦτο μετὰ καλύμματος. [q] Baſil. Liturg. ibid. p. 51. [r] German. Contemplatio Rer. Eccleſ. ibid. p. 157. Jobius ubi ſupra. Suidæ Lexicon. T. 2. p. 686. [s] Durant. de Ritib. lib. 1. cap. 10. n. 2. [t] Hieron. Ep. 30. ad Marcellam. Quod autem & Matronis offertis Muſcaria parva, parvis animalibus eventilandis, elegans ſignificatio eſt, debere luxuriam cito reſtinguere, quia Muſcæ morituræ oleum ſuaviratis exterminant. [u] Chryſ. Demonſtrat. Quod Chriſtus ſit Deus. cap. 9. T. 5. p. 840. ἕστος ἐν τῇ ἱερᾷ τραπέζῃ, ἕστος ἐν ταῖς τῶν ἱερέων χειροτονίαις, ἕστος πάλιν μετὰ τῶν σωμάτων τῷ χειρὶ ἐπὶ τὸ μυστικὸν δεῖπνον διαλάμπει. [x] Aug. Hom. 118. in Joan. p. 225. Quid eſt ſignum Chriſti niſi Crux Chriſti? Quod ſignum niſi adhibeatur ſive Frontibus credentium, ſive ipſi aquæ ex qua regenerantur, ſive Oleo quo Chriſmate unguntur, ſive Sacrificio quo aluntur; nihil horum rite perficitur. [y] Cypr. de Orat. p. 152. [*] See Book XIII. Chap. v. n. 7. [z] Aug. de vera Relig. cap. 3. tom. 1. p. 302. Quotidie per univerſum orbem humanum genus una pene voce reſpondet, ſurſum corda ſe habere ad Dominum. [a] Serm. 44. de Tempore. Corda Fidelium cœlum ſunt, quia in cœlos quotidie eriguntur, dicente Sacerdote, Surſum Corda; ſecuti reſpondent, Habemus ad Dominum. [b] Chryſ. Hom. 18. in 2 Cor. p. 873. Hom. 22. in Heb. p. 1898. Hom. 5. de Pœnitent. T. 6. Edit. Savil. Hom. 24. in 1 Cor. p. 536. Hom. 38. de Euchar. T. 5. p. 569. [†] See Book XIII. Chap. vi. [c] Cyril. Catech. Myſt. 5. n. 3. [d] Anaſtaſ. Serm. de Synaxi. ap. Albertin. de Euchariſtia. p. 529. [e] Cæſar. Hom. 12. [f] Eligius. Hom. 11. de Cœna Domini. Ex verbis Cypriani.

Greek Liturgies or any later Writers. I only obſerve farther out of the Council of Milevis [g], where there is mention made of Prefaces among other Prayers, it is commonly ſuppoſed by Learned Men, that theſe Forms are meant, Lift up your Hearts: We lift them up unto the Lord. Let us give Thanks unto the Lord: It is meet and right ſo to do. Which, as Mabillon [h] obſerves, in the old Gallican Liturgy is called Conteſtatio, becauſe by theſe Anſwers the People gave in their Atteſtation or Teſtimony of their Compliance with the Prieſt's Exhortation; declaring that their Hearts were now in Heaven, and that it was meet and right to praiſe the Lord.

SECT. IX. Of the εὐχαριστία or great Thankſgiving properly ſo called.

AFTER this the Prieſt went on with the εὐχαριστία, properly ſo called, that is, the great Thankſgiving to God for all his Mercies both of Creation, Providence, and Redemption; where a Commemoration was made of all that God had done for Man from the Foundation of the World, and more particularly in the great Myſtery of Redemption: Upon which a ſolemn and magnificent Glorification of God was framed, always including the Triſagion, or Seraphical Hymn, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord of Hoſts, &c. which was ſung by the Miniſter and People jointly; and then the Miniſter went on alone to finiſh the ſolemn Thankſgiving. We have no where elſe indeed ſo long a Thankſgiving as is that in the Conſtitutions: But the Subſtance of it is not only in the Liturgies that go under the Names of St. James, Chryſoſtom and Baſil, but may be diſcovered in more Authentick Writings. For Juſtin Martyr deſcribing the Chriſtian Rites and Myſteries, ſays, as ſoon as the Common-Prayers were ended, and they had ſaluted one another with a Kiſs, Bread and Wine and Water was brought to the Preſident; who receiving them [i], gave Praiſe and Glory to the Father of all Things by the Son and Holy Spirit, and made εὐχαριστίαν ἐπὶ τὸ πολύ, a long Thankſgiving for the Bleſſings which he vouchſafed to beſtow upon them. And when he had ended the Prayers and Thankſgiving, all the People that were preſent, anſwered with Acclamation, Amen. After the ſame manner Irenæus [k], We offer unto him his own Gifts, thereby declaring the Communication and Truth both of Fleſh and Spirit. For as the Bread, which is of the Earth, after the Invocation of God upon it, is no longer common Bread, but the Euchariſt, conſiſting of two parts, the one earthly, the other heavenly: So all our Bodies, receiving the Euchariſt, are no longer corruptible, whilſt they live in hopes of a Reſurrection. But we offer theſe Things to him, not as if he ſtood in need of them, but as giving him Thanks for his Gifts, and ſanctifying the Creature. So Origen [l] ſays, They eat the Bread that was offered to the Creator with Prayer and Thankſgiving for the Gifts that he had beſtowed on them, which Bread was made an Holy Body by Prayer, ſanctifying thoſe that uſed it with a pious Mind. Cyril of Jeruſalem more particularly ſpecifies the Subſtance of this Thankſgiving in his myſtical Catechiſms, ſaying [m], After this, (that is, after we have ſaid, Let us give Thanks to the Lord, and it is meet and right ſo to do,) we make mention of the Heaven and Earth and Sea, and the Sun, Moon and Stars, and all the Creatures, Rational and Irrational, Viſible and Inviſible, Angels, Archangels, Hoſts and Dominions, Principalities and Powers, Thrones and Cherubims covering their Faces, ſaying with David, Magnifie the Lord with me. We alſo make mention of the Cherubims, which Eſaias ſaw in the Spirit, ſtanding about the Throne of God, and with two Wings covering their Faces, and with two their Feet, and flying with two, and ſaying, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Hoſts. This is much the ſame with the Thankſgiving in St. James's Liturgy, which was uſed in the Church of Jeruſalem, in this Form: It is very meet and right, becoming us and our Duty [n], that we ſhould praiſe thee, and celebrate thee with Hymns, and give Thanks unto thee, the Maker of all Creatures, viſible and inviſible, the Treaſure of all Good, the Fountain of Life and Immortality, the God and Lord of all Things, whom the Heavens, and the Heavens of Heavens praiſe, and all the Hoſt of them; the Sun and Moon and the whole Company of Stars; the Earth and Sea and all that are in them; the Celeſtial Congregation of Jeruſalem; the Church of the Firſtborn, who are written in Heaven; the Spirits of juſt Men and Prophets, the Souls of Martyrs and Apoſtles; Angels and Archangels, Thrones and Dominions, Principalities and Powers, the tremendous Hoſts and Cherubims with many Eyes, and Seraphims with ſix Wings, with two whereof they cover their Faces, and with two their Feet, and with two they fly, crying out inceſſantly one to another, and ſinging with loud Voices the triumphal Song of the Magnificence of thy Glory, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord of Hoſts, Heaven and Earth are full of thy Glory. Hoſanna in the Higheſt. Bleſſed be he that cometh in the Name of the Lord. Hoſanna in the Higheſt.

St. Chryſoſtom [o] alſo ſpeaks of this Thankſgiving, though he does not give us the whole Form of it, but only the Introduction, ſaying, The Prayer of Thankſgiving is common both to Prieſt and People. For not only the Prieſt gives Thanks, but all the People. For firſt he receives

[g] Conc. Milevit. can. 12. Placuit, ut Preces vel Orationes vel Miſſæ ſive Præfationes, quæ probatæ fuerint in Concilio, ab omnibus celebrentur. [h] Mabillon. de Liturg. Gall. lib. 1. cap. 3. n. 17. [i] Juſtin. Apol. 2. p. 97. [k] Iren. lib. 4. cap. 34. Offerimus ei quæ ſunt ejus, congruenter Communicationem & Veritatem prædicantes carnis & Spiritus. Quemadmodum enim qui eſt à terra Panis, percipiens Invocationem Dei, jam non communis Panis eſt, ſed Euchariſtia, ex duabus rebus conſtans, terrena & cœleſti: Sic & corpora noſtra, percipientia Euchariſtiam, jam non ſunt corruptibilia, ſpem reſurrectionis habentia. Offerimus autem ei, non quaſi indigenti, ſed gratias agentes Donationi ejus, & ſanctificantes Creaturam. [l] Orig. cont. Celſ. lib. 8. p. 399. [m] Cyril. Catech. Myſt. 5. n. 5. [n] Liturg. Jacobi Bibl. Patr. Gr. Lat. Tom. 2. p. 12. [o] Chryſ. Hom. 18. in 2 Cor. p. 873. It. Hom. 2. in 2 Cor. p. 739. Καὶ τῆς οἰκουμένης καὶ τῶν κοινῶν εὐχαριστήριον ἀγαθῶν.

receives their Anſwer and Atteſtation, That it is meet and right to praiſe the Lord, and then he begins the Thankſgiving. And why ſhould you wonder, that the People ſhould ſometimes ſpeak with the Prieſt, when they do even with the Cherubims and Celeſtial Powers ſend up thoſe ſacred Hymns to Heaven above? He means thoſe Hymns, Holy, Holy, Holy, &c. And Glory be to God on high: Which, as we ſhall preſently ſee, were one part of this great Thankſgiving.

Among the Latin Writers this previous giving of Thanks is mentioned by Fulgentius alſo [p], who ſays, in the Chriſtian Sacrifice there was both a Thankſgiving and a Commemoration made of the Fleſh of Chriſt, and of his Blood which he ſhed for our ſakes. And ſo St. Ambroſe, or whoever was the Author of the Books de Sacramentis among his Works: Diſtinguiſhing between the Thankſgiving and the Conſecration, he asks [q], With what Words, and with whoſe Words is the Conſecration made? And anſwers, With the Words of the Lord Jeſus. For all that goes before, is either the Glorification and Praiſe of God, or Prayer for the People, for Kings, and the reſt of Mankind. But when the Prieſt comes to the Conſecration of the Holy Sacrament, then he uſes not his own Words, but the Words of Chriſt. By all which it is indiſputably evident, that the Conſecration of the Sacrament was uſhered in with a ſolemn Thankſgiving or Glorification of God for all his Gifts and Benefits, whence the whole Action had the Name of εὐχαριστία, the Euchariſt or Thankſgiving, becauſe this was always premiſed as a neceſſary part of the ſacred Myſtery; and the whole Action and Ceremony was concluded with another Thankſgiving after communicating, as we ſhall ſee hereafter.

SECT. X.

Of the Uſe of the Triſagion, or Seraphical Hymn, Holy, Holy, Holy, in this Thankſgiving.

AT preſent we are to obſerve that one Part of this Glorification or Thankſgiving was the Hymn, call'd the Triſagion, and Epinicion, the Seraphical and Triumphal Hymn, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Hoſts, Heaven and Earth are full of thy Glory. This is evident from the laſt mentioned Paſſages of St. Cyril [r] and St. Chryſoſtom [s], who in other places gives a more particular Account of the Uſe of it at the Lord's Table. Heretofore, ſays he, this Hymn was only ſung in Heaven [t]; but after that the Lord vouchſafed to come down upon Earth, he brought this Melody to us alſo. Therefore the Biſhop, when he ſtands at this Holy Table, to preſent our rational Service, and offer the Unbloody Sacrifice, does not ſimply call upon us to joyn in this Glorification, but firſt naming the Cherubims, and making mention of the Seraphims, he then exhorts us all to ſend up theſe tremendous Words, and withdrawing our Minds from the Earth by intimating with what Company we make a Quire, he cries out to every Man, and ſays, as it were in theſe Words, "Thou ſingeſt "with the Seraphims, ſtand together with the Se- "raphims, ſtretch forth thy Wings with them, "with them fly round the Royal Throne." In another place [u] ſhewing the Obligation which the Euchariſt lays upon Men to keep every Member of the Body pure from Sin, the Hands and Mouth that receive it, the Eyes that view it, the Tongue that miniſters in thoſe Myſteries and is dy'd in Blood, he argues thus particularly with reſpect to the Ears: How abſurd is it after that myſtical Hymn, which was brought by the Cherubims from Heaven, to pollute your Ears with Songs of Harlots, and the effeminate Melodies of the Theater? Which plainly implies, that this Seraphical Hymn was one part of this great Thankſgiving. He ſays the ſame in his firſt Homily upon Iſaiah [x]: The Seraphims above ſing the holy Triſagion-Hymn: The holy Congregation of Men on Earth ſend up the ſame: The general Aſſembly of Celeſtial and Earthly Creatures joyn together: There is one Thankſgiving, μία εὐχαριστία, one Exultation, one Quire of Men and Angels in one Station rejoycing together. In another place reproving thoſe who ſtayed at the Communion-Service, when they would not communicate, he tells them [y] It was better that they ſhould be abſent, for they did but affront him that invited them, whilſt they ſtayed to ſing the Hymn, profeſſing themſelves to be of the Number of the Worthy, whilſt they did not recede with the Unworthy. How could you ſtay, and not partake of the Table? I am unworthy, ſay you. If ſo, you are unworthy to communicate in Prayers alſo. For it is not only the bare Elements, but thoſe Hymns that cauſe the Spirit to deſcend upon them. Though he does not here name the Hymns, he plainly intimates however that they were commonly uſed in this part of the Euchariſtical Service. And elſewhere [z] he ſpeaks more plainly: The Faithful, ſays he, know what are the Hymns of the Powers above; what the Cherubims ſing in Heaven; what the Angels ſung, Glory be to God in the higheſt. Therefore Hymns come after the Pſalmody, as a Thing of greater Perfection. He means, that Pſalmody was only a Part of the Service of the Catechumens; but theſe Hymns were uſed by the τέλειοι, the Communicants, in the Service of the Altar. He mentions the ſame in many other places [†], which the Reader may find above [*] in the Collection of the antient Liturgy out of St. Chryſoſtom's Works: I will only repeat one Paſſage more out of his Homily upon the Martyrs. The Martyrs, ſays he [a], are now joyning in Conſort, and partaking in the myſtical Songs of the Heavenly Quire. For if whilſt they were in the Body, whenever they communicated in the ſacred Myſteries, they made part of the Quire, ſinging with the Cherubims the Triſagion-Hymn, Holy, Holy, Holy; as all ye that are initiated in the holy Myſteries, very well know; much more now, being joyn'd with them whoſe Partners they were in the earthly Quire, they do with greater Freedom partake in thoſe ſolemn Bleſſings and Glorifications of God in Heaven above. There needs no Recourſe now after this to be had to the Liturgy of St. Chryſoſtom, to prove that this divine Hymn was always a Part of the ſolemn Thankſgiving, ſince it is more ſolidly proved out of his genuine Writings. To which we may add Severianus of Gabala [b] for the Greek Church, and the Council of Vaiſon [c] for the Latin, which ſays, that in all Communion-Services, whether they were Morning-Services, or Quadrageſimal, or Commemorations for the Dead, the Hymn, Holy, Holy, Holy, ſhould be uſed in the ſame Order, as in the publick Service.

[p] Fulgent. de Fide ad Petrum. cap. 19. In iſto autem Sacrificio Gratiarum Actio, atque Commemoratio eſt carnis Chriſti, quam pro nobis obtulit, ſanguinis quem pro nobis idem Deus effudit.
[q] Ambroſ. de Sacrament. lib. 4. cap. 4. Conſecratio igitur quibus verbis eſt, & cujus ſermonibus? Domini Jeſu. Nam reliqua omnia quæ dicuntur, Laus Deo defertur, Oratione petitur pro Populo, pro Regibus, pro cæteris. Ubi venitur ut conficiatur venerabile Sacramentum, jam non ſuis ſermonibus ſacerdos, ſed utitur ſermonibus Chriſti. [r] Cyril. Catech. Myſt. 5. n. 5. [s] Chryſ. Hom. 18. in 2 Cor. p. 873. [t] Chryſ. Hom. in Seraphim. t. 3. p. 890. [u] Chryſ. Hom. 21. ad Pop. Antioch. t. 1. p. 266. [x] Hom. 1. in Eſai. t. 3. p. 834. [y] Chryſ. Hom. 3. in Epheſ. p. 1052. [z] Hom. 24. de Baptiſmo Chriſti. t. 1. p. 317. [†] Hom. 4. de Incomprehenſibili. t. 1. p. 274. Hom 16. Si furierit Inimicus. t. 5. p. 229. Hom. 3. de Pœnitent. t. 4. p. 562. Epiſt. 2. ad Olympiad. t. 4. p. 715. Hom. 14 in Epheſ. p. 1127.

SECT. X.

A particular Thankſgiving for the Mercies of God in the Redemption of Mankind by Chriſt.

NEXT after this, there follows in the Conſtitutions a particular Enumeration of the Mercies of God vouchſafed to Mankind in the Redemption of the World by the Death of Chriſt, and a more ſpecial Thankſgiving with reſpect to them; wherein alſo is contained a ſort of Creed, or Summary of the chief Articles of the Chriſtian Faith. Which was all the Creed that the Church in that Age made uſe of in that Service. For as yet the formal Repetition of the Baptiſmal Creed was no part of the Communion-Service, as it was in After-ages, but only ſuch Doctrines were related as were the Subject of a particular Thankſgiving for the great Myſteries of the Incarnation and Redemption. Thus it is repreſented in the Conſtitutions, with which St. Chryſoſtom exactly correſponds. For commenting on thoſe Words of the Apoſtle, The Cup of Bleſſing which we bleſs, is it not the Communion of the Blood of Chriſt? he brings in the Apoſtle thus explaining himſelf: When I ſpeak of a Bleſſing, I unfold all the Treaſure of God's Beneficence, and commemorate all his great and glorious Gifts. And he adds, We alſo in offering the Cup recite the ineffable Mercies and Kindneſs of God, and all the good Things we enjoy: And ſo we offer it, and communicate; giving him Thanks for that he hath delivered Mankind from Error; that He hath [d] made us near who were afar off; that when we were without Hope, and without God in the World, He hath made us the Brethren of Chriſt, and Fellow-Heirs with him. For theſe and all the like Bleſſings we give him Thanks, and ſo come to his holy Table. We cannot have a plainer Proof of a particular Thankſgiving than this is, and therefore I ſhall ſeek for no farther Evidence in the Caſe; but proceed to the immediate Form of Conſecration.

SECT. XI.

The Form of Conſecration always compoſed of a Repetition of the Words of Inſtitution, and Prayer to God to ſanctify the Gifts by his Holy Spirit.

NOW this anciently was not a bare Repetition of thoſe Words, Hoc eſt Corpus meum, This is my Body, which for many Ages has been the current Doctrine of the Romiſh Schools; but a Repetition of the Hiſtory of the Inſtitution, together with Prayers to God, That he would ſend his Holy Spirit upon the Gifts, and make them become the Body and Blood of Chriſt; not by altering their Nature and Subſtance, but their Qualities and Powers, and exalting them from ſimple Elements of Bread and Wine to become Types and Symbols of Chriſt's Fleſh and Blood, and efficacious Inſtruments of conveying to worthy Receivers all the Benefits of his Death and Paſſion. Thus it is evidently ſet forth in the Conſtitutions, which, for the Reader's Eaſe, I will here again repeat: We therefore in Commemoration of theſe things [e] which Chriſt ſuffered for us, give Thanks to Thee, Almighty God, not as Thou deſerveſt, and as we ought, but as we are able, ſo fulfilling his Command. For he, in the ſame Night that he was betrayed, took Bread in his holy and immaculate Hands, and looking up to Thee his God and Father, he brake it, and gave it to his Diſciples, ſaying, This is the Myſtery of the New Teſtament; take of it, and eat it; This is my Body, which is broken for many for the Remiſſion of Sins. This do in Remembrance of me. For as oft as ye eat this Bread, and drink this Cup, ye do ſhew forth my Death till I come. We therefore being mindful of his Paſſion, and Death, and Reſurrection from the Dead, and his Return into Heaven; and alſo of his ſecond Coming, when he ſhall return with Glory and Power to judge the Quick and Dead, and render to every Man according to his Works; do offer unto Thee, our King and God, this Bread and this Cup, according to his Appointment; giving Thanks to Thee by Him, for that Thou doſt vouchſafe to let us ſtand before Thee, and miniſter unto Thee: and we beſeech Thee to look propitiouſly upon theſe Gifts here ſet before Thee, and to accept them favourably to the Honour of Thy Chriſt, and to ſend thy Holy Spirit upon this Sacrifice, the Spirit that is Witneſs of the Suffering of the Lord Jeſus, that it may make this Bread become the Body of Thy Chriſt; that [*] Book XIII. chap. vi. [a] Hom. 74. de Martyr. t. 1. p. 900. [b] Hom. 37. de Filio Prodigo. inter Opera Chryſoſt. t. 6. p. 375. [c] Conc. Vaſens. 2. can. 3. Ut in omnibus Miſſis, ſeu in Matutinis, ſeu in Quadrageſimalibus, ſeu in illis quæ pro Defunctorum Commemeratione fiunt, ſemper Sanctus, Sanctus, Sanctus, eo ordine quo ad Miſſas publicas dicitur, dici debeat. [d] Chryſ. Hom. 24. in 1 Cor. p. 532. So Cyprian. Ep. 63. p. 156. Paſſionis ejus mentionem in omnibus Sacrificiis facimus. [e] Conſtit. lib. 8. cap. 12. p. 402.

they

they who partake of it, may be confirmed in Godlineſs, and obtain Remiſſion of Sins; may be delivered from the Devil and his Impoſtures; may be filled with the Holy Ghoſt, and be made worthy of Chriſt, and obtain eternal Life, Thou being reconciled to them, O Lord Almighty.

Who ſees not, that the Conſecration in this Form is made by a Repetition of the Hiſtory of the Inſtitution, and Prayer for the coming of the Holy Ghoſt on the Elements to ſanctify them? And for this there is the concurrent Teſtimony of all Antiquity. Juſtin Martyr [f] makes the Conſecration to conſiſt in Thankſgiving and Prayers, which being ended, all the People anſwer, Amen. Irenæus ſays more expreſsly [g] that it is done by Invocation of God: For the Bread, which is taken from the Earth, has the Invocation of God upon it, and then it is no longer common Bread, but the Euchariſt. Origen [h] ſays, It is ſanctified by the Word of God and Prayer. Cyril of Jeruſalem tells his Catechumens, That before the Invocation of the Holy Trinity [i] the Bread and Wine of the Euchariſt is common Bread and Wine; but after the Invocation it is no longer bare Bread, but the Body of Chriſt: As the holy Oil is not bare Oil after the Invocation, but the Gift of Chriſt. So again [k], After we have ſanctified our ſelves by thoſe Spiritual Hymns, we then pray the merciful God, that he would ſend forth his Holy Spirit upon the Elements lying upon the Altar, that he may make the Bread the Body of Chriſt, and the Wine the Blood of Chriſt. Which manifeſtly declares that the Conſecration was made by Prayer and Invocation. And the ſame is imply'd by St. Baſil [l], when he asks, which of the Saints hath left us in Writing the words of the Invocation, by which the Bread of the Euchariſt and the Cup of Bleſſing is conſecrated? Gregory Nyſſen [m], St. Baſil's Brother, ſays, the Bread is ſanctified by the Word of God and Prayer. Theophilus of Alexandria, that the Bread and Wine, which repreſent the Lord's Body and Blood upon the Table, are conſecrated by Invocation and coming of the Holy Ghoſt [n] upon them. And Theodoret moſt plainly in one of his Dialogues [o], What do you call the Gift that is offered, before the Prieſt has made the Invocation over it? Bread made of ſuch Seeds. What do you call it after Sanctification? The Body of Chriſt. The Latin Fathers are as plain in their Verdict. St. Ambroſe [p] ſays, the Sacraments which we take, are transformed into Fleſh and Blood by the Myſtery of Holy Prayer. And Optatus [q] deſcribing the Fury of the Donatiſts, aſſerts the ſame, when he asks them, what greater Sacrilege they could be guilty of, than to pull down the Altars of God, where God Almighty was invocated, and the Holy Spirit came down at the Supplication of the Prieſt? St. Jerom [r] ſays, it was the peculiar Office of the Presbyters to conſecrate the Body and Blood of Chriſt by Prayer. And again, that Prayer was neceſſary for this Purpoſe [s]. The Author of the Books de Sacramentis, under the Name of St. Ambroſe, [t] gives us the very Form of Words uſed in this Prayer: Make this our Oblation a choſen, rational, acceptable Oblation, which is the Figure of the Body and Blood of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Juvencus [u] ſays, Chriſt himſelf conſecrated it by Prayer. And Gregory the Great [x] was of Opinion, that the Apoſtles uſed only the Lord's Prayer as the Form of their Conſecration. And Cyprian probably was of the ſame Opinion. For he thinks, that Petition in the Lord's Prayer, Give us this Day our daily Bread, may be underſtood both in a ſpiritual [y] and common Senſe, to denote the Body of Chriſt, which is our Bread, that we pray may be given us every Day. A great many other Fathers ſpeak of the [z] Benediction or Thankſgiving as that which conſecrates the Euchariſt. Which is not much different from this; for the Thankſgiving was always a part of the Euchariſtical Prayers. And therefore ſome join them both together, as Juſtin Martyr and Irenæus, in the Places now mentioned. And ſo Origen [a] tells Celſus, that by Thankſgiving and Prayer they made Bread an Holy Body, ſanctifying ſuch as received and eat it with a pure Mind. And St. Auſtin, who in ſome places calls it barely the Benediction [b] or Thankſgiving, in other places ſays more expreſly that the Euchariſt was conſecrated by Prayer. We call that the Body of Chriſt, which is taken from the Fruits of the [f] Juſtin. Apol. 2. p. 97. [g] Iren. lib. 4. cap. 34. Qui eſt a terra panis, percipiens Invocationem Dei, jam non communis panis eſt, ſed Euchariſtia. [h] Orig. in Mat. 15. t. 2. p. 27. Sanctificatur per Verbum Dei, perque Obſecrationem. [i] Cyril. Catech. Myſt. 3. n. 3. μετὰ τὴν ἐπίκλησιν τοῦ ἁγίου πνεύματος, οὐκ ἔτι ἀπλοῦν λιτὸς, ἀλλὰ σῶμα Χριστοῦ. &c. [k] Id. Catech. Myſt. 5. n. 5. [l] Baſil. de Spir. ſancto. cap. 27. [m] Nyſſen. Orat. Catechetic. cap. 37. [n] Theoph. Ep. Paſchal. 1. Panem Dominicum, quo Salvatoris corpus oſtenditur, &c. per Invocationem & adventum Sancti Spiritus conſecrari. [o] Theodor. Dial. 2. t. 4. p. 85. [p] Ambroſ. de Fide lib. 4. cap. 5. Quotieſcunque ſacramenta ſumimus, quæ per ſacræ Orationis myſterium in carnem transfigurantur & ſanguinem, mortem Domini annunciamus. [q] Optat. lib. 6. p. 93. Quid tam ſacrilegum, quam altaria Dei frangere —— quo Deus omnipotens invocatus ſit, & poſtulatus deſcendit Spiritus Sanctus? [r] Hieron. Ep. 85. ad Evagrium. Ad quorum Preces Chriſti Corpus ſanguiſque conficitur. [s] Id. Com. in Zephan. cap. 3. p. 98. ἐυχαριστίας imprecantis facere verba, &c. [t] Ambroſ. de ſacram. lib. 4. cap. 5. Vis ſcire, quia verbis Cœleſtibus conſecratur? Accipe quæ ſunt verba. Dicit ſacerdos: Fac nobis, inquit, hanc Oblationem aſcriptam, rationalem, acceptabilem, quod eſt Figura corporis & ſanguinis Domini noſtri Jeſu Chriſti. [u] Juvencus Hiſt. Evangel. lib. 4 Bibl. Patr. t. 8. p. 654. Sancteque precatus, Diſcipulos docuit proprium ſe tradere corpus. [x] Greg. lib. 7. Ep. 63. Orationem Dominicam idcirco mox poſt Precem dicimus, quia mos Apoſtolorum fuit, ut ad ipſam ſolummodo Orationem oblationis hoſtiam conſecrarent. [y] Cypr. de Orat. p. 146. Quod poteſt & ſpiritaliter & ſimpliciter intelligi —— quia Chriſtus noſter panis eſt. Hunc autem panem dari nobis quotidie poſtulamus. [z] Tertul. cont. Marcion. lib. 1. cap. 23. Clem. Alex. Pædagog. lib. 2. cap. 2. Chryſ. Hom. 82. in Mat. Victor. Antioch. in Marc. 14. Facundus Hermianenſis Defenſ. Trium Capitulor. lib. 9. Cyril. Alexandrin. Com. in Eſa. 25. item paſſim in Glaphyris ſuper Geneſ. Exod. Levit. Stiles it Eulogia, which is the ſame as Euchariſt or Benediction. Vid. Albertin. de Euchariſt. lib. 1. cap. 6. p. 21. [a] Orig. cont. Celſ. lib. 8. p. 390. μετὰ ἐυχαριστίας καὶ ἐυχῆς. &c. [b] Aug. Ep. 59. ad Paulin.

Earth,

Earth, and consecrated [c] by mystical Prayer in a solemn manner, and so received by us unto Salvation in Memory of our Lord's Suffering for us. And writing against the Donatists, [d] who deny'd the Validity of the Sacraments when they were consecrated and administred by Sinners, he asks them, How then does God hear a Murderer, when he prays either over the Water of Baptism, or the Oil for Unction, or over the Eucharist, or over the Heads of those that receive Imposition of Hands? Implying, that the Consecration of the Eucharist, as well as the rest of the Things mentioned, was performed by Prayer.

To this mighty Cloud of Witnesses, the Romanists have nothing material to oppose, but a few mistaken Passages of the Ancients, which the Reader may find related with proper Answers in that excellent Book of Mr. Aubertine upon the Eucharist [e]. I shall only take notice of one, which carries the fairest Pretence, out of Chrysostom, who in one of his Homilies [f] speaks of the Consecration after this manner: It is not Man that makes the Elements become the Body and Blood of Christ, but Christ himself that was crucified for us. The Priest stands fulfilling his Office, and speaking those Words; but the Power and Grace is of God. Christ said, This is my Body: This Word consecrates the Elements. And as that Word, which said, Increase, and multiply, and replenish the Earth, was spoken but once, yet at all Times is effectual in Deed to strengthen our Nature to beget Children: So this Word once spoken, from that Time to this Day, and until his coming again, perfects and consummates the Sacrifice on every Table throughout the Churches. The Meaning of which is not, as the Romanists mistake, that the pronouncing of these Words by the Priest, is the Thing that makes the Sacrifice; but that Christ, by first speaking those Words, gave Power unto Men to make his symbolical Body; as by once speaking those Words, Increase and multiply, he gave them Power to procreate Children. Christ's Words are the original Cause of the Consecration; but still Prayer, and not the bare Repetition of his Words, is the instrumental Cause and Means of the Sanctification. As Chrysostom himself says plainly in another place [g], where he attributes the Consecration of the Elements to the Invocation of the Spirit, and the Spirit's Descent pursuant to such Invocation. What meanest thou, O Man, says he? When the Priest stands by the holy Table, lifting up his Hands to Heaven, and invocating the Holy Spirit to come down and touch the Elements, there should then be great Tranquillity and Silence. When the Spirit grants his Grace, when he comes down, when he touches the Elements, when thou seest the Lamb slain and offered, dost thou then raise a Tumult and Commotion, and give way to Strife and Railing? In which Words, it is plain, Chrysostom attributes the Consecration to the Power of Christ and the Holy Spirit, as the principal and efficient Cause; to Prayer and Supplication, as the instrumental Cause, operating by way of Condition and Means, to sanctify the Elements according to Christ's Command, by a solemn Benediction, and to the Words, This is my Body, and This is my Blood, as spoken by Christ in the first Institution, implying a Declaration of what was then done, and what should be done by his Power and Concurrence to the End of the World. So that in all Things relating to the Consecration, we find the Practice of the Ancients exactly corresponding and agreeing to the Order prescribed in the Constitutions. And whereas the Author of the Constitutions makes it a very great part of the Consecration-Prayer, that they who partake of the Eucharist may be confirmed in Godliness, and obtain Remission of Sins, may be delivered from the Devil and his Impostures, may be filled with the Holy Ghost, and be made worthy of Christ, and obtain eternal Life: St. Chrysostom [h] evidently refers to such a Prayer, when he says, In the Oblation we offer up our Sins, and say, Pardon us whatever Sins we have committed either willingly or unwillingly. We first make mention of them, and then ask Pardon for them. And so it is in the Liturgy which goes under St. Chrysostom's Name: We offer unto Thee this Rational and Unbloody Service, beseeching Thee to send Thy Holy Spirit [i] upon us and these Gifts; Make the Bread the precious Body of Thy Christ; and that which is in the Cup, the precious Blood of Thy Christ; transmuting them by Thy Holy Spirit, that they may be to the Receivers for the Washing of their Souls, for Pardon of Sins, for Participation of the Holy Ghost, for obtaining the Kingdom of Heaven, for Boldness towards Thee, and not for Judgment and Condemnation.

SECT. XII.

After this followed Prayer for the whole Catholick Church.

IMMEDIATELY after the Consecration, followed Prayer for the whole Catholick Church, as redeemed by the precious Blood, of Christ, which was then commemorated in the Oblation and Sacrifice of the Altar. Thus it is represented in the Constitutions, and thus also in St. Chrysostom [k], who speaking of Eustathius, Bishop of Antioch, says, he had the Care of the whole Church upon him; which he learned to be his Duty from the Prayers of the Church. For if Prayers ought to be made for the Catholick Church from one End of the Earth

[c] Aug. de Trinitate. lib. 3. cap. 4. Corpus Christi dicimus illud, quod ex frugibus terræ acceptum, & Mystica Prece consecratum rite, sumimus ad Spiritalem Salutem, in memoriam Dominicæ pro nobis Passionis. [d] De Baptismo. lib. 5. cap. 20. Quomodo ergo exaudit homicidam deprecantem, vel super aquam Baptismi, vel super Oleum, vel super Eucharistiam, vel super capita eorum quibus manus imponitur? [e] Albertin. de Eucharistia. lib. 1. cap. 7. [f] Chrys. Hom. 20. de Proditione Judæ. t. 5. p. 463. [g] Chrys. Hom. 32. in Cœmeterii Appellationem. t. 5. p. 487. It. de Sacerdot. lib. 6. cap. 4. p. 93. t. 4. Et de Sacerdot. lib. 3. cap. 4. [h] Chrys. Hom. 17. in Hebr. p. 1870. [i] Chrys. Liturg. t. 4. p. 614. It. p. 619. Συγχώρησόν μοι τῷ ἁμαρτωλῷ τὰ ἁμαρτήματά μου τὰ ἑκούσιά τε καὶ ἀκούσια, &c. [k] Chrys. Hom. 52. in Eustath. t. 1. p. 649.

to

to the other, much more did he think it his Duty to ſhew his Concern for the whole Church, and watch for their Preſervation. In another place [l] he ſays, the Prieſt, when the Sacrifice was offered, bid the People to pray, or give Thanks rather, for the whole World, for thoſe that were abſent, and thoſe that were preſent; for thoſe that were before them, and for thoſe that were then living, and for thoſe that ſhould be after them. And again [m], he ſpeaks of Prayer for the World, the Church, and the common Peace and Tranquillity of Mankind. He ſays [n], the Prieſt prayed at the Altar in the time of Oblation for the whole City, and not for the whole City only, but for the whole World. So Cyril of Jeruſalem [o] ſays, As ſoon as the ſpiritual Sacrifice was offered, they beſought God for the common Peace of the Church, and the Tranquillity of the World, &c. And Vigilius in a Letter to Juſtinian [p] reminds him, how it was cuſtomary, from antient Tradition, for all Biſhops in offering the Sacrifice, to beſeech God to unite all Men in the Catholick Faith, and to protect and keep it throughout the World. Nay, Optatus ſays [q], the Donatiſts continued to uſe this Prayer in the Celebration of the Sacramental Myſteries, though their Doctrine and Practice were the abſolute Reverſe of it. They ſaid, they offered for the Church, which was one, diffuſed over all the World: But their Practice gave their Prayers the Lye: For they divided it into two, and confined the true Church to a Corner of Africk, and the Party of Donatus. However this ſhews, it was the Practice both of Donatiſts and Catholicks to pray for the Univerſal Church.

SECT. XIII. More particularly for the Biſhops and Clergy.

MORE particularly they now repeated their Prayers again for the Biſhops and Clergy of the whole Catholick Church, and that Church eſpecially whereof they were Members. Which is not only noted in the Conſtitutions, but by Epiphanius [r] in his Letter to John Biſhop of Jeruſalem, where he wipes off a ſlander, which ſome had falſely ſuggeſted to the Biſhop of Jeruſalem, as if he had prayed publickly, that God would grant him an Orthodox Faith, implying that he was in Error: Which he denies, telling them, that however he might pray for him after that manner privately in his Heart, yet he never did ſo in the Oblation of the Sacrifice; for in offering thoſe Prayers, according to the Order of the holy Myſteries, they were uſed to ſay both for him and all other Biſhops: Keep him, O Lord, that preacheth the Truth: Or elſe after this manner: Preſerve him, O Lord, and grant that he may preach the Truth; according as the Occaſion and Order of Prayer required. St. Chryſoſtom alſo takes notice of this ſolemn praying for Biſhops and the Clergy, and among many other Particulars, when the Oblation was offered. Some, ſays he [s], are ſo inconſiderate, diſſolute and vain, as to ſtand and talk, not only in the time of the Catechumens, (that is, when Prayers were made for them in the firſt Service) but alſo at the time of the Faithful (or when their Prayers were offered at the Altar.) And this, ſays he, is the Subverſion and Ruin of all Religion, that at that time when Men ought chiefly to render God propitious to them, they go away provoking his Wrath againſt them. For in the Prayers of the Faithful, we are commanded to ſupplicate the Merciful God for Biſhops, for Presbyters, for Kings, for all that are in Authority; for the Earth and Sea, for the Temperature of the Air or good Weather, and for the whole World. When therefore we, who ought to have ſo much Boldneſs and Freedom as to pray for others, are not vigilant enough to pray for our ſelves with an attentive Mind; what Excuſe can we make? What Pardon can we expect? We cannot deſire a plainer Evidence than this of Chryſoſtom, that all theſe Things were the ſubject Matter of their Petitions, when the Oblation was made upon the Altar.

SECT. XIV. For Kings and Magiſtrates.

AND therefore hence it appears, that as they prayed for the Biſhops and the Clergy, ſo they repeated their Supplication for Kings and Magiſtrates in this Prayer alſo. I have noted before [*] the ſeveral Authors that take Notice of their praying for Kings in the Prayers before the Oblation, and here I will ſubjoin ſuch as mention it in the Oblation-prayer. Euſebius deſcribing the Dedication of the Church which Conſtantine built at Jeruſalem, ſays, ſome of the Biſhops then preſent made Panegyrical Orations upon Conſtantine's great Reſpect for the common Saviour, and the Magnificence of his Temple; others preached upon Points of Divinity proper to the Occaſion; others explained the myſtical Senſe of Scripture; and others, who could not attain to this, celebrated the myſtical Service and offered the Unbloody Sacrifice to God, making Prayers for the common Peace [t] of the World, for the Church of God, for the Emperor himſelf the Founder of the Church, and for his pious Children. In like manner Cyril of Jeruſalem deſcribing the Order of the Communion Service, [l] Chryſ. Hom. 26. in Mat. p. 259. [m] Hom. 37. in Act. p. 329. [n] Chryſ. de Sacerdot. lib. 6. cap. 4. t. 3. p. 93. [o] Cyril. Catech. Myſt. 5. n. 6. [p] Vigil. Ep. 4. ad Juſtinian. Imperator. Conc. tom. 5. p. 315. Omnes Pontifices, antiqua in offerendo Sacrificia traditione, depoſcimus, ut Catholicam Fidem adunare, regere Dominum, & cuſtodire toto orbe dignetur.

[q] Optat. lib. 2. p. 53. Vos illud Legitimum in Sacramentorum Myſterio præterire non poſſe. Offerre vos dicitis pro Eccleſia, quæ Una eſt. Hoc ipſum mendacii pars eſt, unam vocare, de qua feceris duas. Et offerre vos dicitis pro una Eccleſia, quæ ſit in toto terrarum orbe diffuſa, &c. [r] Epiphan. Ep. ad Joan. Hieroſol. p. 313. Dixerunt quod in Oratione, quando offerimus ſacrificia Deo, ſoleamus pro te dicere: Domine præſta Joanni, ut recte credat. Noli nos in tantum putare ruſticos, &c. Quando autem complemus Orationem ſecundum Ritum Myſteriorum, & pro omnibus & pro te quoque dicimus: Cuſtodi illum qui prædicat veritatem. Vel certe ita: Tu præſta Domine, & cuſtodi, ut ille verbum prædicet veritatis, ſicut Occaſio Sermonis ſe tulerit, & habuerit Oratio Conſequentiam. [s] Chryſ. Hom. 2. in 2 Cor. p. 745. [*] Book XIII. Chap. x. n. 5. It. Book XV. Chap. i. n. 3. [t] Euſeb. Vit. Conſtant. lib. 4. cap. 45.

ſays, After the ſpiritual Sacrifice, and the Unbloody Service of the propitiatory Oblation is compleated, we beſeech God for the common Peace of the Churches, for the Tranquillity of the World, for Kings, for their Armies, for their Allies, for thoſe that are ſick and afflicted, and in ſhort for all that ſtand in need of Help and Aſſiſtance. St. Chryſoſtom elſewhere mentions both private and publick Prayers [u] for Kings, the latter of which may be underſtood of theſe Prayers after the Oblation, as well as any others. Arnobius ſays expreſly [x] they prayed at once for the Magiſtrates, for their Armies, for Kings, for their Friends, and for their Enemies, for the Living, and for the Dead. Where his mentioning the Dead plainly ſhews, that he ſpeaks of thoſe Prayers which were made after the Euchariſt was conſecrated, in which, as we ſhall ſee by and by, a particular Commemoration was made of all thoſe that were departed in the Faith.

SECT. XV. For the Dead in general.

NEXT after Prayer for Kings followed Prayer for the Dead, that is, for all that were departed in the true Faith in Chriſt. For ſo it is in the Conſtitutions. We offer unto Thee for all thy Saints that have lived well-pleaſing in Thy Sight from the Foundation of the World, for Patriarchs, Prophets, Holy Men, Apoſtles, Martyrs, Confeſſors, Biſhops, Presbyters, Deacons, Subdeacons, Readers, Singers, Virgins, Widows, Laymen, and all whoſe Names thou knoweſt. And that this was the general Practice of the Church, to pray for all without Exception, appears from the concurrent Teſtimony of all the Writers of the Church. We have heard Arnobius ſay already [y] that they prayed for the Living and the Dead in general. And long before him Tertullian [z] ſpeaks of Oblations for the Dead, for their Birth-days, that is, the Day of their Death, or a new Birth unto Happineſs, in their annual Commemorations. He ſays every Woman [a] prayed for the Soul of her deceaſed Husband, deſiring that he might find Reſt and Refreſhment at preſent, and a part in the firſt Reſurrection, and offering an annual Oblation for him on the Day of his Death. In like manner [b] he ſays the Husband prayed for the Soul of his Wife, and offered annual Oblations for her. St. Cyprian often mentions the ſame Practice, both when he ſpeaks of Martyrs and others. For the Martyrs they offered the Oblation of Prayer, and of Praiſe and Thankſgiving; for others, Prayers chiefly. Thoſe for the Martyrs he calls [c] Oblations and Sacrifices of Commemoration, which they offered eſpecially on the Anniverſary-days of their Martyrdom [d], giving God Thanks for their Victory and Coronation. But for others they made ſolemn Supplications and Prayers, as appears from what he ſays of one Geminius Victor [e], that becauſe he had appointed a Presbyter to be his Executor, contrary to Law, no Oblation ſhould be made for his Reſt or Sleep, nor any Deprecation be uſed in his Name according to Cuſtom in the Church. The Author under the Name of Origen upon Job [f] ſays, they made devout mention of the Saints, and their Parents and Friends, that were dead in the Faith; as well to rejoice in their Refreſhment, as to deſire for themſelves a pious Conſummation in the Faith. And Origen [g] himſelf ſays, they thought it convenient to make mention of the Saints in their Prayers, and to excite themſelves by the Remembrance of them. Cyril of Jeruſalem, in deſcribing the Prayer after Conſecration, ſays, We offer this Sacrifice in Memory of all thoſe that are faln aſleep [h] before us, firſt Patriarchs, Prophets, Apoſtles, and Martyrs, that God by their Prayers and Interceſſions may receive our Supplications; and then we pray for our holy Fathers and Biſhops, and all that are faln aſleep before us; believing it to be a conſiderable Advantage to their Souls to be prayed for, whilſt the holy and tremendous Sacrifice lies upon the Altar. Epiphanius diſputes at large againſt the Aerians, who ridiculed all Prayers for the Dead. For they ſaid, if the Prayers of the Living will advantage the Dead, then it was no Matter for being pious or virtuous; a Man only needed to get his Friends to pray for him after Death, and he would be liable to no Puniſhment, no would his moſt enormous Crimes be required of him. To whom Epiphanius replies, that they had many good Reaſons for mentioning the Names of the Dead; becauſe it was an Argument that they were ſtill in Being, and living with the Lord; becauſe it was ſome Advantage to Sinners, though it did not wholly cancel their Crimes; becauſe it put a Diſtinction between the Perfection of Chriſt, and the Imperfection of all other Men: Therefore they prayed for righteous Men, Fathers, Patriarchs [i], Prophets, Apoſtles, Evangeliſts, Martyrs, Confeſſors, Biſhops, Hermits, and all Orders of Men. And it appears from all the antient Liturgies under the Names of St. Baſil, Chryſoſtom, Gregory Nazianzen and Cyril [k], that they prayed for all Saints, the Virgin Mary herſelf not excepted. And it is remarkable, that [u] Chryſ. Hom. 20 ad Pop. Antioch. t. 1. p. 258.

[x] Arnob. lib. 4. p. 181. Cur immaniter Conventicula noſtra dirui meruerint? In quibus ſummus oratur Deus, Pax cunctis & venia poſtulatur Magiſtratibus Exercitibus, Regibus, Familiaribus, Inimicis, adhuc vitam degentibus, & reſolutis corporum vinctione.

[y] Arnob. lib. 4. p. 181. cited in the laſt Section.

[z] Tertul. de Coron. Militis, cap. 3. Oblationes pro Defunctis, pro Natalitiis, annua die facimus

[a] De Monogamia. cap. 10. Pro anima ejus orat, & Refrigerium interim adpoſtulat ei, & in prima Reſurrectione conſortium, & offert annuis diebus dormitionis ejus.

[b] Exhortat. ad Caſtitat. cap. 11. Jam repete apud Deum pro cujus Spiritu poſtules, pro qua Oblationes annuas reddas.

[c] Cypr. Ep. 37. al. 22. ad Clerum. p. 28. Celebrentur hic à nobis Oblationes & Sacrificia ob Commemorationes eorum.

[d] Ep. 34. al. 39. p. 77. Sacrificia pro eis ſemper, ut meminiſtis, offerimus, quoties Martyrum Paſſiones & Dies Anniverſaria commemoratione celebramus.

[e] Ep. 66. al. 1. p. 3. Non eſt quod pro Dormitione ejus apud vos fiat Oblatio, aut Deprecatio aliqua nomine ejus in Eccleſia frequentetur.

[f] Orig. in Job. lib. 3. t. 1. p. 437.

[g] Orig. lib. 9. in Rom. 12. t. 2. p. 607. Meminiſſe Sanctorum ſive in Collectis ſolennibus, ſive pro eo ut ex Recordatione eorum proficiamus, aptum & conveniens videtur.

[h] Cyril. Catech. Myſt. 5. n. 6.

[i] Epiphan. Hær. 75. Aerian. n. 7.

[k] See theſe quoted by Biſhop Uſher's Anſwer to the Challenge, p. 136. Et Dallæus de Pœnis & Satisfaction. lib. 5. cap. 8.

in

in the old Roman Miſſal they were uſed to pray for the Soul of St. Leo, as Hincmar [l], a Writer of the ninth Age, informs us, who ſays the Prayer ran in this Form, Grant, O Lord, that this Oblation may be of Advantage to the Soul of thy Servant Leo, which thou haſt appointed to be for the Relaxation of the Sins of the whole World. But this was thought ſo incongruous in the following Ages, that in the later Sacramentaries or Miſſals, it was changed into this Form: Grant O Lord, we beſeech Thee, that this Oblation may be of Advantage to us by the Interceſſion of St. Leo, as Pope Innocent the Third [m] aſſures us it was in his Time. And ſuch another Alteration was made in Pope Gregory's Sacramentarium. For in the old Greek and Latin Edition [n] there is this Prayer: Remember, O Lord, all thy Servants, Men and Women, who have gone before us in the Seal of the Faith, and ſleep in the Sleep of Peace: We beſeech Thee, O Lord, to grant them, and all that reſt in Chriſt, a Place of Refreſhment, Light and Peace, through the ſame Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. But in the new reformed Miſſals [o] it is altered thus, Remember, Lord, Thy Servants and Handmaids N. and N. that have gone before us, &c. that they might not ſeem to pray for Saints as well as others that were in Purgatory. Which makes it very probable, that St. Cyril's Catechiſm has alſo been tampered with, and a Clauſe put in, which ſpeaks of their Praying to God by the Interceſſion of Patriarchs, Prophets, Apoſtles and Martyrs: Since the antient Liturgies prayed for them as well as for all others. St. Chryſoſtom ſays expreſly [p] they offered for the Martyrs. And ſo it is in his Greek Liturgy [q], We offer unto Thee this reaſonable Service for the Faithful deceaſed, our Fore-fathers, Fathers, Patriarchs, Prophets and Apoſtles, Evangeliſts, Martyrs, Confeſſors, Religious Perſons, and every Spirit perfected in the Faith; but eſpecially for our moſt Holy, Immaculate, moſt bleſſed Lady, the Mother of God, and ever Virgin Mary. Though, as Bp. Uſher [r] has obſerved, ſome of the Latin Tranſlators have alſo given a perverſe Turn to theſe Words, rendring them thus, We offer unto thee this reaſonable Service for the faithful Deceaſed, our Fore-fathers and Fathers, by the Interceſſion of the Patriarchs, Prophets, Apoſtles, Martyrs, and all the Saints. For it ſounded ill to the Latin Ears to hear St. Chryſoſtom ſay, the antient Church prayed for Saints and Martyrs. And yet he ſays it, not only in the fore-mentioned Places, but over and over again in others. In his forty firſt Homily upon the firſt of Corinthians [s], ſpeaking againſt immoderate Sorrow for the Death of Sinners, he ſays, they are not ſo much to be lamented, as ſuccoured with Prayers and Supplications and Alms and Oblations. For theſe Things were not deſigned in vain, neither is it without Reaſon that we make mention of thoſe that are deceaſed, in the Holy Myſteries, interceding for them to the Lamb that is ſlain to take away the Sins of the World; but that ſome Conſolation may hence ariſe to them. Neither is it in vain, that he who ſtands at the Altar when the tremendous Myſteries are celebrated, cries, We offer unto Thee for all thoſe that are aſleep in Chriſt, and all that make Commemorations for them. For if there were no Commemorations made for them, theſe Things would not be ſaid.—Let us not therefore grow weary in giving them our Aſſiſtance, and offering Prayers for them. For the common Propitiation of the whole World is now before us. Therefore we now pray for the whole World, and name them with Martyrs, with Confeſſors, with Prieſts, for we are all one Body, though one Member be more excellent than another; and we may obtain a general Pardon for them by our Prayers, by our Alms, by the Help of thoſe that are named together with them. He ſuppoſes here that the Saints prayed for Sinners, though at the ſame time the Church prayed both for the Saints and Martyrs and Sinners together. In another Place [t] he ſays, Prayers were made in general for all thoſe that were deceaſed in the Faith, and none but Catechumens dying in a voluntary Neglect of Baptiſm, were excluded from the Benefit of them. At that Time, ſays he, when all the People ſtand with their Hands lift up to Heaven, and all the Company of Prieſts with them, and the tremendous Sacrifice lies upon the Altar, how ſhall we not move God to Mercy, when we call upon him for thoſe that are deceaſed in the Faith? I ſpeak of them only: For the Catechumens are not allowed this Conſolation, but are depriv'd of all Aſſiſtance, except only giving Alms for them. This then was a Puniſhment inflicted upon the Catechumens, of which Chryſoſtom ſpeaks in other Places [u]; and it appears to have been a ſettled Rule by ſome antient Canons [x] of the Church, of which I have had Occaſion to ſpeak in a former Book [*], to deny Catechumens the Benefit of the Church's Prayers after Death. Chryſoſtom ſays again [y] that a Biſhop is to be Interceſſor for all the World, and to pray to God to be merciful to the Sins of all Men, not only the Living, but the Dead alſo. Caſſian ſays alſo, the Biothanati, as they called them, that is, Men that laid violent Hands upon themſelves, were excluded from the Benefit of the Church's Prayers. And therefore when one Hero an old Hermit had by the Deluſions of Satan caſt himſelf into a deep Well, Paphnutius the Abbot could hardly be prevailed upon to let him be reckoned any other [l] Hincmar. de Prædeſtin. lib. 1. cap. 34. Annue nobis, Domine, ut animæ famuli tui Leonis hæc proſit Oblatio, quam immolando totius mundi tribuiſti relaxari delicta. tom. 1. p. 297.

[m] Innoc. Epiſt. in Decretal. Gregor. lib. 3. tit. 41. cap. 6. p. 1372. Annue nobis, quæſumus Domine, ut Interceſſione Beati Leonis, hæc nobis proſit Oblatio. Miſſal. Feſt. Leonis. Jun. 28.
[n] Bibl. Patr. Gr. Lat. t. 2. p. 129. [o] Miſſal. Roman. in Canone Miſſæ. p. 301. [p] Chryſ. Hom. 21. in Act. t. 4. Edit. Savil. p. 736. [q] Chryſ. Liturg. t. 4. p. 614. [r] Uſher's Anſwer to the Challenge. p. 136.
[s] Chryſ. Hom. 41. in 1 Cor. p. 701. [t] Chryſ. Hom. 3. in Philip. p. 1225. [u] Chryſ. Hom. 24. in Joan. p. 159. Hom. 1. in Act. p. 14. [x] Conc. Bracar. 1. can. 35. [*] Book X. Chap. ii. n. 18. [y] Chryſ. de Sacerdot. lib. 6. cap. 4. Vid. Hom. 32. in Mat. p. 307.

than a Self-murderer, and unworthy [z] of the Memorial and Oblation that was made for all thoſe that were at Reſt in Peace. Which is alſo noted in the Council of Braga [a], where Catechumens and Self-murderers are put in the ſame Claſs together, as Perſons that deſerved neither the Solemnities of Chriſtian Burial, nor the uſual Prayers and Commemoration that was made for the Reſt of Chriſtians at the Altar.

St. Auſtin indeed had a ſingular Opinion in this Matter about Prayer for the Dead. For he thought the Martyrs were not properly to be prayed for as other Men, becauſe they were admitted to the immediate Fruition of Heaven. There goes a common Saying under his Name (which Pope Innocent the Third quotes [b] as holy Scripture) That he who prays for a Martyr, does Injury to the Martyr, becauſe they attained to Perfection in this Life, and have no need of the Prayers of the [c] Church, as all others have. Therefore he ſays [d], when they were named at the Altar, and their Memorials celebrated, they did not commemorate them as Perſons for whom they prayed, as they did all others that reſted in Peace, but rather as Men that prayed for the Church on Earth, that we might follow their Steps, who had attained to the Perfection of Charity in laying down their Lives for Chriſt, according to that Aphoriſm of Chriſt himſelf, Greater Love than this hath no Man, that he lay down his Life for his Friend. Upon this Account St. Auſtin thought the Oblations and Alms, that were uſually offered in the Church for all the Dead that had received Baptiſm, were only Thankſgivings for ſuch as were very good [e]; and Propitiations for thoſe that were not very bad; and for ſuch as were very Evil, though they were no Helps to them when they were Dead, yet they were ſome Conſolation to the Living. But as Biſhop Uſher [f] rightly obſerves, this was but a harſh Interpretation of the Prayers of the Church, to imagine that one and the ſame Act of Praying ſhould be a Petition for ſome, and for others a Thankſgiving only: And therefore it is more reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that the Church deſigned to pray for all; eſpecially ſince St. Auſtin [g] himſelf owns that the Church made Supplications for all that died in the Society of the Chriſtian and Catholick Faith, as all the ancient Forms of Prayer do manifeſtly evince beyond all Poſſibility of Exception.

SECT. XVI. Upon what Grounds the Antient Church prayed for the Dead, Saints, Martyrs, Confeſſors, as well as all others.

SUPPOSING then, that the Antient Church made Prayers for Saints and Martyrs, as well as all others, it remains to be enquired Upon what Grounds and Reaſons ſhe obſerved this Cuſtom: whether upon the modern Suppoſition of a Purgatory-Fire, or upon Reaſons more agreeable to ſuch a general Practice? That ſhe did not do it upon the Suppoſition of Purgatory, appears evidently from what has been already obſerved out of the publick Offices of the Church, that ſhe prayed for all the Saints, Martyrs, Confeſſors, Patriarchs, Prophets, Apoſtles, and even the Virgin Mary herſelf, and all other holy Men and Women from the Foundation of the World, who were ſuppoſed to be in a Place of Reſt and Happineſs, and not in any Place of Purgation or Torment. And this appears farther from the private Prayers made by St. Ambroſe [h] for the Emperors Theodoſius and Valentinian, and Gratian, and his own Brother Saturus, and the Directions he gives to Fauſtinus [i] not to weep for his Siſter, but to make Prayers and Oblations for her. For all theſe were Perſons, of whom he had not the leaſt Doubt, but that their Souls were in Reſt and Happineſs. As all the Funeral Service of the Ancients ſuppoſes, where they uſually ſung thoſe Verſes of the Pſalms, Return again unto thy Reſt, O my Soul, for the Lord hath rewarded thee: And again, I will fear no Evil, becauſe Thou art with me: And again, Thou art my Refuge from the Affliction that compaſſeth me about. Which St. Chryſoſtom [k] often bids his Hearers remember, that whilſt they prayed for the deceaſed Party, they ſhould not weep and lament immoderately, as the Heathen did, but give God Thanks for taking him to a Place of Reſt and Security. Which is utterly inconſiſtent with their going into the dreadful Pains of Purgatory. St. Auſtin both prayed in private for his Mother Monicha [l], and alſo ſpeaks of the Church's Prayers for her at her Funeral, and afterward at the Altar; and yet he made no queſtion of her going hence from a State of Piety here to a State of Joy and Felicity hereafter. And after the ſame manner Gregory Nazianzen [m] prays God to receive the Soul of his Brother Cæſarius, who was lately regenerated by the Spirit in Baptiſm. It is certain theſe Prayers were not founded on a Belief of a Purgatory-Fire after Death, but upon a Suppoſition that they were going to a Place of Reſt and Happineſs; which was their firſt Reaſon for praying for them, That God would receive them to himſelf, and deliver them from Condemnation. 2. Upon the ſame Preſumption ſome of their Prayers for the Dead were always Euchariſtical, or Thankſgivings for their Deliverance out of the Troubles of this ſinful World. As appears not only from the forementioned Teſtimonies of Chryſoſtom, but from the Author under the Name of Dionyſius [n], who in deſcribing their Funeral-Service, ſpeaks of the εὐχὴ εὐχαριστήριος, the Euchariſtical Prayers, whereby they gave God Thanks not only for Martyrs, but all Chriſtians that died in the true Faith and Fear of God. A third Reaſon of praying for them, was, becauſe they juſtly conceived all Men to die with ſome Remainders of Frailty and Corruption, and therefore deſired that God would deal with them according to his Mercy, and not in ſtrict Juſtice according to their Merits. For no one then was thought to have any real Merit or Title to eternal Happineſs, but only upon God's Promiſes and Mercy. St. Auſtin diſcourſes excellently upon this Point in the Caſe of his Mother Monicha, after this manner: I now pour out unto Thee, my God, another ſort of Tears for Thy Handmaid, flowing from a trembling Spirit; in Conſideration of the Danger that every Soul is in that dies in Adam. For although ſhe was made alive in Chriſt, and lived ſo in the Days of her Fleſh, as to bring Glory to thy Name by her Faith and Practice: Yet I dare not ſay, that from the Time ſhe was regenerated by Baptiſm, no Word came out of her Mouth againſt Thy Command. And Thou haſt told us by him who is Truth it ſelf, That whoſoever ſhall ſay to his Brother, Thou Fool, ſhall be in danger of Hell-fire. And wo to the moſt laudable Life of Man, if Thou ſhouldſt ſift and examine it without Mercy. But becauſe Thou art not extream to mark what is done amiſs, we have Hope and Confidence to find ſome [o] place and room for Indulgence with Thee. But whoever reckons up his true Merits before Thee, what does he more than recount thy own Gifts? O that all Men would know themſelves, and they that glory, glory in the Lord! I therefore, O my Praiſe, and my Life, the God of my Heart, ſetting aſide a little her good Actions, for which I joyfully give Thee Thanks, now make Interceſſion for the Sins of my Mother. Hear me through the Medicine of his Wounds, who hanged upon the Tree, and now ſitteth at thy Right Hand to make Interceſſion for us. He adds, a little after, that he believed God had granted what he asked: Yet he prays, That the Lion and the Dragon might not interpoſe himſelf, either by his open Violence or Subtilty. For ſhe would not anſwer That ſhe was no Debtor, leſt the crafty Adverſary ſhould convict her and lay hold of her; but ſhe would anſwer, That her Sins were forgiven her by Him, to whom no Man can return what he gave to us without any Obligation. Let her therefore reſt in Peace with her Husband; and do Thou, my Lord God, inſpire all thoſe Thy Servants that read this, to remember thy Handmaid Monicha at thy Altar with Patricius her Conſort. This was not a Prayer for Perſons in the Pains of Purgatory; but for ſuch as reſted in Peace, only without Dependance upon their own Merits, and with an humble Reliance upon God's Mercy, that he would not ſuffer them to be devoured by the roaring Lion, nor deal extreamly with them for the Sins of human Frailty. 4. Another like Reaſon for theſe Prayers, is that which we have heard before out of Epiphanius [p], that it was to put a Diſtinction between the Perfection of Chriſt, and the Imperfection of all other Men, Saints, Martyrs, Apoſtles, Prophets, Confeſſors, &c. He being the only Perſon, for whom Prayer was not then made in the Church. 5. They prayed for all Chriſtians, as a Teſtimony both of their Reſpect and Love to the Dead, and of their own Belief of the Soul's Immortality; to ſhew, as Epiphanius words it in the ſame Place, that they believed, that they who were deceas'd were yet alive, and not extinguiſhed, but ſtill in Being, and living with the Lord. 6. Whereas the Soul is but in an imperfect State of Happineſs till the Reſurrection, when the whole Man ſhall obtain a compleat Victory over Death, and by the laſt Judgment be eſtabliſhed in an endleſs State of conſummate Happineſs and Glory; the Church had a particular Reſpect to this in her Prayers for the Righteous, that both the Living and the Dead might finally attain this bleſſed Eſtate of a glorious Reſurrection. It is obſerved by ſome [q], that there are ſome Prayers yet extant in the Roman Maſs, which are conformable to this Opinion, as that which prays, that God would abſolve the Souls of his Servants from every Bond of Sin, and bring them to the Glory of the Reſurrection, &c.

[z] Caſſian. Collat. 2. cap. 5. Vix a Presbytero Abbate Paphnutio potuit obtineri, ut non inter Biothanatos reputatus, etiam Memoria & Oblatione pauſantium judicaretur indignus. [a] Conc. Bracar. 1. can. 35. [b] Innoc. in Decretal. Gregorii. lib. 3. tit. 41. cap. 5. Sacræ Scripturæ dicit auctoritas, quod injuriam facit Martyri, qui orat pro Martyre. [c] Aug. Ser. 17. de Verbis Apoſtoli. t. 10. p. 132. Perfectio in hac vita nonnulla eſt, ad quam Sancti Martyres pervenerunt. Ideoque habet Eccleſiaſtica Diſciplina, quod Fideles noverunt, cum Martyres eo loco recitantur ad altare Dei, ubi non pro ipſis oretur, pro cæteris autem commemoratis defunctis oratur. Injuria eſt enim pro Martyre orare, cujus nos debemus Orationibus commendari. [d] Aug. Tract. 84. in Joan. t. 9. p. 185. Ad ipſam menſam non ſic eos commemoramus, quemadmodum alios qui in Pace requieſcunt, ſed magis ut (orent) ipſi pro nobis, ut eorum veſtigiis adhæreamus, quia impleverunt ipſi Charitatem, &c. [e] Aug. Enchirid. ad Laurent. cap. 110. Cum ergo ſacrificia ſive Altaris ſive quarumcumque Eleemoſynarum pro baptizatis defunctis omnibus offeruntur, pro valde bonis Gratiarum actiones ſunt: pro non valde malis Propitiationes ſunt: pro valde malis etſi nulla ſunt adjumenta mortuorum, qualeſcunque vivorum Conſolationes ſunt. Quibus autem proſunt, aut ad hoc proſunt, ut ſit plena Remiſſio, aut certe tolerabilior fiat ipſa Damnatio. [f] Uſher's Anſwer to the Challenge. p. 142. [g] Aug. de Cura pro Mortuis. cap. 4. Non ſunt prætermittendæ ſupplicationes pro Spiritibus mortuorum: quas faciendas pro omnibus in Chriſtiana & Catholica ſocietate defunctis, etiam tacitis nominibus quorumque, ſub generali Commemoratione ſuſcepit Eccleſia. [h] Ambroſ. de Obitu Theodoſii De obitu Valentin. De Obitu Fratris. [i] Ep. 8. ad Fauſtin. [k] Chryſ. Hom. 4. in Hebr. p. 1785. Hom. 29. de Dormientibus. t. 5. p. 423. Vid. Caſſian. Collat. 2. cap. 5. [l] Aug. Confeſs. lib. 9. cap. 12. & 13. [m] Naz. Orat. 10. p. 176.

All theſe were general Reaſons of Praying for the Dead, without the leaſt Intimation of their being tormented in the temporary Pains of a Purgatory-Fire. Beſides which, they had ſome particular Opinions, which tended to promote this Practice. For firſt, a great many of the Ancients believed, that the Souls of all the Righteous, except Martyrs, were ſequeſtred out of Heaven in ſome Place inviſible to mortal Eye, which they called Hades, or Paradiſe, or Abraham's Boſom, a Place of Refreſhment and Joy, where they expected a compleater Happineſs at the End of all Things. This is the known Opinion of Hermes Paſtor, Juſtin Martyr, Pope Pius, Irenæus, Tertullian, Origen, Caius Romanus, Victorinus Martyr, Novatian, Lactantius, Hilary, Ambroſe, [n] Dionyſ. Eccleſ. Hierarch. cap. 7. p. 408. [o] Aug. Confeſs. lib. 9 cap. 13. Væ etiam laudabili vitæ hominum, ſi remota miſericordia diſcutias eam. Quia vero non exquiris delicta vehementer, fiducialiter ſperamus aliquem apud te locum invenire Indulgentiæ. Quiſquis autem tibi enumerat vera Merita ſua, quid tibi enumerat niſi munera tua? &c. Ego itaque, Laus mea & Vita mea, Deus cordis mei, ſepoſitis pauliſper bonis ejus actibus, pro quibus tibi gaudens gratias ago, nunc pro peccatis matris meæ deprecor te, &c. Et credo jam feceris quod te rogo, &c.

[p] Epiphan. Hær. 75. Aerian. n. 7. [q] Vid. du Moulin. Novelty of Popery. lib. 7. chap. i. p. 459.

Gregory Nyſſen, Prudentius, Auſtin and Chryſoſtom. Therefore in praying for the Dead, they may be ſuppoſed to have ſome Reference to this, and to deſire that the Souls of the Righteous, thus ſequeſtred for a Time, might at laſt be brought to the perfect Fruition of Happineſs in Heaven. 2. Many of the Ancients held the Opinion of the Millenium, or the Reign of Chriſt a thouſand Years upon Earth, before the final Day of Judgment: And they ſuppoſed likewiſe, that Men ſhould riſe, ſome ſooner, ſome later, to this happy State, according to their Merits and Preparations for it. And therefore ſome of them prayed for the Deceaſed on this Suppoſition, that they might obtain a Part in this Reſurrection, and a ſpeedier Admittance into this Kingdom: It being reckoned a ſort of Puniſhment, not to be admitted with the firſt that ſhould riſe to this State of Glory. Tertullian plainly refers [r] to this, when he ſays, Every little Offence is to be puniſhed by delaying Men's Reſurrection. And therefore he ſays [s], they were wont to pray for the Souls of the Deceaſed, that they might not only reſt in Peace for the preſent, but alſo obtain Part in the firſt Reſurrection. And for this Reaſon St. Ambroſe [t] prayed for Gratian and Valentinian, that God would raiſe them with the firſt, and recompenſe their untimely Death with a timely Reſurrection. And he ſays elſewhere [u], that they that come not to the firſt Reſurrection, but are reſerved unto the ſecond, ſhall be burned until they fulfill the Time between the firſt and ſecond Reſurrection; or if they have not fulfilled that, they ſhall remain longer in Puniſhment. Therefore let us pray, that we may obtain a part in the firſt Reſurrection. Biſhop Uſher [x] alſo ſhews, out of ſome Gothick Miſſals, that the Church had antiently ſeveral Prayers directed to this very purpoſe. 3. Many of the Ancients believed, that there would be a Fire of Probation, through which all muſt paſs at the laſt Day, even the Prophets and Apoſtles, and even the Virgin Mary her ſelf not excepted. Which is aſſerted not only by Origen [y], Irenæus [z], and Lactantius [a], but alſo by St. Ambroſe, who ſays [b] after Origen, that all muſt paſs through the Flames, though it be John the Evangeliſt, though it be Peter. The Sons of Levi ſhall be purged by Fire [c], Ezekiel, Daniel, &c. And theſe having been tried by Fire, ſhall ſay, We have paſſed through Fire and Water. And St. Hilary much after the ſame manner [†], They that are baptized with the Holy Ghoſt, are yet to be perfected by the Fire of Judgment. For ſo he interprets thoſe Words of the Evangeliſt, He ſhall baptize you with the Holy Ghoſt and with Fire. And again [d], Do we deſire the Day of Judgment, in which we muſt undergo the exact Scrutiny of Fire? in which we muſt give an Account of every idle Word: in which thoſe grievous Puniſhments for expiating Souls from Sin, muſt be endured? If the Virgin herſelf, who conceived God in her Womb, muſt undergo the Severity of Judgment, who is ſo bold as to deſire to be judged by God? There are many like Paſſages in Gregory Nazianzen [e], and Nyſſen [f], and St. Jerom [g], and St. Auſtin [h], which the Romiſh Writers commonly produce for the Fire of Purgatory, when-as they plainly relate to this purging Sacrament, as Origen [*] calls it, or in St. Auſtin's Language, the purging Pains of the Fire of Judgment at the laſt Day. And the Fear of this was another Reaſon of their praying for the Dead. 4. Some of the Ancients thought likewiſe that the Prayers of the Church were of ſome Uſe to mitigate the Pains of the damned Souls, though not effectual for their total Deliverance. And laſtly, That they ſerved to augment the Glory of the Saints in Happineſs. St. Auſtin [i] ſays, they were of Uſe to render the Damnation of the Wicked more tolerable. And this was the Opinion of Prudentius [k] and St. Chryſoſtom [l], who adviſes Men to pray for the Dead upon this Account, that it would bring ſome Conſolation to them, though but a little; or if none at all to them, yet it would be accepted of God as a pleaſing Sacrifice from thoſe that offered it. And the like may be read in Paulinus [m], and the Author of the Queſtions to Antiochus, under the Name of Athanaſius [n]. St. Chryſoſtom ſays [o] farther, that their Prayers and Alms were of uſe to procure an Addition to the Rewards and Retribution of the Righteous. Theſe are all the Reaſons we meet with in the Ancients for praying for Souls departed, none of which have any Relation to their being tormented in the Fire of Purgatory, but moſt of [r] Tertul. de Anima, cap. 58. Modicum quodque delictum mora Reſurrectionis luendum, &c. [s] De monogam. cap. 10. Pro anima ejus orat, & Refrigerium interim adpoſtulat ei, & in prima Reſurrectione conſortium. Confer. L. 3. contr. Marcion. cap. 24. Poſt mille annos, intra quam ætatem concluditur Sanctorum Reſurrectio pro meritis maturius vel tardius reſurgentium, &c. [t] Ambroſ. de Obitu Valentin. ad finem. Te quæſo ſumme Deus, ut chariſſimos Juvenes matura reſurrectione ſuſcites & reſuſcites; ut immaturum hunc vitæ iſtius curſum matura reſurrectione compenſes. [u] Id. in Pſal. 1. Qui non veniunt ad primam Reſurrectionem, ſed ad ſecundam reſervantur, iſti urentur donec impleant tempora inter primam & ſecundam reſurrectionem: aut ſi non impleverint, diutius in ſupplicio permanebunt. Ideo ergo rogemus, ut in prima reſurrectione partem habere mereamur. [x] Uſher. Anſwer to the Challenge. p. 151. [y] Orig. Hom. 3. in Pſal. 36. p. 446.

[z] Iren. lib. 4. cap. 9. [a] Lactant. lib. 7. cap. 21.
[b] Ambroſ. Ser. 20. in Pſal. 118. [c] Id. Hom. 3. in Pſal. 36.

[†] Hilar. in Mat. Canon. 2. p. 148. Quia baptizatis in Spiritu Sancto reliquum ſit conſummari igne Judicii. [d] Id. Enarrat. in Pſal. 118. voce Gimel. p. 254. Cum ex omni ocioſo verbo rationem ſimus præſtituri, diem Judicii concupiſcemus, in quo nobis eſt indefeſſus ignis obeundus; in quo ſubeunda ſunt gravia illa expiandæ à peccatis animæ ſupplicia? &c.
[e] Naz. Orat. 42. [f] Nyſſen. de Dormientibus.
[g] Hieron. in Eſa. 66. [h] Aug. de Civ. Dei. lib. 20. cap. 25. [*] Orig. Hom. 14. in Luc. p. 223. [i] Aug. Enchirid. ad Laurent. cap. 110. pro valde malis valere, ut tolerabilior ſit damnatio. [k] Prudent. Cathemerinon. Carm. 5. de Cereo Paſchali. Sunt & Spiritibus ſæpe nocentibus Pœnarum celebres ſub Styge Feriæ, Illa nocte ſacer qua rediit Deus Stagnis ad ſuperos ex Acheronticis. [l] Chryſ. Hom. 3. in Phil. p. 1225. Vid. Hom. 21. in Act. & Hom. 32. in Mat.
[m] Paulin. Ep. 19. [n] Athanaſ. Quæſt. ad Antioch. Q. 34.
[o] Chryſ. Hom. 32. in Mat. p. 307. πεφύκην γένηται μισθὸς καὶ ἀνταπόδοσις.

them

them tend directly to overthrow it. Whence we may safely conclude, That though the Ancients generally prayed for the Dead, at least from the Time of Tertullian, who first speaks of it; yet they did it not upon those Principles, which are now so stifly contended for in the Romish Church. Which is also evident from many antient Forms still remaining in the Mass-Book, and the Liturgies of the modern Greeks, who continue to pray for the Dead without any Belief of Purgatory, as it were easy to demonstrate out of their Rituals, but that it is wholly foreign to the Design of the present Discourse.

SECT. XVII. A short Account of the Diptychs, and their Use in the antient Church.

THERE is one thing more to be noted upon this Matter, That some Time before they made Oblation for the Dead, it was usual in some Ages to recite the Names of such eminent Bishops, or Saints or Martyrs, as were particularly to be mentioned in this part of the Service. To this purpose they had certain Books, which they called their holy Books, and commonly their Diptychs, from their being folded together, wherein the Names of such Persons were written, that the Deacon might rehearse them, as Occasion required, in the time of Divine Service. Cardinal Bona [p] and Schelstrate make three sorts of these Diptychs; one, wherein the Names of Bishops only were written, and more particularly such Bishops as had been Governors of that particular Church: A 2d, wherein the Names of the Living were written, who were eminent and conspicuous either for any Office and Dignity, or some Benefaction and good Work, whereby they had deserved well of the Church; in this Rank were the Patriarchs and Bishops of great Sees, and the Bishop and Clergy of that particular Church; together with the Emperors and Magistrates, and others most conspicuous among the People: The 3d was, the Book containing the Names of such as were deceased in Catholick Communion. The first and the last of these seem to be much the same, and the Consideration of them is only proper to this place. For the Recital of the Names of the Living, as Benefactors by their Oblations, has been spoken of already [*], and here we are only concerned with the Dead. Of this there is no mention made in the Constitutions, which seems to argue, that the Custom of rehearsing the Diptychs was not brought into the Rituals of that Church whence the Compiler of that Book made his Collections. But Cyprian [q] and Tertullian [r] speak of them under another Name; and Theodoret mentions them in the Case of St. Chrysostom, whose Name for some time was left out of the Diptychs, because he died excommunicate (though unjustly) by Theophilus Bishop of Alexandria, and other Eastern Bishops, with whom the Western Church would not communicate [s] till they had restored his Name to the Diptychs again. The Author under the Name of Dionysius [t] gives this Account of them: That after the Salutation of the Kiss of Peace, the Diptychs were read, which set forth the Names of those who had lived righteously, and had attained to the Perfections of a virtuous Life; which was done, partly to excite and conduct the Living to the same happy State by following their good Example; and partly to celebrate the Memory of them as still living, according to the Principles of Religion, and not properly dead, but only translated by Death to a more divine Life. It appears from this Author, that these Diptychs were then read before the Consecration, immediately after the Kiss of Peace. And so it is in the Acts of the Council of Constantinople under Mennas, which makes frequent mention of them, and particularly in one place [u] notes the Time of reading them, namely after the reading of the Gospel and the Creed: For by this time the Creed was also become a part of the Communion-Service in the Eastern Church: Therefore it is said, after the reading of the Gospel, when the Communion-Service was begun (not ended, as the Latin Translation falsely renders it) the Creed was read according to Custom, τῷ ἁγίῳ μαθήματι καὶ τὸ συνηθὲς λεχθέντι (not the Prayers and Prefaces going before the Oblation, some learned Men [x], not understanding the true meaning of the Word μάθημα, render it Lectio, and interpret it Prayers and Prefaces, which most certainly [*] signifies the Creed in this Place:) Then, after the Reading of the Creed, in the time of the Diptychs, all the People ran and stood about the Altar with great Silence, to give Attention; and when the Deacon had named the four holy Synods, and the Archbishops of blessed Memory, Euphemius, Macedonius and Leo, they all with a loud Voice cried out, Glory be to Thee, O Lord, and after that with great Tranquility the Divine-Service was piously performed. It is here observable, that the Recital of the Diptychs was before the Consecration-Prayer, as it is represented in the Hierarchy of Dionysius (though in the Latin Church it seems to have been otherwise) and that now it was usual to mention the four first general Councils, to shew their Approbation of them. Which may be also evidenced from one of Justinian's Letters to Epiphanius, Bishop of Constantinople, now extant in the Code [y], wherein he assures him, That it was in vain for any one to trouble him upon any falſe Hopes, as if he had done, or ever would do, or ſuffer any other to do any thing contrary to the four Councils, or allow the pious Memory of them to be eraſed out of the Diptychs of the Church. Theſe therefore were of Uſe, partly to preſerve the Memory of ſuch eminent Men as were dead in the Communion of the Church, and partly to make honourable mention of ſuch General Councils as had eſtabliſhed the chief Articles of the Faith: And to eraſe the Names either of Men or Councils out of theſe Diptychs, was the ſame thing as to declare that they were Heterodox, and ſuch as they thought unworthy to hold Communion with, as Criminals, or ſome ways deviating from the Faith. Upon this Account St. Cyprian ordered the Name of Geminius Victor to be left out among thoſe that were commemorated at the holy Table [a], becauſe he had broken the Rules of the Church. And Evagrius obſerves [b] of Theodorus Biſhop of Mopſueſtia, that his Name was ſtruck out of the holy Books, that is, the Diptychs, upon the Account of his heretical Opinions, after Death. And St. Auſtin ſpeaking of Cæcilian Biſhop of Carthage, whom the Donatiſts falſely accuſed of being ordained by Traditores, or Men who had delivered up the Bible to be burned in the Time of Perſecution, tells them, that if they could make good any real Charge againſt him, they would no longer name him among the reſt of the Biſhops, whom they believed to be faithful and innocent, at the Altar.

[p] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 2. cap. 12. n. 1. Schelstrat. de Concilio Antiocheno. Can. 2. cap. 6. p. 216. [*] Book XV. Chap. ii. n. 4. and Book II. Chap. xx. n. 5. [q] Cypr. Ep. 66. al. 1. ad Plebem Furnitan. [r] Tertul. de Coron. Mil. cap. 3. [s] Theod. lib. 5. cap. 34. [t] Dionys. Eccles. Hierarch. cap. 3. p. 253. & 254. [u] Conc. Constant. sub Menna. an. 536. Act. 5. Conc. Tom. 5. p. 181. [x] Schelstrat. de Concil. Antioch. p. 217. [*] See this proved before, Book X. Chap. iii. n. 3. [y] Cod. Justin. lib. 1. tit. 1. de summa Trinitate, Leg. 7. Nullus frustra nos turbet, spe vana innixus, quasi nos contrarium quatuor Conciliis fecerimus, aut fieri à quibusdam permittamus, aut aboleri eorundem Sanctorum Conciliorum piam Memoriam ex Ecclesiæ Diptychis sustineamus. Vid. Evagrium. lib. 4. c. 4. & 11.

SECT. XVIII. Next to the Dead, Prayer made for the Living Members of that particular Church, and every Order in it.

HAVING made this ſhort Digreſſion concerning the Diptychs of the Church, I now return to the Order of the Service laid down in the Conſtitutions. Where next after Prayer for the Dead, Supplication is made for the living Members of that particular Church then aſſembled, and every diſtinct Order of Perſons in it. We offer unto Thee [d] for this People, that Thou wouldſt make them, to the Glory of Thy Chriſt, a Royal Prieſthood and an holy Nation; for all that live in Virginity and Chaſtity; for the Widows of the Church; for all that live in honeſt Marriage; for the Infants of thy People; that none of us may be caſt away; We pray Thee for this City, and all that dwell therein. St. Auſtin likewiſe ſpeaks [e] of theſe Prayers at the Altar, for the Faithful, that they by the Gift of God may perſevere in that wherein they have begun. Again [f], Who ever heard the Prieſt praying over the Faithful, and ſaying, Grant, O Lord, that they may perſevere in Thee unto the End, and durſt either in Word or Thought reprehend that Prayer, and not rather anſwer Amen to ſuch a Benediction? Chryſoſtom in like manner deſcribing the Biſhop's Office, ſays [g], it is his Buſineſs to pray for a whole City, and not for a whole City only, but as an Ambaſſador for the whole World, That God would be propitious and merciful both to the Sins of the Living and the Dead. Which makes it the more probable, that the Prayers of the like kind that occur in St. Chryſoſtom's Liturgy [h], are but a Copy of ſuch Prayers as were then commonly uſed in the antient Church.

SECT. XIX. For thoſe that are in Sickneſs, Slavery, Baniſhment, and Proſcription, and that travel by Sea or Land.

THE next Petition in the Conſtitutions is for all that are in Affliction, whether by Sickneſs, or Slavery, or Baniſhment, or Confiſcation and Proſcription: And for all that are expoſed to any Perils upon the Account of their neceſſary Travels by Sea or by Land. Of theſe Petitions I find no particular mention made in other Writers, ſave only in Cyril of Jeruſalem, who ſays [i], after they had prayed for the common Peace of the Church, and the Tranquillity of the World, for Kings, and for their Armies and Allies, they alſo beſought God for all that were ſick and afflicted, or in any kind of Want: And laſt of all they prayed for the Dead. By which we may judge, that though the Order of the Petitions was a little varied in the Liturgies of different Churches, yet the Subſtance was the ſame. And there is little queſtion but the Sick and Diſtreſſed were remember'd in theſe Prayers in all the Churches; ſince in the Deacon's Bidding-Prayer before the Oblation, there is expreſs Direction given to the People, to pray for the Sick, and thoſe that travel by Sea or by Land, and thoſe that are in the Mines, in Baniſhment, in Priſon, in Bonds and in Slavery, as I have ſhewed out of ſeveral Paſſages in St. Chryſoſtom, St. Baſil, and St. Auſtin, comparing them with the Form of Bidding-Prayer for the whole State of Chriſt's Church in the Conſtitutions, related before in the firſt Chapter of this Book, n. 2. and 3.

SECT. XX. For Enemies and Perſecutors, Hereticks and Unbelievers.

THE next Petition in the Conſtitutions is for their Enemies and Perſecutors, for Hereticks and Unbelievers, thoſe that are without the Pale of the Church, and wandring in Error; that God would convert them to good, and mitigate their Fury. And of this there are frequent Examples in the Writings of the Ancients. For nothing was more ſtrictly obſerved by the Ancients than to pray for their Enemies and Perſecutors, for Jews, In[a] Cypr. Ep. 66. al. 1. ad Pleb. Furnitan. [b] Evagr. lib. 4. cap. 38. ἐκ τῆς ἱερῶν ἀπηλείφει δέλτου. &c. [c] Aug. Serm. 37. ex editis a Sirmondo. t. 10. p. 840. Inventus ſit prorſus reus, &c. deinceps eum ad altare inter Epiſcopos, quos fideles & innocentes credimus, non recitabimus. [d] Conſtit. lib. 8. cap. 12. [e] Aug. Ep. 107. ad Vitalem. Pro Fidelibus, ut in eo quod eſſe cæperunt, ejus munere perſeverent. [f] De Dono Perſeverantiæ, cap. 23. tom. 7. p. 571. Quis Sacerdotem ſuper Fideles Dominum invocantem, ſi quando dixit, Da illis Domine in te perſeverare uſque in finem, non ſolum voce auſus eſt, ſed ſaltem cogitatione reprehendere, ac non potius ſuper ejus talem Benedictionem & corde credente & ore confitente reſpondit, Amen? [g] Chryſ. de Sacerdot. lib. 6. cap. 4. p. 93. [h] Chryſ. Liturg. t. 3. p. 616. [i] Cyril. Catech. Myſt. 5. n. 6.

fidels

fidels and Hereticks; of which Dr. Cave [k] has given ſeveral Inſtances out of Cyprian [l], Juſtin Martyr [m], and Irenæus [n]. Which becauſe they may ſeem only to refer to their private Prayers, I will add a few more which more expreſsly relate to their publick Devotions. Tertullian [o] tells the Heathen, they were taught by the Scriptures (which they themſelves might read) to exhibit a more than ordinary Kindneſs toward Men, in praying to God for their Enemies, and wiſhing all good to their Perſecutors. For they had no greater Enemies or Perſecutors in thoſe Days than thoſe very Emperors for whom they made Supplications to God [p] as oft as they met in publick, and for their Officers, and for the State of the World, and for the Peace and Tranquillity of their Affairs, and for the Duration of their Empire. Arnobius ſays their Churches were Oratories [q], wherein they prayed for Peace and Pardon, for the Magiſtrates and Princes, for their Armies, for their Friends and for their Enemies. St. Auſtin [r] particularly notes, that the Prieſt was wont to exhort the People at the Altar to pray for Unbelievers, that God would convert them to the Faith. And again, When does not the Church [†] pray for Infidels and her Enemies, that they may believe? In like manner Pope Celeſtine [s] ſays, the whole Church prayed with the Prieſt for Infidels, that Faith might be given unto them; for Idolaters, that they might be delivered from the Errors of their Impiety; for Jews, that the Veil being taken away from their Heart, the Light of Truth may appear unto them; for Hereticks, that they may repent by returning to the Catholick Faith; for Schiſmaticks, that they may receive the Spirit of Charity, reviving from the Dead. And the ſame is repeated by Gennadius [t], or whoever was the Author of the Book de Eccleſiaſticis Dogmatibus under the Name of St. Auſtin. And in both places it is ſaid, that this Practice was derived from the Apoſtles, and uniformly obſerved in the whole Catholick Church throughout the World. Nay it is evident they prayed for many Hereticks, whom they looked upon as guilty of the Sin againſt the Holy Ghoſt. For they did not eſteem that Sin abſolutely unpardonable, but only puniſhable in both Worlds, on Suppoſition that Men did not repent of it. Therefore St. Auſtin [u] and others ſay, they prayed that they might repent and be ſaved; and accordingly admitted them to the Peace and Communion of the Church upon their Repentance. In a Word, as Chryſoſtom ſays [x], they prayed for the whole World without Exception; they prayed that all Men whatſoever might be converted.

SECT. XXI. For the Catechumens, Energumens, and Penitents.

NEXT after Hereticks and Unbelievers, Prayer is made in the Conſtitutions for the Catechumens of the Church, that God would perfect them in the Faith; for the Energumens, that were vexed with evil Spirits, that God would cleanſe and deliver them from the Power and Agitation of the wicked One; and for the Penitents, that God would accept their Repentance, and pardon both them and the whole Church whatever Offences they had committed againſt him. Whence we may obſerve, that theſe ſeveral Orders were three diſtinct Times prayed for in Divine Service; firſt in the Prayers that were ſaid for them in their Preſence, in the firſt Service, called, the Service of the Catechumens; ſecondly in the Deacon's Bidding-Prayer for the whole State of the Church before the Oblation; and now again thirdly after the Oblation, when all Orders of Men were prayed for at the Sacrifice of the Altar. This laſt is particularly noted by St. Auſtin [y], who ſays, the Prieſt at the Altar was uſed to exhort the People to pray for the Catechumens, that God would inſpire them with a Deſire of Regeneration. And ſo it is ſaid by Celeſtine [z], and Gennadius [a] in the ſame Words, that they prayed for the Lapſers, that God would grant them the Remedy of Repentance; and for the Catechumens, that God would bring them to the Sacrament of Baptiſm, and open to them the great Treaſure of his heavenly Mercy.

SECT. XXII. For healthful and fruitful Seaſons.

IN the next Place they prayed for Health and Proviſion; for the Temperature of the Air, and the Increaſe of the Fruits of the Earth, as the Conſtitutions word it, that they participating of the good Things which God beſtows upon Men, might without ceaſing praiſe him, who giveth Food to all Fleſh. St. Chryſoſtom among other particulars of this Prayer notes the ſame [b], when he ſays they prayed for the Earth and Sea, for the Air, and for the whole World. And though Tertullian does not particularly ſpeak of this Prayer, yet he intimates in general, that they were uſed to pray for Temporal.

[k] Cave Prim. Chriſt. Part. 3. chap. 2. p. 242. [l] Paſſio Cypriani. [m] Juſtin. Dial. cum Tryphon. p. 254, 323, 333. [n] Iren. lib. 3. cap. 46. [o] Tertul. Apol. cap. 31. [p] Tertul. Apol. cap. 39. Coimus in cœtum—Oramus pro Imperatoribus, pro miniſtris eorum, pro Statu Sæculi, pro rerum quiete, pro mora finis. [q] Arnob. lib. 4. p. 181. [r] Aug. Ep. 107. ad Vitalem. Audis ſacerdotem Dei ad altare exhortantem populum Dei, orare pro Incredulis, ut eos Deus convertat ad fidem, &c. [†] De Dono Perſeverantiæ cap. 23. Quando non oratum eſt in Eccleſia pro Infidelibus atque Inimicis ejus ut crederent? [s] Cœleſtin. Ep. 1. ad Gallos. cap. 11. Poſtulant & precantur, ut Infidelibus donetur fides, ut Idololatræ ab impietatis ſuæ liberentur errore, ut Judæis, ablato cordis velamine, lux velamine appareat, ut Hæretici Catholicæ fidei perceptione reſipiſcant, ut Schiſmatici Spiritum redivivæ charitatis accipiant. &c. [t] Gennad. de Eccleſ. Dogmat. chap. 30. [u] Aug. Retractat. lib. 1. cap. 19. De quocunque peſſimo in hac vita conſtituto non eſt utique deſperandum; nec pro illo imprudenter oratur, de quo non deſperatur. [x] Chryſ. Hom. in 1 Theſ. p. 1413. Hom. 6. in 1 Tim. p. 1550. [y] Aug. Ep. 107. ad Vitalem. Audis ſacerdotem Dei ad altare exhortantem populum Dei, orare pro Incredulis ut eos Deus convertat ad fidem, & pro Catechumenis ut eis deſiderium Regenerationis inſpiret. [z] Celeſtin. Ep. 1. ad Gallos, cap. 11. Poſtulant & precantur, ut Lapſis pœnitentiæ remedia conferantur; ut denique Catechumenis ad regenerationis Sacramenta perductis, cœleſtis miſericordiæ aula reſeretur. [a] Gennad. de Eccleſ. Dogmat. cap. 30. [b] Chryſ. Hom. 2. in 2 Cor. p. 745

poral Bleſſings, and among theſe for Rain, as in the German Expedition of Marcus Aurelius, when his Army was ſaved from periſhing for want of Water by the Prayers of the Chriſtians, which never failed [c] to drive away Drought upon other Occaſions. The like Obſervation is made by Cyprian [d], that they offered continually Supplications and Prayers Night and Day for Victory over their Enemies, for obtaining Rain, for averting or moderating all Adverſities, and for the Peace and Safety of the Publick. Which being their continual Prayer Night and Day, 'tis not to be doubted but that it was part of thoſe Prayers which they now more ſolemnly offered at the Altar.

SECT. XXIII. For all their abſent Brethren.

THE laſt Petition, mentioned in the Conſtitutions, is for all thoſe that upon juſt and reaſonable Cauſe were then abſent from the Aſſembly, that God would preſerve both the abſent and preſent in Godlineſs, and keep them without Change, Blame, or Rebuke, and finally gather them all into the Kingdom of his Chriſt, the univerſal King, and God of all Things in Nature both viſible and inviſible. The like Petition is mentioned by Chryſoſtom in one of his Homilies upon St. Matthew [e], according to the old Tranſlation of Anianus: The Prieſt, ſays he, when he ſtands at the Altar, bids us give Thanks for the whole World, for thoſe that are abſent and thoſe that are preſent, for thoſe that are gone before us, and thoſe that ſhall be after us, while the Sacrifice lies upon the Altar.

SECT. XXIV. Concluding with a Doxology to the whole Trinity.

THE Concluſion of this long Prayer in the Conſtitutions is a Doxology to the whole Trinity: And this was of old the conſtant Cuſtom of the Church, as is evident from what has been largely diſcourſed before [*] both concerning the Adoration of the whole Trinity, as the true and only Object of Divine Worſhip, and alſo concerning the Uſe of Divine Hymns and Doxologies to the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt. Of which I need ſay no more in this Place to confirm the Order laid down in the Conſtitutions, ſave only to obſerve, That two of the moſt antient Writers we have, Irenæus and Tertullian [f], do both mention one part of this Doxology, as particularly uſed at the Conſecration of the Euchariſt. Irenæus ſays the Valentinians made it an Argument for their Æones, that the Catholicks uſed to ſay εἰς αἰῶνας τ᾽ αἰώνων in their Euchariſtical Service; referring to the laſt Words of this Doxology, World without End. And Tertullian particularly asks thoſe who frequented the Roman Games, how they could give Teſtimony to a Gladiator, with that Mouth wherewith they had anſwered Amen at the Euchariſt? Or ſay, World without End, to any other but Chriſt their God? implying, that the Glorification of Chriſt with this Doxology was then a noted Cloſe of the Conſecration Prayer, as the Author of the Conſtitutions repreſents it.

SECT. XXV. To which the People with one Voice anſwered, Amen.

AND from this Paſſage of Tertullian it is no leſs apparent, that the People were uſed to ſubjoin their Amen to the End of this Prayer. Which was a Cuſtom as antient as the Apoſtles. For St. Paul ſeems plainly to allude to it, 1 Cor. xiv. 16. When thou ſhalt bleſs with the Spirit, that is, bleſs the Cup of Bleſſing, or the Euchariſt, in an unknown Tongue, How ſhall he that occupieth the Room of the Unlearned, ſay Amen at thy giving of Thanks, ſeeing he underſtandeth not what thou ſay'ſt? Juſtin Martyr [†], in deſcribing the Chriſtian Rites in celebrating the Euchariſt, takes notice of this among the reſt, that when the Preſident had ended his Prayers and Thankſgivings over the Bread and Wine, all the People aſſented with their Acclamations, ſaying, Amen. And Dionyſius of Alexandria [g] ſpeaking of one who had never been truly baptized, but had often notwithſtanding been Partaker of the Euchariſt, ſays, they would not rebaptize him, becauſe he had for a long time heard the Thankſgiving, and joined with the People in the common Amen. And ſo Chryſoſtom interpreting thoſe Words of the Apoſtle, How ſhall he that occupieth the Room of the Unlearned, ſay Amen at thy giving of Thanks, ſeeing he underſtandeth not what thou ſay'ſt? plainly refers to this Cuſtom: For he ſays, ἰδιώτης, which we render unlearned, ſignifies a private Man or Lay-man: And if thou bleſſeſt in an unknown Tongue [h], not underſtanding what thou ſay'ſt, nor being able to interpret it, the Lay-man cannot anſwer, Amen. For he not hearing thoſe Words, World without End, which is the Cloſe of the Thankſgiving, cannot ſay, Amen. Where we may obſerve, both that the Conſecration-Prayer ended with a known Doxology to the Holy Trinity, whereof thoſe Words, World without End, were a Part; and that the People hearing them anſwered, Amen.

SECT. XXVI. Then followed the Creed in ſuch Churches as had made it a Part of their Liturgy.

THERE is no mention made in the Conſtitutions of the formal Rehearſing either of the Creed or the Lord's Prayer in this place immediately after Conſecration: And the reaſon is, That when that Author made his Collections, it was not yet become the Cuſtom to uſe the Creed in any other Service, but only that of Baptiſm, in any Church whatſoever. The firſt that brought the [c] Tertul. ad. Scapul. cap. 4. Quando non Geniculationibus & Jejunationibus noſtris ſiccitates ſunt depulſæ? [d] Cypr. ad Demetrian. p. 193. Pro arcendis hoſtibus & imbribus impetrandis, & vel auferendis vel temperandis adverſis, rogamus ſemper & preces fundimus, &c. [e] Chryſ. Hom. 26. in Mat. p. 259. Altari aſſiſtens Sacerdos, pro univerſo orbe terrarum, pro abſentibus atque præſentibus, pro his qui poſtea futuri ſunt, Sacrificio illo propoſito, Deo nos gratias jubet offerre. [*] Book XIII. Chap. ii. Book XIV. Chap. ii. n. 1. [f] Iren. lib. 1. cap. 1. Tertul. de Spectac. cap. 25. Quale eſt——ex ore quo Amen in Sanctum protuleris, Gladiatori teſtimonium reddere? εἰς αἰῶνας alii omnino dicere, niſi Deo Chriſto? See Chryſoſtom. Hom. 35. in 1 Cor. in the next Section. [†] Juſtin. Apol. 2. p. 97. [g] Ap. Euſeb. lib. 7. cap. 9. [h] Chryſ. Hom. 35. in 1 Cor. p. 640.

Rehearſing

Rehearſing of the Creed into the Liturgy, was Peter Fullo Biſhop of Antioch, about the Year 471. And after that, about the Year 511, Timotheus Biſhop of Conſtantinople brought it into Uſe in the Liturgy of that Church, as we learn from the Hiſtory of Theodorus [i] Lector. After that we find it mentioned in the Council of Conſtantinople under Mennas, An. 536, as being rehearſed [k] according to Cuſtom between the Reading of the Goſpel and the Diptychs. After this, about the Year 589, it was brought into the Spaniſh Church at the Petition of King Recaredus, by the Order of the third Council of Toledo, and that after the Example of the Eaſtern Churches: And then it was ordered to be ſaid [l] with a loud Voice after the Conſecration, immediately before the Lord's Prayer, to be an Inſtruction, and Declaration of the People's true Faith, who were lately converted from Arianiſm, and to prepare their Hearts, thus purified by Faith, to the following Reception of the Body and Blood of Chriſt. It was not thus uſed in the Gallican Liturgy till the time of Charles the Great; nor in the Roman Liturgy, till the Beginning of the eleventh Century, as I have more fully ſhewed [*] in a former Book. But as it had earlier Admittance in the Spaniſh Churches, ſo the Rehearſal of it appears to have been appropriated to the Time after Conſecration, between that and the Lord's Prayer, which in moſt Churches they were uſed to repeat alſo toward the Concluſion of theſe Prayers following the Oblation.

SECT. XXVII. And the Lord's Prayer.

FOR though there be no mention made of the Lord's Prayer in this part of the Service in the Conſtitutions, (as probably not in Uſe in that Church whence the Author made his Collections) yet we are aſſured it was almoſt generally uſed in all Churches. For not only the forementioned Council of Toledo, and the fourth of the ſame Name [m], ſpeak of the Lord's Prayer as coming before the Reception of the Bread and Wine in the Spaniſh Churches; but St. Auſtin ſays [n], the whole Church almoſt concluded the Oblation Prayers with it. And I have already confirmed his Obſervation from ſeveral other Paſſages of St. Chryſoſtom, and Cyril of Jeruſalem, and St. Jerom, and Gregory the Great [†], who was alſo of Opinion that the Apoſtles uſed no other Prayer to conſecrate the Euchariſt [o], but the Lord's Prayer. In which he was ſomething ſingular. For there is little queſtion, but that the Apoſtles conſecrated as the Lord had done before them. As to the Practice of the Church in uſing the Lord's Prayer at this Time, Optatus [p] ſays it was become ſo cuſtomary by neceſſary Preſcript, that the Donatiſts themſelves did not pretend to omit it. And in ſome of the French Councils [q] an Order was made, That no Lay-man, even of thoſe that did not communicate, ſhould leave the Aſſembly before the Lord's Prayer was ſaid.

SECT. XXVIII. Abſolution of Penitents immediately before the Lord's Prayer, with occaſional Benedictions.

IT appears from the laſt mentioned Place of Optatus, that when any Penitents were to receive a ſolemn Abſolution, in the African Church, it was uſually given them about this time, between the offering of the Oblation and the Lord's Prayer. For he tells the Donatiſts [r] that the very Moment after they had given Penitents Impoſition of Hands and Pardon of Sins, they were obliged to turn to the Altar, and ſay the Lord's Prayer. Which implies that Abſolution was commonly given at this Seaſon. And here we may ſuppoſe ſeveral of thoſe Prayers of Thankſgiving or Benediction, mentioned in the ſeventh and eighth Books of the Conſtitutions, to have had their place; ſuch as the Benediction of the holy Oyl, and the Thankſgiving for the Firſt-fruits of the Earth [s]: There being no Time more proper for ſuch Things, than the Time of the Oblation. But as nothing is ſaid poſitively and expreſsly of this Matter, I only mention it by way of Conjecture.

SECT. XXIX. Benediction after the Lord's Prayer.

BUT there is more Evidence of another ſort of Benediction following the Lord's Prayer in many of the Weſtern Churches. For the third Council of Orleance [t] had a Canon which orders all Lay-men to ſtay till they had heard the Lord's Prayer, and received the Biſhop's Benediction. Cardinal Bona [u] underſtands this of the final Benediction, which followed the Communion; but Mabillon more truly interprets it of the Benediction before Communion [x], immediately following the Lord's Prayer. Concerning which there is a Canon in the Council of Toledo [y], which cenſures ſome Prieſts for communicating immediately after the Lord's Prayer, with-

[i] Theodor. Lector. lib. 2. p. 563. & 566. [k] Conc. Conſtant. ſub Menna. Act. 1. p. 41. Edit. Crab. quæ eſt Act. 5. Edit. Labbe. [l] Conc. Tolet. 3. can. 2. Conſultu Reccaredi Regis conſtituit Synodus, ut per omnes Eccleſias Hiſpaniæ & Galliciæ, ſecundum formam Orientalium Eccleſiarum, Concilii Conſtantinopolitani, hoc eſt, centum quinquaginta Epiſcoporum Symbolum Fidei recitetur: Et priuſquam Dominica dicatur Oratio, voce clara prædicetur, quo fides vera manifeſta ſit & teſtimonium habeat, &c. [*] Book X. Chap. iv. n. 17. [m] Conc. Tolet. 4. can. 17. [n] Aug. Ep. 59. ad Paulin. [†] See theſe cited at large, Book XIII. Chap. vii. n. 3. [o] Greg. lib. 7. Ep. 64. Orationem Dominicam idcirco mox poſt precem dicimus, quia mos Apoſtolorum fuit, ut ad ipſam ſolummodo orationem Oblationis hoſtiam conſecrarent. [p] Optat. lib. 2. p. 57. [q] Conc. Aurelian. 3. can. 28. De Miſſis nullus Laicorum ante diſcedat, quam Dominica dicatur Oratio, &c. [r] Optat. ibid. Inter vicina momenta, dum manus imponitis, & delicta donatis, mox ad altare converſi, Dominicam Orationem prætermittere non poteſtis. [s] Vid. Conſtit. lib. 7. cap. 42. lib. 8. cap. 40. [t] Conc. Aurel. 3. can. 28. De Miſſis nullus Laicorum ante diſcedat, quam Dominica dicatur Oratio, & ſi Epiſcopus fuerit præſens, ejus Benedictio expectetur. [u] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 2. cap. 16. n. 2. [x] Mabil. de Liturg. lib. 1. cap. 4. n. 14. [y] Conc. Tolet. 4. can. 17. Nonnulli Sacerdotes poſt dictam Orationem Dominicam ſtatim communicant, & poſtea Benedictionem in populo dant: quod deinceps interdicimus: ſed poſt Orationem Dominicam Benedictio in populum ſequatur, & tunc demum Corporis & Sanguinis Dominici Sacramentum ſumatur, out giving the Benediction to the People; and orders, That for the future, the Benediction ſhould follow the Lord's Prayer, and after that the Communion. And by this we are to interpret ſome [z] other Canons of the Councils of Agde and Orleance, which order the People not to depart till the Biſhop has given his Benediction. Which is to be underſtood of the Benediction before the Communion, and not that which came after it. And this agrees with the Order in the Conſtitutions; where after the long Prayer of the Conſecration and Oblation is ended [a], the Biſhop is appointed to give this ſhort Benediction, The Peace of God be with you all: And then after the Deacon has rehearſed a Bidding-Prayer (much to the ſame purpoſe with the former, for the whole Church and every Order in it, and particularly for the Sacrifice then offered, That God would receive it to his Altar in Heaven for a ſweet-ſmelling Savour by the Mediation of Chriſt) the Biſhop again recommends the People to God in another Prayer, which the Greeks call εὐλογία, and the Latins Commendatio, and Benedictio, the Commendation or Benediction, beſeeching God to ſanctify their Bodies and Souls, and to make them worthy of the good Things he has ſet before them; which relates both to their worthy Reception of the Euchariſt, and their obtaining eternal Life. This is what I conceive thoſe Latin Councils call the Biſhop's Benediction, of which there are ſome Inſtances in the Mozarabick Liturgy, and many more in the old Gothick and Gallican Miſſals lately publiſhed by Mabillon, where the Prayer that follows the Collect after the Lord's Prayer, is always ſtyled Benedictio Populi, the Benediction of the People: And theſe are commonly different Prayers, compoſed with ſome reſpect to the ſeveral Feſtivals to which they were appropriated, like the Collects before the Epiſtles and Goſpels in our preſent Liturgy. But I return to the antient Service.

SECT. XXX. Of the Deacon's Bidding-Prayer after the Conſecration.

THERE is one Petition in the Deacon's Bidding-Prayer after the Conſecration in the Conſtitutions, which is not to be paſſed over in Silence; that is, That God would receive the Gift that was then offered to Him, to his Altar in Heaven, as a ſweet-ſmelling Savour, by the Mediation of his Chriſt. This Form ſeems as antient as Irenæus: For he ſays, We have an Altar [b] in Heaven, and thither our Prayers and Oblations are directed. And ſo it is in all the Greek Liturgies, with a ſmall Variation. And frequently in the Mozarabick Liturgy [c] and the old Gothick Miſſal publiſhed by Mabillon [d], there are Prayers for the Deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt to ſanctify the Gifts, and make them the Body and Blood of Chriſt, even after the Repetition of the Words, This is my Body, and, This is my Blood; which evidently ſhews, that the antient Formers of the Liturgy did not think the Conſecration to be effected by the bare Repetition of thoſe Words, but by Prayer for the Deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt upon the Elements of Bread and Wine. And it is very remarkable, that even in the preſent Canon of the Roman Maſs, there is ſtill ſuch a Prayer as this remaining after what they call Conſecration: The Prieſt offering the Hoſt, ſays, Be pleaſed to look upon theſe Things with a favourable and propitious Eye [e], as Thou wert pleaſed to accept the Gifs of Abel thy righteous Servant. He adds, We beſeech Thee, Almighty God, to command that theſe Things may be carried by the Hands of thy Holy Angels to Thy Altar on high. Concluding, By Chriſt our Lord, by whom Thou doſt always create, ſanctify, quicken and bleſs theſe good Things unto us. Theſe Words in this Prayer, as our Polemical Writers [f] have rightly obſerved, were uſed before Tranſubſtantiation was invented, and when the Conſecration was thought to be made by Prayer, and not barely by pronouncing the Words, This is my Body. And then they were good Senſe, when they were ſaid over Bread and Wine, to conſecrate them into the Memorial and Symbols of Chriſt's Body and Blood. But now they are become abſurd and contrary to the primitive Intention. For how can the real Body and Blood of Chriſt be called theſe Gifts? or be compared to the Sacrifice of Abel, who offered a Beaſt? How can Men pray (without Indignity to the Son of God) That the Sacrifice of God's only Son may be as acceptable to God as the Sacrifice of Abel was? Or how does Chriſt, who ſits at the Right Hand of the Father, need the Mediation of Angels to be carried or preſented to his Father at the heavenly Altar? With what Propriety of Speech can Chriſt be called, All theſe good Things? And the good Things which God createth always, and quickneth, and ſanctifieth always? Doth God create, and quicken, and bleſs Jeſus Chriſt by Jeſus Chriſt? It is proper to ſay all this of the Gifts, ſuppoſing them ſtill to be real Bread and Wine; but altogether improper, [z] Conc. Agathen. Can. 44. & 47. Conc. Aurelian. 1. can. 28.

[a] Conſtit. lib. 8. cap. 13. [b] Iren. lib. 4. cap. 34. Eſt altare in cœlis, illuc Preces noſtræ & Oblationes diriguntur.
[c] Miſſa Mozarab. in Natali Domini. Item Dominica 2. & 5. Poſt Epiphan. & Domin. 1. & 3. Quadrageſimæ. Die Paſchalis. & Domin. 3. poſt Paſch. cited by Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 2. cap. 13. n. 5.
[d] Miſſal. Gothic. ap. Mabil. lib. 3. p. 314. in Feſto Aſſumptionis. Deſcendat, Domine, in his Sacrificiis tuæ benedictionis coæternus & cooperator Paraclitus Spiritus: ut Oblationem quam tibi de tua terra fructificante porrigimus, cœleſti permutatione, te Sanctificante, ſumamus: ut tranſlata fruge in Corpore, Calice in Cruore, proficiat meritis, quod obtulimus pro delictis, &c. It. Miſſa in Circumciſione ibid. p. 202. Hoc Sacrificium ſuſcipere & benedicere & Sanctificare digneris, ut fiat nobis Euchariſtia Legitima, &c. Vid. ibid. Miſſa 20. in Cathedra Petri. p. 228. & Miſſa 65. in Feſto Leodegarii. p. 285. & Miſſa 27. in Symboli Traditione. p. 235. Miſſa 77. Dominicalis. p. 296. [e] Miſſal. Roman. in Canone Miſſæ. p. 300. Antwerp. 1574. Supra quæ propitio ac ſereno vultu reſpicere digneris, ut accepta habere dignatus es munera pueri tui juſti Abel—— Supplices te rogamus Deus Omnipotens, jube hæc perferri per manus ſancti angeli tui in ſublime altare tuum.—— Per Chriſtum Dominum noſtrum, per quem Domine hæc omnia ſemper nobis bona creas, ſanctificas, vivificas, benedicis.
[f] Vid. Du Moulin. Novelty of Popery. Lib. 7. chap. 5. p. 730. and Buckler of Faith. p. 510.

if

if they are tranſubſtantiated into the natural Fleſh and Blood of Chriſt. Whence we may conclude, that the firſt Compilers of this Prayer knew nothing of the new Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, which makes this Prayer abſurd in every Syllable of it; to enter here no farther upon a Debate concerning the Change which is made in the Elements by Conſecration, which every one knows where to find diſcuſſed at large in our Polemical Writers, and ſomething will be ſaid of it hereafter under the Head of Adoration, Chap. V. n. 4.

SECT. XXXI. Of the Form, Sancta Sanctis, and the Hymn, Glory be to God on high.

IMMEDIATELY after the Benediction of the Biſhop, the Deacon in the Conſtitutions is appointed to ſay προσχωμεν, Let us give Attention. And then the Biſhop calling to the People, ſays, ἁγια τοις ἁγιοις, Holy Things for thoſe that are Holy. To which the People anſwer, There is one Holy, one Lord, one Jeſus Chriſt, to the Glory of God the Father, who is bleſſed for ever, Amen. Glory be to God in the Higheſt, and on Earth Peace, Good-will towards Men. Hoſanna to the Son of David. Bleſſed be God the Lord, that came in the Name of the Lord, and appeared unto us; Hoſanna in the Higheſt. Cyril of Jeruſalem takes Notice of one part of this in the Church of Jeruſalem, where it came immediately after the Lord's Prayer. After that, ſays he [g], the Prieſt ſays, Holy Things for Holy Men. Holy are the Elements which lie before us, when they have received the Illapſe of the Holy Ghoſt upon them. Holy are ye alſo, when ye are endowed with the Holy Ghoſt: And therefore holy Things agree to holy Men. Then ye ſay, There is one Holy, one Lord Jeſus Chriſt. There is one truly Holy, who is Holy by Nature: Ye alſo are Holy, not by Nature, but by Participation, by Exerciſe and Prayer. St. Chryſoſtom alſo [h] takes Notice of the ſame, comparing the Service of the Church to the Olympick Exerciſes, where the Herald ſtands and cries with a loud Voice, Does any one accuſe this Man? Is he a Thief? Is he a Slave? Is he an Immoral Man? So the Eccleſiaſtical Herald, the Prieſt, ſtanding on high, calls ſome, and rejects others, not with his Hand, but with his Tongue: For when he ſays, Holy things for Holy Men, he ſays this, If any one be not Holy, let him not come here. He does not barely ſay, if he be free from Sin, but, if he be Holy: For it does not make a Man Holy, merely to be free from Sin, but to be endowed with the Spirit, and to abound with good Works. Therefore he ſays, I would not have you only free from Mire, but White and Beautiful. St. Chryſoſtom alſo often ſpeaks of the Hymn, Glory be to God on High, and tells us particularly that it was ſung at the Euchariſt, as well as upon other Occaſions. God, ſays he [i], firſt brought the Angels down hither, and then carried Men up to them. The Earth was made an Heaven, becauſe Heaven was about to receive the Things of the Earth. Therefore, ευχαριστουντες λεγομεν, when we give Thanks, or celebrate the Euchariſt, we ſay, Glory be to God on high, in Earth Peace, Good-will towards Men. And that by the Thankſgiving he here means the Euchariſt, is evident from another place, where he more preciſely ſpecifies the time of uſing it in the Communion-Service: ἱστασιν οἱ πιστοι, &c. They who are Communicants know [k] what Hymn is ſung by the Spirits above; what the Cherubims ſay above; what the Angels ſaid, Glory be to God on high. Therefore our Hymns come after our Pſalmody, as ſomething more perfect. Meaning that Pſalms were ſung in the Service of the Catechumens; but theſe Hymns, the Cherubical Hymn and the Angelical Hymn, more peculiarly in the Communion-Service.

SECT. XXXII. Of the Pſalm inviting to the Communion.

ST. Cyril adds [l] that after the Hymn, One Holy, a Pſalm was ſung inviting them to participate of the holy Myſteries, which was the thirty firſt Pſalm, and particularly thoſe Words, Taſte and ſee that the Lord is gracious. Which, he tells them, was not to be eſtimated or diſcerned by their corporeal Taſte, but by the certainty of Faith. For they were not bid to taſte Bread and Wine, but the Antitype or Sign of the Body and Blood of Chriſt. This was a diſtinct Pſalm from thoſe which were uſed to be ſung afterward whilſt the People were communicating: For this was an Invitatory to communicate, but the other were for Meditation and Devotion whilſt they were actually partaking; of which there will be Occaſion to ſay ſomething farther in the next Chapter.

SECT. XXXIII. The Conſecration always performed with an audible Voice.

HERE we muſt note two Things more which concern the Conſecration in general, in Oppoſition to the Corruptions of later Ages. Firſt, That as all Divine Service was in a known Tongue, ſo particularly the Conſecration of the Euchariſt was ordered to be pronounced both intelligibly and audibly, that the People might hear it, and anſwer, Amen. The contrary Practice now prevails in the Roman Church: But both Habertus [m] and Bona [n] own it to be an Innovation, of which there is no Footſtep till the tenth Age, when firſt the antient Cuſtom was ſuperſeded. It would be Impertinent to produce Authorities for a Thing that is ſo plainly confeſs'd, and beyond Diſpute. And therefore I ſhall only note one Thing upon this Point, that when ſome little grumbling of this Diſeaſe began to appear in the Time of Juſtinian, he checked it in its firſt Symptoms, by a ſevere Law, commanding all Biſhops and [g] Cyril. Catech. Myſt. 5. n. 16. [h] Chryſ. Hom. 17. in Hebr. p. 1873. See alſo Hom. 123. Tom. 5. p. 809, 810. Edit. Savil. [i] Chryſ. Hom. 3. in Coloſ. p. 1337. [k] Hom. 9. in Coloſ. p. 1380. [l] Cyril. Catech. Myſt. 5. n. 17. [m] Haber. Archieratic. Par. 8. Obſer. 9. p. 145. [n] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 2. cap. 13. n. 1.

Presbyters [o] to make the divine Oblation, and the Prayers us'd in Baptiſm, not in ſecret, or with a low and muttering Voice, but ſo as all the faithful People might hear them, to the greater Devotion of their Souls, and the greater Praiſe and Glory of God. For ſo the Holy Apoſtle teaches, ſaying in the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, If thou ſhalt bleſs with the Spirit only, how ſhall he that occupieth the Room of the Unlearned, ſay Amen at thy giving of Thanks, ſeeing he underſtandeth not what thou ſayſt? For thou verily giveſt Thanks well, but the other is not edified. Therefore if any Biſhop or Presbyter contemn this Rule, they muſt give an Account hereof in the dreadful Judgment of our God and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; and we, when they come to our Knowledge, will not ſuffer them to remain quiet and unpuniſhed. It is well for the Roman Church, that the Canon Law is ſuperior to the Civil: Elſe ſuch an horrible Abuſe of all righteous both Divine and Human Laws would not go without its juſt Revenges. This is one of thoſe many good Laws for which the Church is beholden to that learned Emperor; whom yet Baronius [p] for the ſake of theſe very Laws does beſpatter and rally, as an ignorant Analphabetus, an impious Heretiek, an Invader of Divine Rights, a Man ſick of the common Diſtemper of Kings, and whatever a partial Hiſtorian could think of, that was indecent to be ſaid, who was himſelf indeed ſick with Prejudice in favour of the common Abuſes and Corruptions of his own Church, among which this is one of the moſt flaming and intolerable, to pray every Day in an unheard and unknown Tongue, ſo contrary to the Authority of the Apoſtle, and the Rules of the Primitive Church, and the Edification of Chriſtian People, and the common Senſe and Reaſon of Mankind. [q]

SECT. XXXIV. And with breaking of Bread, to repreſent our Saviour's Paſſion.

THE other Ceremony to be noted in the Practice of the Ancients is, that in conſecrating the Euchariſt they always brake the Bread in Conformity to our Saviour's Example, to repreſent his Paſſion and Crucifixion. Clemens Alexandrinus ſpeaks of this as a general Cuſtom [r], when the Euchariſt was divided or broken, to let every one of the People take his Part. And St. Auſtin [s] ſays the whole Church obſerved it, in Bleſſing the Bread, to break it for Diſtribution. The Reader that pleaſes may find other Teſtimonies collected by Hoſpinian [t] out of Irenæus [u], Dionyſius the Areopagite [x], Theophilus of Alexandria [y], and Cyril of Alexandria [z], and St. Chryſoſtom [a]. Neither does Bona [b] himſelf deny this, but proves it farther from Gregory Nazianzen [c] and Cæſarius Arelatenſis, and all the older Ritualiſts and Liturgies, of which he ſays there is not any that does not preſcribe this breaking of Bread, the Greeks into four Parts, the Latins into three, and the Mozarabick Liturgy into nine Parts. Which is alſo noted by Mabillon [d], who adds, that theſe nine Parts in that Liturgy are characterized by ſo many ſeveral Names, viz. Incarnation, Nativity, Circumciſion, Epiphany or Manifeſtation, Paſſion, Death, Reſurrection, Glory, and Kingdom. Which is a little Deviation from the Simplicity of the antient Church, yet not ſo culpable as the Practice of the preſent Roman Church, where inſtead of breaking Bread for the Communicants to partake of it, they only break a ſingle Wafer into three Parts (of which no one partakes) only to retain a Shadow of the antient Cuſtom. Bona indeed calls this Breaking of Bread according to Chriſt's Inſtitution, or rather breaking of Chriſt's Body under the Species of Bread, when yet according to their Doctrine Chriſt's Body is not broken, neither is it Bread, but the Species of Bread, nor common Bread, but a Wafer, whereof the Species is only broken, not the Subſtance, and that not for communicating, but a Show, to make Men believe they are Retainers of an antient Cuſtom. The firſt Diſputets againſt the Reformation are more Ingenuous. They freely own, that the Roman Church has made an Alteration [e], only they ſay ſhe had good Reaſons for it, leſt in breaking the Bread ſome Danger might happen, and ſome Crumbs or Particles of it periſh; and then again, becauſe the Pope has Power to alter any Thing relating to the Sacrament, according to the Exigency of Time and Place, if it only concerns the Ornament or Accidentals of it. As if Chriſt himſelf could not have foreſeen any Dangers that might happen, or given as prudent Orders as the Pope concerning his own Inſtitution! But it is ſufficient to have obſerved this Variation of the Church of Rome, though in a ſmaller Matter, from the Primitive Practice, together with their Reaſons for ſuch a Change; of which the Reader may ſee more in Chamier or Biſhop Jewel, who have more particularly canvaſſed and examined all the Pleas that are offered on the other ſide by the Advocates of that Church for this and many other Alterations [f]. I now go on with the Primitive Account, which leads us next to conſider the Communicants themſelves who were allowed to receive this Sacrament, and the Manner of communicating and receiving it.

[o] Juſtin. Novel. 137. cap. 6. Jubemus omnes Epiſcopos & Presbyteros non in Secreto, ſed cum ea Voce quæ à fideli Populo exaudiatur, Divinam Oblationem & Precationem quæ fit in Baptiſmate Sancto, facere, ut inde audientium animi in majorem Devotionem & Dei Laudationem & Benedictionem efferantur, &c.
[p] Baron. an. 528. tom. 7. p. 144. [q] See Chamier againſt Bellarmin, and Jewel againſt Harding upon this Subject. [r] Clem. Strom. lib. 1. p. 318. [s] Aug. Ep. 59. ad Paulin.
[t] Hoſpin. Hiſt. Sacrament. p. 30. [u] Iren. lib. 4. cap. 34.
[x] Dionyſ. Eccl. Hier. cap. 3. [y] Theoph Ep. Paſchal. 1.
[z] Cyril. in Joan. lib. 14. [a] Chryſ. Hom. 24. in 1 Cor.
[b] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 2. [c] Naz. Ep. 240. ad Amphiloc.
[d] Mabil. de Liturg. Gall. lib. 1. cap. 2. p. 12. Sub hæc frangit Hoſtiam in novem particulas, quæ his nominibus deſignantur, Corporatio, Nativitas, Circumciſio, Apparitio, Paſſio, Mors, Reſurrectio, Gloria, Regnum. [e] Salmero. Tract. 30. in Act. ap. Chamier. de Euch. lib. 7. cap. 11. n. 26. p. 384. [f] Vid. Chamier. ubi ſupra. Jewel. Reply to Harding. Artic. 11 p. 327.

CHAP.

CHAP. IV.

Of Communicants, or Persons who were allowed to receive this Sacrament, and the Manner of receiving it.

SECT. I. All Persons, except Catechumens and Penitents, obliged to receive the Eucharist.

NOW that we are come to the Act of Communicating, we must first consider what Persons were allowed, or rather obliged, to receive this Holy Sacrament, and then after what Manner they received it. For the first, we are to remember, what has been often observed before, that as soon as the Service of the Catechumens was ended, a Deacon was used to call upon all Catechumens and those that were under Penance, to withdraw; and admonish all others to stay at the Prayers of the Faithful, and make their Oblation, and receive the Communion. Whence it is evident, that the most antient and primitive Custom was for all that were allowed to stay and communicate in Prayers, to communicate in the participation of the Eucharist also, except only the last Class of Penitents, who were admitted to hear the Prayers, but not to make their Oblation, nor receive the Communion; whence they had the Name of Consistentes, Co-standers, because they might stay to communicate in the Prayers, but still δίχα προσφορᾶς, without the Oblation, as the antient Canons word it. These only excepted, all other baptized Persons were not only permitted, but by the Rules of the Church obliged to communicate in the Eucharist, under Pain of Ecclesiastical Censure. The most antient Canons are very express to this Purpose. Among those called the Apostolical Canons [a] there is one runs in these Words: "All such of the Faithful as come to Church, "and hear the Scriptures read, but stay not the "Prayers, and to partake of the Holy Communion, ought to be suspended as Authors of "Disorder in the Church." Which the Council of Antioch [b] repeats with a little Enlargement: "All such as come into the Church of God, "and hear the Holy Scriptures read, but do not "communicate with the People in Prayer, and "refuse to partake of the Eucharist, which is a "disorderly Practice, ought to be cast out of the "Church, 'till they confess their Fault, and "bring forth Fruits of Repentance; when if "they ask Pardon, they may obtain it." Martin Bracarensis [c] puts this Canon into his Collection for the Use of the Spanish Church. And Gratian [d] alledges a Decree of Pope Anacletus, which orders all to communicate when the Consecration was ended, if they would not be cast out of the Church: For so the Apostles appointed, and the holy Roman Church observed that Order. Which though it be a supposititious Decree, yet it is made in Conformity to the antient Discipline, and shews the Practice that was then prevailing even in the Roman Church.

SECT. II. When and how this Discipline began first to relax.

IN St. Chrysostom's time some began to desire they might have Liberty to stay during the Performance of the whole Office, and yet not be obliged to communicate. They were not willing to be accounted Penitents, and be driven out with them; and yet they would not be Communicants, and orderly partake with the Church. Against these St. Chrysostom inveighs, after his usual manner, with a great deal of Eloquence, and becoming Sharpness. Are you unworthy of the Sacrifice, and unfit to partake [e] of it? (For that was their Plea:) Neither then are you worthy of the Prayers. Do you not hear the Church's Herald standing, and proclaiming, All ye that are Penitents, withdraw? All they that do not communicate, are Penitents. If thou art of the Number of Penitents, thou mayst not partake. For he that is not a Partaker, is a Penitent. Why does he say, All ye that cannot pray, be gone? And why do you impudently stay? You are not one of those, you'll say, but of those that may partake. Consider, I pray, and seriously weigh the Matter. The Royal Table is prepared, the Angels stand ministring by, the Lord himself is present, and do you stand yawning as an idle Spectator only? Your Garments are defiled, and are you under no Concern? Yea, but, say you, they are clean. Then sit down, and partake. The King comes daily to see the Guests, and discourses with them all: And now he says in your Consciences, Friends, How come you to stand here, not having on a Wedding Garment? He said not, Why art thou set down? But before he was set down, before he was entred, he pronounced him unworthy. For he said not, Why art thou set down? But, Why cameſt thou in hither? The same now he says to every one of us, that stand here with an impudent Boldness. For every one that does not partake, is shameless and impudent. They that are in Sin, are for this Reason first cast out. As therefore none of those, who are not initiated, ought to be present; so neither any of those who are initiated, if they be defiled. Tell me, if any one that is invited to a Feast, washes his Hands, and sits down, and is ready for the Table, and yet after all eats not, does he not affront him that invited him? Were it not better, that such a Man should not be present? Likewise thou al-

[a] Canon. Apost. 10. Vid. can. 8. ibid. for the Clergy.
[b] Conc. Antioch. can. 2. Canon. c. 18.
[c] Martin. Bracarens. Collect.
[d] Gratian. de Consecrat. Dist. 2. cap. 10. Peracta Consecratione omnes communicent, qui noluerint Ecclesiasticis carere liminibus. Sic enim & Apostoli statuerunt, & Sancta Romana tenet Ecclesia.
[e] Chrys. Hom. 3. in Ephes. p. 1051.

so

ſo art preſent, thou haſt ſung the Hymn, and made Profeſſion with the reſt that thou art one of thoſe that are Worthy, in that thou didſt not depart with the Unworthy. How is it that thou remaineſt, and yet doſt not partake at the Table? Thou ſayſt, I am unworthy. Thou art then unworthy alſo of the Communion of Prayers. I have tranſcribed this long, but elegant Paſſage of Chryſoſtom, to ſhew, that in his Time by the Rules of the Church none were allowed to refrain from partaking of the Euchariſt upon the Pretence of Unworthineſs, who were not deemed unworthy to be preſent at the Prayers alſo.

But in the very next Age this Diſcipline was a little relaxed, and Men who would not communicate, were not only permitted, but injoined to ſtay during the whole Service, till after the Lord's Prayer and the Biſhop's Benediction; which, as has been ſhewed in the laſt Chapter (n. 29.) was not till the whole Conſecration was ended, immediately before the Act of Partaking: At which time this ſort of Non-Communicants were diſmiſſed with a ſolemn Prayer, called the Benediction, as appears from the Councils of Orleance and Agde, before referred to. For the Council of Agde gives ſpecial Order [f], that all ſecular Men on the Lord's Day ſhould ſtay to hear Maſs, and not depart before the Biſhop's Benediction. And the Council of Orleance [g] ſays the ſame, that the People ſhould not depart before the Solemnity of the Maſs was ended; that is, till the Conſecration-Prayers were compleated; and then, if the Biſhop were not preſent, they ſhould receive the Benediction of the Prieſt. So that what in Chryſoſtom's time was reckoned a Crime, was preſently after accounted a Piece of Devotion, for the People to ſtay and hear the whole Solemnity of the Service to the time of Communicating, and then they might depart without partaking of the Communion. Which was plainly a Relaxation of the antient Diſcipline, and a Deviation from the primitive Practice.

SECT. III.

When firſt the Uſe of Eulogiæ came in inſtead of the Euchariſt, for ſuch as would not communicate.

AND this brought in another Innovation along with it, that ſuch as would not communicate, might yet partake of the Eulogiæ, or a ſort of conſecrated Bread diſtinct from the Euchariſt. The Eulogiæ in the more antient Writers, is the very ſame with the Euchariſt, and uſed by them to ſignify the ſame Thing as St. Paul means, when he ſays, The Cup of Bleſſing, ποτήριον τῆς εὐλογίας, which we bleſs, is it not the Communion of the Blood of Chriſt? 1 Cor. x. 16. And ſo it is always uſed by Cyril of Alexandria and Chryſoſtom, as learned Men [h] have obſerved out of many places of their Writings. But in After-ages it was diſtinguiſhed from the Euchariſt, as ſomething that after a ſort ſupplied the room of it. The Council of Nante [i], about the Year 890, ordered the Presbyters to keep ſome part of the Peoples Oblations till after the Service, that ſuch as were not prepared to communicate, might on every Feſtival and Lord's Day receive ſome of this Eulogia, when bleſſed with a proper Benediction. Some Collectors of the Canons [k] aſcribe this Decree to Pope Pius the Martyr, who lived in the ſecond Century: But Bona ingenuouſly owns [l] that to be a Forgery, and ſays farther, that the Men who father this Decree upon him, conſidered not that in his time there was no ſuch Thing as this kind of Eulogia in the Church, about which Tertullian, Cyprian, and all their Co-temporaries are altogether ſilent; becauſe in thoſe Days all that were preſent at the Sacrifice, were wont to communicate; but theſe Eulogiæ were invented in After-ages for thoſe who could not or would not be Partakers of the Holy Myſteries. This is an ingenuous Confeſſion of that learned Writer, who, where the Cauſe of his Church is not deeply concerned, commonly ſpeaks his Mind with a great deal of Freedom, and uſes a juſt Liberty in taxing the Innovations of the Monks and School-men.

SECT. IV.

The Corruption of private and ſolitary Maſs, unknown to former Ages.

BUT in the Buſineſs of private or ſolitary Maſs, where the Credit and Intereſt of the Roman Church is more immediately concerned, he acts a little more like an Artiſt, and labours to palliate what he cannot either heartily or ſolidly defend. That we call ſolitary Maſs, where the Prieſt receives alone without any another Communicants, and ſometimes ſays the Office alone without any Aſſiſtants: Such are all thoſe private and ſolitary Maſſes in the Roman Church, which are ſaid at their private Altars in the Corners of their Churches, without the Preſence of any but the Prieſt alone; and all thoſe publick Maſſes, where none but the Prieſt receives, though there be many Spectators of the Action. As there is no Agreement of either of theſe with the Inſtitution of Chriſt, but a direct Oppoſition to it: (For that was deſigned to be a Communion among many: We being many are one Bread and one Body; for we are all Partakers of that one Bread: Which is impoſſible where there are no Communicants:) So there is not the leaſt Footſtep of any ſuch Practice in the Primitive Church. Bellarmin offers faintly ſome poor Conjectures about it, [f] Conc. Agathen. can. 44. Miſſas die Dominica Secularibus audire ſpeciali Ordine præcipimus, ita ut ante Benedictionem Sacerdotis egredi populus non præſumat, &c. [g] Conc. Aurelian. 1. can. 28. Cum ad celebrandas Miſſas in Dei nomine convenitur, populus non ante diſcedat, quam Miſſæ ſolennitas compleatur: Et ubi Epiſcopus non fuerit, Benedictionem accipiat ſacerdotis. [h] Vid. Caſaubon. Exercit. 16. in Baron. n. 33. Albertin. de Euchariſt. p. 749. Suicer. Theſaur. Eccleſ. voce εὐλογία. And Bona himſelf owns it. [i] Conc. Nannetens. can. 9. Partes inciſas habeat in vaſe nitido & convenienti, ut poſt Miſſarum Solennia, qui communicare non fuerint parati, Eulogias omni die Dominico, & in diebus Feſtis exinde accipiant, quæ cum Benedictione prius faciat. [k] Crab. Conc. tom. 1. p. 87. [l] Bona. Rer. Liturg. lib. 1. cap. 23. n. 12.

whilſt

whilſt he fairly owns [m], that there is no expreſs Teſtimony to be found among the Ancients, that they ever offered the Sacrifice without the Communion of one or more Perſons beſide the Prieſt. All his Conjectures are meer Trifles, and the firſt of them directly againſt himſelf. For he would have his Reader conjecture from the Council of Nante cited by Ivo [n], that the Ancients allowed of ſolitary Maſs by the Prieſt alone, becauſe that Council takes Occaſion to mention the Practice, only to forbid and cenſure it. Which it does in very ſevere Terms, which it will not be amiſs here to tranſcribe, to ſhew what Oppoſition the Corruption met with, as ſoon as it began to appear among the Monks, who were the firſt Inventors of it. The holy Council, ſay they, gives ſtrict Order, that no Presbyter ſhall preſume to celebrate Maſs by himſelf alone. For to whom ſhall he ſay, The Lord be with you; or Lift up your Hearts; or Let us give Thanks to our Lord God; when there is none to anſwer him? Or how ſhall he ſay thoſe Words in the Canon it ſelf, All that are here preſent, when there is no one preſent with him? Or whom does he invite to pray, when he ſays, Let us pray; when there is no one to pray with him? Therefore he muſt either paſs over theſe Things in Silence; and ſo not only make the Sacrifice imperfect, and incur that terrible Sentence which ſays, If any one ſhall take away from this, God ſhall take away his Part out of the Book of Life: Or elſe, if he mutters theſe Things to the bare Stones and Walls, it will be ridiculous. Therefore this dangerous Superſtition is by all means to be exterminated, eſpecially out of the Monaſteries of the Monks. And let all Prelates take care, that the Presbyters in Convents and other Churches have always ſome Fellow-workers or Attendants in the Celebration of Maſs. One muſt needs conclude, that Bellarmin was driven to very hard Shifts in Defence of a deſperate Cauſe, when he was forced to alledge this Canon as a Proof of the Practice of ſolitary Maſs among the Ancients, which does not ſo much as prove it to be a lawful Practice among the Moderns, but is ſuch a flaming Evidence againſt it, as a Novelty, that makes Nonſenſe of all their Service, and makes them ſpeak to the Walls, and is by all means to be exterminated out of the Monaſteries, where it firſt began, as a dangerous and ridiculous Superſtition. Cardinal Bona is not much happier than Bellarmin in his Management of this Point. For in one Chapter he undertakes [o] to prove ſolitary Maſs a Novelty, unknown to the antient Church, and againſt the very Tenour of the preſent Roman Canon: And in the very next Chapter he pretends to prove, that private Maſs, without Communicants, or Aſſiſtants, is a very antient and laudable practice. Firſt he tells us, that the very Tenour of the Maſs, and the Practice of the antient Church evince, that the Sacrifice was originally inſtituted principally to be publickly and ſolemnly performed by the Clergy and People ſtanding, offering and communicating together [p]. For all the Prayers, and the very Words of the Canon are ſpoken in the Plural Number, as in the Name of many. Hence it is, that the Prieſt inviting the People to pray, ſays, Let us pray. And when he ſalutes them, he ſays, The Lord be with you. And then the People being admoniſhed to lift up their Hearts unto God, anſwer, We lift them up unto the Lord. Hence it is, that in the very Canon he always prays in the Name of the People gathered together; of which giving ſeveral Inſtances, he infers, that from thence it is clear, that the Maſs is nothing elſe but the Action of the Prieſt and whole Congregation; which he ſays, is prov'd farther from thoſe Words of the Prayer, Omnium circumſtantium, &c. All that ſtand here, whoſe Faith and Devotion is known to Thee: Which cannot be wreſted to any other Senſe. And that all that were preſent did communicate, he ſays appears from thoſe Words of the Prieſt, when he prays, That the Body and Blood of Chriſt may be to all that receive to Eternal Life. And after the Communion, he ſays, What we have received with our Mouths, let us receive with a pure Mind: And, Thou haſt filled Thy Family with Thy Gifts: And almoſt all the Prayers, which are ſaid after Communicating, are of the ſame Tenour, becauſe no others could be preſent but ſuch as could offer and partake of the Sacrament. Which he proves from Cyprian and Pope Leo, and the Apoſtolical Canons, and the Council of Antioch. To theſe he adds the Teſtimonies of Micrologus, and Odo Cameracenſis, and Stephanus Eduenſis, concerning the ſame Practice of the Primitive Church, which they own was different from that of their own Times, when ſolitary Maſs was brought in by the Monks. Nay, he adds, that ſolitary Maſs was forbidden by ſeveral Councils and Canons expreſsly, when it began to appear. Among which he relates the forementioned Canon of the Council of Nante, and the Council of Mets under Leo III. Can. 43. and the Capitular of the Kings of France, collected by Benedictus Levita, lib. 5. cap. 93. and the Capitular of Theodulphus Aurelianenſis, cap. 7. And the Synodical Epiſtle of Ratherius Veronenſis, publiſhed by Dacherius. Spicileg. Tom. II. And the Synod of Paris under Gregory IV. An. 829. Which is moſt remarkable, becauſe it ſhews us both the Original, and the Grounds and Motives that introduced this Corruption. A very culpable Cuſtom, ſay they, is crept in [m] Bellarmin. de Miſſa. lib. 2. cap: 9. p. 821. Nuſquam expreſſe legitur à Veteribus oblatum Sacrificium ſine Communione alicujus vel aliquorum præter ipſum Sacerdotem. [n] Conc. Nannetenſ. apud Ivonem. Part. 3. cap. 70. Definivit Sanctum Concilium, ut nullus Presbyter ſolus præſumat Miſſam celebrare. Cui enim dicit, Dominus vobiſcum, ſurſum Corda, aut Gratias agamus Domino Deo noſtro, cum nullus ſit qui reſpondeat?—— Si hæc muris & parietibus inſuſurraverit, ridiculoſum erit. Quapropter illa periculoſa Superſtitio maxime à Monaſteriis Monachorum exterminanda eſt, &c. [o] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 1. cap. 13. n. 2. [p] Et quidem ab initio ſic Sacrificium principaliter inſtitutum fuiſſe, ut publice ac ſolenniter fieret, Clero & Populo aſtante, offerente, ac communicante, ipſe Tenor Miſſæ & Veteris Eccleſiæ Praxis evincunt, &c.

in

in many Places [q], partly by Negligence, and partly by Covetouſneſs, which ought by all means to be reformed, that ſome Presbyters celebrate Maſs without any Attendants. Whence it is proper to convene, and ask every ſuch buiſy Conſecrator of the Body and Blood of the Lord, to whom he uſes thoſe Words, The Lord be with you? And who anſwers him, And with Thy Spirit? Or for whom he ſupplicates the Lord, when he ſays among other Things, Remember thoſe that ſtand about me; when there are none ſtanding about him? Which Cuſtom therefore, being contrary to Apoſtolical and Eccleſiaſtical Authority, and bringing a Reproach upon ſo great a Myſtery, it ſeems good to us all in common to inhibit it for the future; and that every Biſhop take Care, that no Presbyter within his Dioceſe ſhall preſume to celebrate Maſs by himſelf alone Bona owns, that all theſe Councils prohibited ſolitary Maſs upon this Ground, that it made all ſuch Expreſſions as thoſe, The Lord be with you; and, Lift up your Hearts, &c. to be Nonſenſe and abſurd. And he adds ſome Canons out of Gratian [r] under the Name of Pope Soter and Anacletus, which ordain, That no Presbyter ſhould preſume to celebrate Maſs, except there be at leaſt two preſent beſide himſelf. Upon which he takes Occaſion to make this juſt Reflection, that theſe could not be the Decrees of thoſe antient Biſhops, becauſe [s] ſolitary Maſs was a thing never heard of in their Age, and he could not think they would make Laws to take away an Abuſe, which crept not in till ſome Ages after among the Monks. Would it not now perfectly amaze a Man after all this, to hear the ſame Author declare in the very firſt Words of his next Chapter, that the laudable Cuſtom of private Maſs, without any Communicants, or the preſence of any but one Prieſt, was always the practice of the Church? And that the Hereticks who hate Liturgy (ſo he wrongfully [t] ſlanders the Proteſtants) could never demonſtrate that it was prohibited; when he himſelf has ſo fully demonſtrated it to their Hands. But now he will undertake to demonſtrate on the contrary, that private Maſs, in whatever Senſe we take it, was always lawful and in uſe, from the moſt approved Teſtimonies and Examples of the primitive Fathers. And yet when he comes to the Proof, he offers not ſo much as one Inſtance of that ſort of private Maſs, where the Prieſt miniſters alone without the Preſence of the People, which is called ſolitary Maſs, though he approves of it; nor ſays he any thing material for that ſort of private Maſs, where the Prieſt partakes without any other Communicants, though in the Preſence of all the People; but only urges a miſtaken Paſſage of Chryſoſtom (urged before by Bellarmin and Harding, and anſwered by Chamier) where he ſays, In vain do we ſtand at the Altar, in vain is the daily Sacrifice offered, there is [u] no one that communicates. As if Chryſoſtom had had neither Presbyter, nor Deacon, nor any of the People to communicate with him above once a Year in the great Churches of Antioch or Conſtantinople, becauſe many were ſo negligent as not to communicate oftner; whom he juſtly reproves in an hyperbolical way of ſpeaking, which does not mean that he communicated by himſelf alone, but that many were guilty of a groſs Neglect, whilſt others, as Chryſoſtom himſelf ſays, were more aſſiduous and zealous. And yet this is one of the beſt Proofs Bona can give after all his Boaſts of Demonſtration; which ſhews, that he was as hard put to it to defend an indefenſible Cauſe, as Pope Innocent III. was, when to anſwer the Objection that is urged in this very Argument, How the Prieſt can ſay, Orate pro me Fratres, Pray for me Brethren; ſeeing he is alone without Aſſiſtants? he is forced to ſay [x], That it is piouſly to be believed, that the Angels of God are our Aſſociates in Prayer. Which Anſwer does not untie the Knot [y]: For though they are preſent, they are not preſent as Communicants to eat and drink with us the Body and Blood of Chriſt. Neither can the Prieſt be ſuppoſed to ſay to the Angels, Take, eat, this is my Body; according to Chriſt's Command. Evident therefore it is beyond all Contradiction, that whether we conſider the Inſtitution it ſelf; or the Practice of the Apoſtles and the Primitive Church; or the Tenour of all the antient Liturgies, which the Reader may find collected in Chamier [z], with the Teſtimonies of the Fathers upon the Subject; or even the Tenour of the Roman Maſs it ſelf; or the Oppoſition this Corruption met with at its firſt Appearance; the Euchariſt was not intended as a Sacrifice to be offered by a ſingle Prieſt in a Corner without Communicants or Aſſiſtants, or for the Intention, or at the Coſt of ſome particular Perſon paying for it; but for a Communion to the whole Church, as the primitive Church always uſed it; and there is not an Example to be found of the contrary Practice.

[q] Conc. Paris. lib. 1. cap. 48. Irrepſit in pleriſque locis partim Incuria partim Avaritia, reprehenſibilis uſus & congrua emendatione dignus, eo quod nonnulli Presbyterorum ſine Miniſtris Miſſarum ſolennia frequentent. Unde conveniendus, imo interrogandus nobis videtur hujuſmodi Corporis & Sanguinis Domini ſollitarius Conſecrator, quibus dicit, Dominus vobiſcum, & à quo illi reſpondetur, Et cum Spiritu tuo: Vel pro quibus ſupplicando Domino inter cætera, Memento Domine, & Omnium circumſtantium, cum nullus circumſtet, dicit? Quæ conſuetudo, quia Apoſtolicæ & Eccleſiaſticæ authoritati refragatur, & tanto Myſterio quandam Dehonorationem irrogare videtur, omnibus nobis in commune viſum eſt, ut deinceps hujuſmodi uſus inhibeatur, provideatque unuſquiſque Epiſcoporum, ne in ſua Parochia quiſquam Preſbyterorum Miſſam ſolus celebrare præſumat. [r] Grat. De Conſecrat. Diſt. 1. cap. 61. [s] Bona. lib. 1. cap. 13. n. 6. [t] Bona. ibid. cap. 14. n. 1. Semper viguit in Eccleſia Privatæ Miſſæ, uno ſaltem præſente & miniſtrante, laudabilis conſuetudo, quam Hæretici Miſoliturgi aliquando prohibitam fuiſſe nunquam poterunt demonſtrare. Sive enim dicatur Privata ex eo quod ſolus ſacerdos in ea communicet; ſive quia vel unus duntaxat vel pauci ei interſint, ſive alia quacunque ex cauſa: Semper eam licitam, ſemperque in uſu fuiſſe, probatiſſimis Patrum Teſtimoniis & exemplis demonſtrabo. [u] Chryſ. Hom. 3. in Epheſ. [x] Innoc. de Offic. Miſſæ. lib. 2. cap. 25. ap. Juel. Art. 1. p. 51. [y] Bona. lib. 2. cap. 5. n. 1. ſays, This Anſwer of the Pope is piouſly meant, but not ſolid and true. [z] Chamier. de Euchar. lib. 7. chap. 17, 18, 19.

SECT. V. Other Corruptions countenanced ſometime in the Roman Church, as the Miſſa Sicca and Nautica, and thoſe call'd Bifaciata & Trifaciata.

BUT this was not the only Abuſe which crept into the Church in later Ages againſt the antient way of celebrating the Holy Communion. For Bona himſelf [a] takes Notice of two more, which he cenſures as heartily as one could wiſh, tho' they found great Encouragement in their Time. They are Corruptions not commonly met with in other Authors, and therefore I will give the Reader an Account of them from him. The one was called Miſſa Sicca, Dry Maſs, which, he ſays, took its Original from the indiſcreet and private Devotion of ſome, to which the Prieſts were too indulgent. It is a mere Mask and Counterfeit of the true Maſs, properly dry and jejune, as wanting not only the Conſecration, but the Participation of the Body of Chriſt, like that Supper of Wood and Stones, which Lampridius and other Hiſtorians tell us was exhibited by Heliogabalus to his Gueſts. Yet it ſo prevailed, that for ſome time it was not diſpleaſing to holy and learned Men. Gulielmus de Nangiaco the Monk, in his Book of the Actions of St. Lewis, tells how that moſt religious King, returning from beyond Sea into France, had the Body of Chriſt in the Ship with him, and there ordered all the whole Divine Office and the Maſs, except the Canon, to be daily celebrated. Genebrard commends the ſame in his Book of the Apoſtolical Liturgy, cap. 30. for thoſe that cannot be in the Morning at the whole Maſs, and for thoſe that are at Sea, and for the Sick, and for any that are buried in the Afternoon; to which purpoſe he ſays it was uſed in his Time, and he himſelf was preſent at Turin, an. 1587, at the Funeral of a Nobleman, who was buried in the Evening with ſuch a Maſs ſung by a Deacon and a Subdeaaon. Durandus deſcribes the Manner of celebrating it in his Rationale, lib. 4. cap. 1. where he ſays the whole Office may all be uſed except the Canon, although in the Preface the Angels ſeem to be invocated to the Conſecration of the Body and Blood of Chriſt. This, Durantus in his Book de Ritibus lib. 2. cap. 4. ſays, is called the Seamens Maſs, Miſſa Nautica, becauſe it was uſed to be celebrated at Sea and upon the Rivers, where by reaſon of the Motion and Agitation of the Waves the Sacrifice could hardly be offered without danger of Effuſion. Eſtius declaims bitterly againſt it in his thirteenth Theological Oration, and Laurentius Laudmeter lib. 2. de Veteri Clerico & Monacho cap. 84. who both think it began a little before the Time of Guido de Monte Rocherii, who commends and approves it in his Book, called, Manipulus Curatorum, Tract. 4. cap. 7. which he wrote, an. 1333. but they were miſtaken, becauſe, as we have ſeen, it was in Uſe in the Time of King Lewis the Saint, who died An. 1270; and Durantus deſcribes it, who lived at the ſame Time. And Petrus Cantor, who flouriſhed an 1200, mentions it in his Book called, Verbum Abbreviatum, c. 29. where he ſays, Dry Maſs is without the Grace and Moiſture of the conſecrated Euchariſt, and profits the Faithful nothing. Bona adds, that now by the provident Care of Biſhops, he thinks, this Abuſe is abrogated and deſtroyed all over the World. But he forgets to tell his Reader one Thing, which Durantus tells us [b] freely out of Navarre, that the Book called [c] Liber Sacerdotalis, where this Miſſa Nautica is deſcribed, was approved by Leo the tenth, and that St. Antonine ſpeaks of it as uſed at Tholouſe by way of Funeral Office in the Afternoon. By which we may judge, how great Corruptions may creep into the Church, and then gain the Approbation both of their Popes and Saints, by their own Confeſſion. And when it is ſo, they will never want Advocates to plead their Cauſe, and put the Face of Antiquity upon them. As in this very Caſe, though Bona and others cenſure this Abuſe as an Innovation, yet Durantus derives its Original from the Primitive Church, and tells us, it was practiſed at Alexandria in the time of Socrates, becauſe he ſays [d] that on Wedneſdays and Fridays they had the Scriptures read, and Expoſitions made upon them, and all other Things belonging to religious Aſſemblies, except the Celebration of the Myſteries: Which indeed is very true; but altogether foreign to his Purpoſe, unleſs we ſhall ſay, that there can be no Prayers, nor Sermons, nor Pſalmody, nor Reading the Scriptures in the Church, but preſently it muſt be called dry Maſs, that is, uſing the Conſecration-Service without a Conſecration.

The other Corruption, which Bona cenſures as a deteſtable Abuſe, is that which they call Miſſa Bifaciata and Trifaciata, which he ſays, Petrus Cantor, in the forementioned Book, ſharply rebukes. For ſome Prieſts in his Time had got a Trick of throwing many Maſſes into one, ſaying the Maſs of the Day, or ſome ſpecial Maſs as far as the Offertory, and then beginning another as far as the ſame Place; and after that a third and a fourth in the ſame manner. After that they ſaid as many ſecret Prayers as they had begun Maſſes, and then made one Canon ſerve them all, adding as many Collects in the End, as they had repeated in the Beginning. Petrus Cantor aſcribes the Original of this Abuſe to the Covetouſneſs of the Prieſts, who knowing it to be unlawful for them to celebrate more than once in one Day, invented this Grafting of many Maſſes upon one Stock, that by once Celebrating they might ſatisfy the Devotion of many together, who deſired the Sacrifice to be offered for them, by which means they got the Pay of ſeveral Maſſes for one Sacrifice. Theſe Maſſes, Petrus Cantor calls by a barbarous Name, Bifaciatas and Trifaciatas, becauſe they had a double and a triple Face: Which he abominates and deteſts as monſtrous, and contrary to the Inſtitution and [a] Bona. Rer. Liturg. Lib. 1. cap. 15. n. 6. [b] Durant. de Ritib. Lib. 2. cap. 4. n. 8. [c] Navar. de Oratione. Miſcel. 53. Antonin. Part 3. Tit. 13. cap. 6. n. 4. [d] Socrat. Lib. 5. cap. 22.

Cuſtom of the Church. 'Tis great Pity we have not this Book of Petrus Cantor, called his Verbum Abbreviatum, or Short Work, here at hand in ſome of our Libraries. It is a Book ſo rare, that I find no mention made of it in Dr. Cave. But Du Pin gives a ſhort Account [e] of the Author. He ſays, he was a Chanter of the Church of Paris in the Beginning of the thirteenth Century; that he compoſed a Book called The Word abridg'd, a Work of great Renown among the Authors of the next Centuries, of which a Part was written againſt the Proprietary Monks. He likewiſe wrote a Grammar for Divines, very neceſſary for underſtanding the Scriptures; a Book of Diſtinctions; a Treatiſe about ſome Miracles; three Books of the Sacraments, and divers Sermons, mentioned by Trithemius. Du Pin adds, that in their Libraries they had his Gloſſes upon the Bible, and A Collection of Caſes of Conſcience. But none of them are printed beſide the Verbum Abbreviatum. Trithemius [f] ſays he was a Biſhop afterwards, as he had heard reported, and he gives him this Character, that he was excellently well learned in the Scriptures, and eminent in all Philoſophical Knowledge; that he was Rector of the Theological School at Paris for many Years, where he trained up many eminent Diſciples. Were his Books now to be ſeen, we might doubtleſs find many other ſuch Abuſes of the Monks as ſeverely handled in them, as thoſe which we have here noted out of Bona.

Whilſt I am upon this Head of Abuſes, the Reader will not be diſpleaſed, if I note another of this Kind, which Baronius himſelf takes notice of [g] out of the 17th Council of Toledo, where there is a Canon to cenſure and correct it. Some Prieſts in Spain were ſo corrupt as to gratify revengeful Men by ſaying the Service of the Dead for the Living, for no other End, but that they for whom the Office was ſaid might incur the Danger of Death, by having a Sacrifice offered for them; and ſo that which was deſigned for Mens Salvation, was perverſely abuſed at the Inſtigation of wicked Men to their Deſtruction. Againſt ſuch Compliers with the deteſtable Requeſts of wicked Men, the Council [h] pronounces the ſevere ſentence of Depoſition and Excommunication. We may alſo note another Abuſe mentioned in the twelfth Council of Toledo [i], which was, that ſome Prieſts having Occaſion to conſecrate the Euchariſt more than once in a Day, would not communicate themſelves every time, but only at the laſt Conſecration. Which was another Sort of private Maſs, but as it were the Reverſe of that of the Romiſh Church. For as now the Prieſt communicates without the People: (pardon the Abſurdity of the Expreſſion, when I call that Communicating where there is no Communion:) So then the People were forced to communicate without the Prieſt: Both which the Council thought prepoſterous and abſurd, and therefore re-inforces the antient Diſcipline, that both Prieſt and People ſhould communicate together: Which was ever the conſtant and univerſal Practice of the whole Primitive Church, to whoſe Laws and Rules about Communicants, leaving theſe Abuſes and Innovations, I now return.

SECT. VI. The Communion not given to Hereticks and Schiſmaticks without Confeſſion and Reconciliation.

As all Perſons were obliged to receive the Communion conſtantly, who were within the Pale of the Church in the largeſt Acceptation of the Word, except Catechumens and excommunicate Perſons: So we muſt note, to avoid Ambiguity, that Hereticks and Schiſmaticks were commonly ranked in the ſame Claſs with excommunicate Perſons; ſometimes being formally cut off from the Church by her Cenſures, and ſometimes voluntarily by their own Separation; and therefore till they had made Confeſſion and Renunciation of their Errors, and were reconciled by Impoſition of Hands and Abſolution, they were reckoned in the number of thoſe to whom the Communion of Prayers and this Holy Sacrament was denied; and that whether they had been baptized in the Church, or were baptized in Hereſy and Schiſm. Sometimes they were allowed with all others to hear the Scriptures read, and the Sermon preached, as has been ſhewed [†] in a former Book: But then when the Service of the Catechumens was over, they were obliged to depart with them; the Deacon's Admonition commonly running in theſe Terms, as we have often heard before, Let no Catechumen, no Penitent, no Unbeliever, no Heretick or Heterodox Perſon be preſent at the Holy Myſteries. After what manner they were received and reconcil'd upon their Confeſſions, belongs to another Subject; which has in ſome meaſure been handled already [k], and will come again under Conſideration in the next Volume, when we treat of the Diſcipline of the Church: At preſent it is ſufficient to obſerve, that whilſt they continued in Hereſy or Schiſm, they were of the Number of thoſe to whom the Church refuſed to give the Sacrament, as Perſons not being in full Communion with her.

SECT. VII. Yet given to Infants and Children for ſeveral Ages.

On the other hand it is beyond Diſpute, that as ſhe baptized Infants, and gave them the Unction of Chriſm with Impoſition of Hands for Confirmation, ſo ſhe immediately

[e] Du Pin. Biblioth. Cent. 13. p. 54. [f] Trithem. de Scriptor. p. 81. [g] Baron. an. 694. n. 9.

[h] Conc. Tolet. 17. can. 5. Miſſam pro requie Defunctorum promulgatam fallaci voto pro vivis ſtudent celebrare hominibus, non ob aliud, niſi ut is, pro quo idipſum offertur Officium, ipſius ſacroſancti libaminis interventu, mortis ac perditionis incurrat periculum: & quod cunctis datum eſt in ſalutis remedium, illi hoc perverſo inſtinctu quibuſdam eſſe expetunt in interitum, &c.

[i] Conc Tolet. 12. can. 5. Quale erit illud Sacrificium cui nec ipſe Sacrificans particeps eſſe cognoſcitur? Ergo modis omnibus eſt tenendum, ut quotieſcunque Sacrificans corpus & ſanguinem Jeſu Chriſti Domini noſtri in altario immolat, toties perceptionis corporis & ſanguinis Chriſti particpem ſe præbeat. Vid. Gratian. De Conſecrat. Diſt. 2. cap. 10. [†] Book XIII. Chap. i. n. 2. [k] Scholaſt. Hiſt. of Baptiſm. Part 1. chap. 1. n. 21.

diately admitted them to a Participation of the Euchariſt, as ſoon as they were baptized, and ever after without Exception. Some Evidence has been given of this already, for at leaſt eight Centuries, in ſpeaking of Confirmation [†], out of Gennadius and Alcuin, and the Ordo Romanus, and Jeſſe Ambianenſis, and other publick Offices of the Church containing the Rules of Baptiſm and Confirmation, where Orders are alſo given to communicate Infants as ſoon as they were baptized. Here I will add the Teſtimony of the more antient Writers, that it may not be thought a Novelty and Invention of latter Ages. [l] Cyprian often mentions it as the common Practice: In his Book of thoſe that lapſed in time of Perſecution, he ſpeaks of ſome Parents, who took their little Children in their Arms, when they went to ſacrifice at the Heathen Altars: And he brings in thoſe Infants thus complaining: We did nothing our ſelves, neither did we leave the Bread and Cup of the Lord to run of our own accord to the profane Contagions: It was the Treachery of others that deſtroyed us, we fell by the Hands of our Parents. A little farther he ſpeaks of another Infant, who was carried by her Nurſe, unknown to her Parents, to the Magiſtrates to partake of the Idol Sacrifice; who when ſhe was brought by her Mother afterwards [m] to receive the Euchariſt, vomited up the Wine that was given her to drink in the Communion. By which it is undeniable that Infants were then admitted to communicate in both Kinds, if they were capable of receiving them. Upon this Account the Author of the Conſtitutions [n] in his Invitation of the Faithful to the Communion, bids Mothers bring their Children with them. And again [o], deſcribing the Order in which they communicated, he ſays, Firſt let the Biſhops receive, then the Presbyters, Deacons, Subdeacons, Readers, Singers, and Aſceticks; among the Women, the Deaconeſſes, Virgins and Widows; after that the Children, and then all the People in their Order. The Author under the Name of Dionyſius [p] ſays the ſame, that Children were admitted not only to Baptiſm, but the Euchariſt, though they did not underſtand the Reaſons of either Myſtery. St. Auſtin not only mentions the Practice in Cyprian's Time [q], citing the foreſaid Paſſages out of his Book De Lapſis; but alſo ſeems to ſay it was neceſſary for Infants in order to obtain eternal Life; grounding upon that Saying of our Saviour, Joh. vi. Except ye eat the Fleſh of the Son of Man, and drink his Blood [r], ye have no Life in you. Which, he ſays, is to be underſtood not of the Sacrament of Baptiſm, but of the Sacrament of the Lord's-Table, where no one is rightly admitted but he that is baptized. And dare any one be ſo bold, as to ſay, that this Sentence does not appertain to little Children, or that they can have Life without partaking of this Body and Blood? He repeats the ſame frequently in his Diſputes with the Pelagians [s], and his Sermons on the Words of the Apoſtle [t], and in his Epiſtle to Boniface, [u] written joyntly by him and Alipius againſt the Pelagians. And Pope Innocent his Co-temporary ſeems to have had the ſame Opinion: For he argues in his Epiſtle to St. Auſtin and the Council of Milevis [x] for the Neceſſity of Baptizing Infants, from the Neceſſity of their eating the Fleſh, and drinking the Blood of the Son of Man. There is great Diſpute among the Romiſh Doctors about the Senſe of St. Auſtin and this Pope Innocent upon this point. Bona [y] and others think it would be a great Reproach to their Church, to have it thought that the Council of Trent ſhould condemn the Opinion of the Neceſſity of Communicating Infants, whilſt two ſuch great Men as St. Auſtin and their own Pope Innocent were conceived to be of that Opinion: And therefore they ſay, though the Ancients gave the Communion to Infants, yet they did not think it neceſſary to Salvation. This is the Salvo which the Council of Trent put into their Mouths: For having condemned the Opinion itſelf as Heretical; yet to bring off the Antient Church, which was known to practiſe it, ſhe adds [z], We do not hereby intend to condemn Antiquity for obſerving this Cuſtom in ſome Places. For as thoſe holy Fathers had a probable Reaſon, conſidering the State of the Times they lived in, for their Practice; ſo it is certainly and without all Controverſy to be believed, that they did not do it upon any Opinion of its being neceſſary to Salvation. But Maldonate would not take the Council's Word for this: For without any Regard to their Interpretation or Authority, he aſſerts roundly, that the Ancients, and particularly St. Auſtin, and Pope Innocent, did believe, that Infants could not be ſaved without partaking of the Euchariſt [†], and that they were induced to believe this by thoſe Words of our Saviour, Except ye eat the Fleſh of the Son of Man and drink his Blood, ye have no Life in you. And indeed any one that reads but with half an Eye the Teſtimonies of St. Auſtin now alledged (which Bona thought fit to conceal from his Reader, only making a ſhort Reference to ſome of them) may eaſily perceive what was his Opinion in the Matter. And it were abſurd to think, that the whole Primitive Church Greek and Latin from St. Cyprian's Time, ſhould give the Communion to Infants without imagining any manner of Neceſſity from any Divine Command to do it. But Bona endeavours to ſupport his and the Council's Senſe from the Authority of Fulgentius, who was one of St. Auſtin's Diſciples, and who, as he repreſents him, ſays, that actual Communion after Baptiſm is not neceſſary to Salvation. But he only abuſes his Reader with a falſe State of the Caſe, and a falſe Aſſertion grounded on it. For Fulgentius does not ſay that the actual Participation of the Euchariſt is not neceſſary after Baptiſm for Infants: For he is not ſpeaking of Infants, but Adult Perſons, who die as ſoon as they are baptized, without having Opportunity to receive the Communion: Concerning whom he concludes favourably, that though they die before they receive outwardly the Elements of Bread and Wine, yet they are not to be deſpaired of, becauſe they were made Partakers of the Body and Blood of Chriſt in Baptiſm: Which in ſuch Caſes of great Neceſſity [a] was ſufficient to anſwer the End of the Communion, when Men were deſirous of it, but had no Opportunity to receive it. So that he believed the Euchariſt ordinarily to be neceſſary both for Infants and Adult Perſons, but in extraordinary Caſes of extreme Neceſſity, not to be neceſſary for either.

[†] Book XII. Chap. i. n. 2. [l] Cypr. de Lapſis. p. 125. Infantes quoque Parentum manibus vel impoſiti vel attracti, amiſerunt parvuli, quod in primo ſtatim nativitatis exordio fuerant conſecuti. Nonne illi, cum judicii dies venerit, dicent: Nos nihil fecimus, nec derelicto Cibo & Poculo Domini ad profana contagia ſponte properavimus. Perdidit nos aliena perfidia, Parentes ſenſimus Parricidas. [m] Ibid. p. 132. In corpore atque ore violato Euchariſtia permanere non potuit. Sanctificatus in Domini Sanguine potus de pollutis viſceribus erupit. [n] Conſt. lib. 8. cap. 12. [o] Ibid. cap. 13. [p] Dionyſ. Eccl. Hierar. cap. 7. p. 360. [q] Aug. Ep. 23. ad Bonifac. [r] Aug. de Peccator. Merit. lib. 1. cap. 20. Dominum audiamus non quidem hoc de Sacramento Sancti Lavacri dicentem, ſed de Sacramento Sanctæ Menſæ ſuæ, quo nemo rite niſi baptizatus accedit, Niſi manducaveritis carnem meam, &c. An vero quiſquam audebit etiam hoc dicere, quod ad Parvulos hæc ſententia non pertineat, poſſuntque ſine participatione corporis hujus & ſanguinis in ſe habere vitam? [s] Cont. duas Epiſt. Pelag. lib. 1. cap. 22. Nec illud cogitatis, eos vitam habere non poſſe qui fuerint expertes corporis & ſanguinis Chriſti, dicente ipſo, Niſi manducaveritis, &c. [t] Serm. 8. de Verbis Apoſtoli, p. 110. Infantes ſunt, ſed menſæ ejus participes fiunt, ut habeant in ſe vitam. [u] Ep. 106. ad Bonifac. p. 185. Nullus qui ſe meminit Catholicæ fidei Chriſtianum, negat aut dubitat Parvulos non accepta gratia regenerationis in Chriſto ſine cibo carnis ejus & ſanguinis potu, non habere in ſe vitam. [x] Innoc. Ep. 93. inter Epiſt. Auguſtini. Parvulos æternæ vitæ premiis etiam ſine Baptiſmatis gratia donari poſſe, perfatuum eſt: Niſi enim manducaverint ſanguinem ejus, non habebunt vitam in ſemetipſis. [y] Bona rer. Liturg. lib. 2. cap. 19. n. 1. [z] Conc. Trident. Seſſ. 21. cap. 4. Neque ideo tamen damnanda eſt Antiquitas, ſi eum morem in quibuſdam locis ſervavit. Ut enim ſanctiſſimi illi Patres ſui facti probabilem cauſam pro illius temporis ratione habuerunt; ita certe eos nulla ſalutis neceſſitate id feciſſe ſine controverſia credendum eſt.

But to ſet aſide the Queſtion of Right, and only purſue Matter of Fact, we find that this Cuſtom continued even in the Roman Church for many Ages: Maldonate ſays for ſix Centuries, but Bona makes it double the Number; for he ſays, it was not abrogated in France till the twelfth Century. In Gregory's Sacramentarium [b] there is an Order concerning Infants, That they ſhould be allowed to ſuck the Breaſt before the holy Communion, if Neceſſity ſo required. And the old Ordo Romanus [c], a Book compoſed in the ninth Century, has a Direction to the ſame Purpoſe; That Infants after they were baptized, ſhould not eat any Food, nor ſuck the Breaſt without great Neceſſity, 'till they had communicated in the Sacrament of the Body of Chriſt. So Alcuin, or whoever wrote under his Name in the Time of Charles the Great, ſays, the Order then was [d], That when Infants were baptized, they were immediately confirmed by the Biſhop, if he were preſent, and admitted to communicate; but if the Biſhop was abſent, they ſhould receive the Communion from the Presbyter. Baluzius [e] alledges two Manuſcript Pontificals of the ſame Age, which have Rubricks to the ſame Purpoſe. And the Orders of Jeſſe Biſhop of Amiens [f] call it Confirming Children with the Body and Blood of Chriſt, as they were confirmed before with Impoſition of Hands and Chriſm. And it is remarkable of Walter Biſhop of Orleance in the ſame Age, that among his Synodical Rules there is one to this Purpoſe: That a Presbyter [g] ſhall always have the Euchariſt ready by him, that in caſe any one be infirm, or a young Child ſick, he may give him the Communion, and not let him die without his Viaticum or Proviſion for his Journey into the next World. The ſecond Council of Maſcon, which was held An. 588, and the third Council of Tours [h], in the Time of Charles the Great, order the Remains of the Euchariſt to be given to innocent Children. Radulphus Ardens, who lived in the beginning of the twelfth Century, ſpeaks of it ſtill as the Cuſtom to give little Children [i] the Sacrament, at leaſt in the ſpecies of Wine, immediately after they were baptized, that they might not go without the neceſſary Sacrament. And Hugo de Sancto Victore at the ſame time recommends the giving of it to Children [k], if it might be done without Danger: Tho' he intimates now the Cuſtom was almoſt generally laid aſide; there being only a mere Form and Shadow of it remaining, which was to give Children newly baptized common Wine inſtead of conſecrated, which he thinks a ſuperfluous Rite that ought to be laid aſide. And ſo it was, not long after: For Odo Biſhop of Paris, An. 1175, [†] Maldonat. Com. in Joan. 6. 53. p. 326. [a] Fulgent. de Baptiſmo Æthiopis. cap. 11. p. 611. Nullus debet moveri Fidelium in illis, qui etſi legitime ſana mente baptizantur, præveniente velocius morte, carnem Domini manducare, & ſanguinem bibere non ſinuntur, propter illam videlicet ſententiam ſalvatoris qua dixit, Niſi manducaveritis carnem Filii hominis, &c. Quod quiſquis—— Myſterii veritatem conſiderare poterit, in ipſo Lavacro ſanctæ Regenerationis hoc fieri providebit. [b] Gregor. Sacramentar. in Officio Sabbati Sancti. Non prohibentur lactari ante ſacram Communionem, ſi neceſſe fuerit. [c] Ordo Rom. Bibl. Patr. T. 10. p. 84. De Parvulis providendum, ne poſtquam baptizati fuerint, ullum cibum accipiant, neque lactentur ſine ſumma neceſſitate, antequam communicent Sacramento corporis Chriſti.

[d] Alcuin. de Officiis. Cap. de Sabbato Sancto. ibid. p. 259. Si Epiſcopus adeſt, ſtatim confirmari oportet (Infans tinctus) Chriſmate, & poſtea communicare: Et ſi Epiſcopus deeſt, communicetur à Presbytero, &c. Sed & hoc providendum eſt ut nullum cibum accipiant, neque lactentur antequam communicent.
[e] Baluz. Not. in Reginonem. lib. 1. cap. 69. [f] Jeſſe Ambianenſis Epiſt. de Ordine Bapt. ap. Baluz. ibid. Epiſcopus Puerum Chriſmate confirmet; noviſſime autem corpore & ſanguine Chriſti confirmetur ſeu communicetus, ut Chriſti membrum eſſe poſſit. [g] Walter. Aurelian. Capitul. 7. Conc. Tom. 8. p. 639. Presbyter Euchariſtiam ſemper habeat paratam, ut quando quis infirmatus fuerit, aut Parvulus ægrotaverit, ſtatim eum communicet, ne ſine Viatico moriatur. The ſame is in Anſegiſus Abbas de Legibus Francorum. lib. 1. cap. 155. al. 161. [h] Conc. Matiſcon. 2. can. 6. Conc. Turon. 3. can. 19. [i] Radulph. Serm. in Die Paſchæ. de Euchariſtiæ neceſſitate Statutum eſt ut pueris mox baptizatis ſaltem in ſpecie vini tradatur, ne ſine neceſſario ſacramento diſcedant. [k] Hugo de S. Victore, de Sacrament. lib. 1. cap. 20.

ordered,

ordered, That neither conſecrated nor unconſecrated Bread ſhould by any means be given to little Children [l]. And ſo ſays Bona [m], The Cuſtom of giving the Communion to Infants was ſuperſeded in the twelfth Age in the Gallican Church. It continued a little longer in Germany, if Suicerus does not miſtake [n] in his Author: For he quotes Joannes Semeca, ſirnamed Teutonicus, who wrote the Gloſs upon Gratian, as ſaying, that the Cuſtom prevailed in ſome Places in his Time to give the Euchariſt to Children. But there is no ſuch Gloſs in the Place [o] he alledges, in the Roman Edition; ſo that either he miſtakes the Place, or elſe ſome Fraud has been uſed to expunge the Paſſage by the Roman Correctors. Zuinglius ſpeaks of the Cuſtom continuing long among the Helvetians: For he ſays, in the Ritual Book of Claron, called their Obſequial, there was this Rubrick: That a newly-baptized Child ſhould have [p] the Euchariſt in both Kinds miniſtred unto him. And Hoſpinian aſſures us from his own Knowledge [q], that in Lorrain and the adjacent Parts it was uſual for the Prieſt, when he had baptized a Child, to dip his Fingers in the Cup, and drop the Wine into the Child's Mouth, ſaying, The Blood of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be of Advantage unto thee to Eternal Life.

The Greek Church was a little more tenacious of the antient Cuſtom. For not only Baſilius Cilix [r] and Evagrius [s] and Johannes Moſchus [t] mention the Communion of Children, and the giving the Remains of the Euchariſt to Children after the Communion was ended; but alſo Nicephorus, who lived in the fourteenth Century [u], mentions the ſame: And Suicerus tells us out of Metrophanes Critopulus, a Modern Greek Writer [x], that they ſtill continue to obſerve the Cuſtom to this Day. As he alſo obſerves out of Oſorius de Geſtis Emanuelis, lib. 9. that it continues to be the Practice of the Ethiopick or Abyſſin Churches. And he cites Sigiſmundus Baro's Hiſtory of Muſcovy for the ſame in the Ruſſian Churches. Mr. Brerewood [y] notes the like of the Ruſſian Churches out of Guaguinus. And Dr. Smith [z] tells for the preſent Greek Church, that they give the Euchariſt in both Kinds to little Children of one or two Years of Age, and ſometimes to new-born Infants after Baptiſm, in caſe of imminent danger of Death; grounding their Belief of an abſolute Neceſſity of this Sacrament upon the Words of our Saviour, John vi. 53. Except ye eat the Fleſh, &c. and pleading the Practice of the Primitive Church in their own Juſtification. I have not ſaid any Thing of all this to reduce the Cuſtom into Practice again: (Tho' Biſhop Bedle and ſome others have declared intirely for it:) Becauſe, as Learned [a] Men have ſhewed, there are good Reaſons to perſuade the contrary; 1. Becauſe it has no firm Foundation in the Word of God. 2. Becauſe Infants, which are baptized, are in Effect thereby Partakers of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, which are exhibited ſpiritually in Baptiſm as well as the Euchariſt, according to St. Auſtin himſelf and all the antient Fathers, of which I have made full Proof in another [*] Place. 3. Becauſe Infants cannot do this in Remembrance of Chriſt, which he requires all that partake in this Sacrament to do. 4. Becauſe there is the ſame Analogy and Agreement between the Paſchal Lamb and the Lord's Supper, as there is between Circumciſion and Baptiſm: An Infant Iſraelite had a Right to enter the Covenant by Circumciſion, as it was the Seal of it: But he was not to partake of the Paſſover, till he could ask his Parents the meaning of the Myſtery, Exod. xii. 26. So an Infant may enter the Chriſtian Covenant by Baptiſm, but not partake regularly of the Euchariſt, till he can do it in Remembrance of Chriſt. What I have therefore diſcourſed upon this Head, by deducing the Matter hiſtorically from firſt to laſt, is rather to ſhew the Vanity of that Pretence to Infallibility and unerring Tradition in the Church of Rome in Matters of Doctrine and neceſſary Practice; ſince they themſelves have thought fit to alter one Point, which their infallible Popes and Forefathers for ſo many Ages obſerved as neceſſary, in communicating Infants upon a Divine Command; and withal to ſhew, that any other Church has a better Pretence than they, to reform any Practice, however generally obſerved, if upon better Examination it be found not to be grounded upon a good Foundation in the Word of God. I now return to the Buſineſs of the antient Church;

SECT. VIII. Sent to the abſent Members of their own or other Churches.

WHERE we find that not only the preſent Members were all Communicants, but they that were abſent had it ſent to them by the Hands of a Deacon, to teſtify, that while they were abſent upon any lawful Occaſion, they were ſtill reputed to be in the Communion of the Church. Thus Juſtin Martyr ſays [b] the ſame Euchariſt, which was received by them that were preſent, was carried by the Deacons to the abſent. For as they prayed for thoſe that were abſent upon a probable or reaſonable Cauſe, ſo they allowed them to communicate in the ſame Sacrament alſo. Upon this Account, as we have ſeen before [†], the Euchariſt at Rome in the time of Melchiades, Siricius, and Innocent, was uſually ſent from the Biſhops Church to the Tituli, or leſſer Churches, for the [l] Odo Statut. Synodal. cap. 39. [m] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 2. cap. 19. n. 2. [n] Suicer. Theſaur. Eccleſ. T. 2. p. 1138. [o] Grat. de Conſecrat. Diſt. 4. cap. 4. cited alſo by Hoſpinian. [p] Zuingl. Explanat. Artic. 18. Oper. Tom. 1. Baptizato puero mox detur Euchariſtiæ Sacramentum, ſimiliter & Poculum Sanguinis. [q] Hoſpinian. Hiſt. Sacram. lib. 2. cap. 2. p. 60. [r] Baſil. ap. Photium Cod. 107. [s] Evagr. lib. 4. c. 35. [t] Moſchus, Viridarium. cap. 196. [u] Niceph. lib. 14. c. 25. [x] Suicer. T. 2. p. 1138. Ex Metroph. Confeſſ. Eccl. Orient. cap. 9. [y] Brerewood's Enquiries, cap 18. [z] Smith. Account of the Greek Church, p. 161. [a] Vid. Hoſpin. & Suicer. locis citatis. [*] Book II. Chap. x. n. 4. [b] Juſtin. Apol. 2. p. 98. Vid. Juſtinian. Novel. 123. cap. 36. Aut ſanctam eis Communionem portandam. [†] Book XV. Chap. ii. n. 5.

Presbyters

Presbyters miniſtring in thoſe Churches to communicate with him, and as ſome think [c] for the whole Congregations alſo. For they ſuppoſe, that at firſt there was but one Altar in a City, and That at the Mother Church, where the Biſhop miniſtred, and conſecrated the Euchariſt, and ſent it thence to the leſſer Congregations. And ſo they underſtand even that Paſſage in Juſtin Martyr. I rather think, the Presbyters had the Privilege to conſecrate the Euchariſt in their own Churches; but however a Portion of the Euchariſt was for all that ſent them by the Biſhop from his own Church, to teſtify that they were in Communion with him: He did not ſend to the Country Churches, becauſe the Sacraments were not to be carried to Places at too great a Diſtance, as Innocent words it in his Letter to Decentius. Yet in caſe of teſtifying their Communion with foreign Biſhops, they were wont to ſend it to far diſtant Churches As Irenæus in his Epiſtle to Pope Victor [d], when he menaced the Aſiatick Churches with Excommunication for their different Way of obſerving Eaſter, tells him his Predeceſſors never thought of ſuch rough Proceedings againſt them, but notwithſtanding this Difference always ſent them the Euchariſt, to teſtify their Communion with them. Valeſius [e] and others obſerve the ſame in the Acts [f] of Lucian the Martyr, and Paulinus's [g] Epiſtle to Severus. This was chiefly, if not ſolely done at the Paſchal Feſtival, in token of their Unity, Love and Charity. But the Council of Laodicea [h], for ſome Inconveniencies attending the Practice, abſolutely forbad it; ordering that the Holy Sacraments ſhould not be ſent from one Dioceſe to another under the Notion of Eulogiæ, or Benedictions, at the Eaſter Feſtival. Yet in ſome Places the Cuſtom continued for ſeveral Ages after. For Johannes Moſchus [i] ſpeaks of the Communion being ſent from one Monk to another at ſix Miles diſtance: Not to mention again the Cuſtom of ſending the Euchariſt by Paulinus, and the Biſhops of Rome from the Mother Church to all the other Churches throughout the City in every Region. But where they left off this Cuſtom of ſending the Euchariſt, they introduced another Way of teſtifying their mutual Love and Amity to one another by certain Symbols of Bread, which they bleſſed and ſanctified alſo in Imitation of the Euchariſt, but with a different Benediction. And to theſe alſo they gave the Names of Eulogiæ & Panis benedictus, conſecrated Bread, which the modern Greeks call ἀντίδωρα, vicarious Gifts, becauſe they were given in many Caſes inſtead of the Euchariſt. It has been obſerved [†] already, that they were often given to ſuch as would not communicate, when the antient Fervour of popular and general Communions began to decay. Here we are to obſerve, that they were uſed to be ſent from one Country to another, inſtead of the Euchariſt, as Teſtimonies of their Amity and Affection. Some not improbably [k] thus underſtood that Canon of the Council of Laodicea [l], which forbids any to receive the Eulogiæ, or Bleſſings of Hereticks, which were to be reckoned Curſes and Abſurdities rather than Bleſſings. As alſo that other Canon [m] which forbids them to receive either from Jews or Hereticks, τὰ πεμπόμενα ἑορτασικὰ, ſuch Gifts or Preſents as were uſed to be ſent in Feſtivals. Of this kind was that Bread which Paulinus [n] and Therafia ſent to St. Auſtin as a Teſtimony of their Unanimity and cordial Affection, which they deſire him to bleſs by his Acceptance. Some learned Men miſtake, when they ſay, the ſending of the Euchariſt came in the Room of this: For it was plainly the Reverſe: Theſe Eulogiæ were invented in the Room of the Euchariſt, as appears from the Teſtimony of Irenæus, which ſpeaks of ſending the Euchariſt as the more antient Cuſtom.

SECT. IX. And to thoſe that were Sick, or in Priſon, or under any Confinement, or in Penance at the point of Death.

AMONG the abſent Members of the Church they had a more eſpecial regard to thoſe that were Sick, or in Priſon, or under any Confinement, as the Martyrs and Confeſſors, who daily expected their Diſſolution; and ſuch alſo of the Penitents as were ſeized with Sickneſs and in imminent danger of Death. To all theſe they commonly ſent the Euchariſt, which in this caſe is more peculiarly ſtiled the ἐφόδιον, or Viaticum, their Preparation or Proviſion for their Journey into the next World. Thus in the Council of Nice [o] there is a Canon which orders, that all Penitents ſhould have their neceſſary and final ἐφόδιον or Viaticum, when they were at the point of Death. Which though Albaſpinæus [p] interprets only of Abſolution, yet all others with better Reaſon underſtand it of the Euchariſt, becauſe it is added in the end of the Canon, that the Biſhop ſhall impart the Oblation to them. And ſo the Council of Agde ſays [q], the Viaticum ſhall not be denied to any Penitents at the point of Death. The firſt Council of Vaiſon [r] makes a Proviſion for ſuch Penitents as were ſnatched away by ſudden Death without the Viaticum of the Sacrament, whilſt they were preparing for it, that their Oblations ſhould be received, and their Funerals and Memorials celebrated according to the Rites of the Church.

[c] Maurice of Dioceſan Epiſcopacy, p. 39. [d] Ap. Euſeb. lib. 5. cap. 24. [e] Valeſ. in Locum. [f] Acta Lucian. ap. Metaphraſt. 7. Jan. [g] Paulin. Ep. 1. ad Severum. [h] Conc. Laodic. can. 13. Δεῖ τὸ μὴ τὰ ἅγια εἰς λόγον εὐλογιῶν καὶ τὴν ἑορτὴν τὰ δῶρα εἰς ἑτέρας παροικίας διαπέμπεσθαι. [i] Moſch. Pratum. Spiritual cap. 29. [†] See before in this Chapter, n. 3. [k] Habert. Archieratic. Part. 11. Obſer. 3. [l] Conc. Laodic. can. 31. vel 32. ἃ δεῖ αἱρετικῶν εὐλογίας λαμβάνειν. ἀλλ' ἀποφάσεις εἰσὶν ἀλογίαι μᾶλλον ἢ εὐλογίαι. [m] Ibid. can. 37. [n] Paulin. Ep. 31. inter Epiſt. Aug. Panem unum, quem unanimitatis indicio miſimus charitati tuæ, rogamus accipiendo benedicas. Vid. Aug. Ep. 34. ad Paulinum. [o] Conc. Nic. can. 13. [p] Albaſpin. Not. in Locum. [q] Conc. Agathen. can. 15. Viaticum tamen omnibus in morte poſitis non eſt negandum. [r] Conc. Vaſens 1. can. 2. Nefas eſt eorum commemorationes excludi à ſalutaribus Sacris, qui ad eadem Sacra fideli affectu contendentes—abſque Sacramentorum Viatico intercipiantur, &c.

And

And the 11th Council of Toledo [s] makes another Proviſion for ſuch as by reaſon of extreme Weakneſs could not take the whole Viaticum of the Communion, nor ſwallow the Bread, but only drink the Cup, that ſince this proceeded not from any Infidelity, but from mere Infirmity, they ſhould not be cut off from the Body of the Church. The 4th Council of Carthage mentions it in ſeveral Canons, and in one Canon particularly [t] ſpeaks of a very remarkable Caſe, which ſometimes happened, that a Penitent who deſired to be admitted to Penance in time of Sickneſs, was ſometimes ſuddenly taken ſpeechleſs, or turned delirious by the Paroxyſm of his Diſtemper, before the Prieſt could come to him: In which caſe, if they that heard him, could teſtify his deſire, he was to be admitted: And if it was thought he would immediately die, he was to be reconciled by Impoſition of Hands, and then the Euchariſt was to be poured into his Mouth. Which is called the Viaticum of the Euchariſt [u] in the two following Canons. As it is alſo in the Council of Orange [x], and Girone [y], and many other Places. The Euchariſt in theſe caſes was commonly carried and delivered by a Preſbyter or a Deacon, as has been noted out of Juſtin Martyr: Yet in Caſes of great Neceſſity it might be carried and given by any other. As appears from that Caſe in Euſebius [z] related out of an Epiſtle of Dionyſius Biſhop of Alexandria to Fabian Biſhop of Rome, where he tells of one Serapion, who having ſacrificed in Time of Perſecution, could not die till he had ſent for the Presbyter to reconcile him: But the Preſbyter being ſick, ſent him a ſmall Portion of the Euchariſt by the Hands of the Meſſenger that came for him, giving him orders to dip it firſt and put it into his Mouth, which he had no ſooner done, but the Man gave up the Ghoſt in Peace. But this was forbidden by the Canons [a] in ordinary Caſes.

SECT. X.

The Euchariſt ſometimes conſecrated in private Houſes for theſe Purpoſes.

SOMETIMES indeed they uſed private Conſecrations of the Euchariſt in the Houſes of ſick Men or in Priſons, to anſwer theſe pious Ends and Purpoſes: But moſt commonly they reſerved ſome ſmall Portion of it in the Church from Time to Time for this Uſe, as moſt expeditious and convenient for ſudden Accidents and Emergencies. There are very antient Inſtances and Examples of both Kinds. Cyprian ſpeaks of private Conſecrations made in Priſons for the Martyrs and Confeſſors in time of Perſecution. For he gives Orders, That neither ſhould the People viſit them glomeratim, in great Multitudes, to raiſe Envy; nor the Presbyters, who went to offer [b] the Euchariſt with them, go more than one at once, and that by Turns, accompanied only with a ſingle Deacon, to decline Envy and Obſervation. There is nothing more certain, than that in Times of Perſecution the Chriſtians perfomed all Divine Offices in every Place whither Neceſſity drove them: Every Place was then a Temple, as Dionyſius [c] of Alexandria words it in Euſebius, for them to hold Religious Aſſemblies in, whether it were a Field, or a Wilderneſs, or a Ship, or an Inn, or a Priſon. Lucian's Priſon was his Church, and his own Breaſt his Altar to conſecrate the Euchariſt upon, for himſelf and thoſe that [d] were with him in Confinement. In ſuch a caſe, Tertullian [e] ſays, Three were enough to make a Church, when Neceſſity would not allow them a greater Number. It is as evident private Conſecrations were made in private Houſes upon the account of Sickneſs. St. Ambroſe was thus invited to offer the Sacrifice in a private Houſe at Rome, as we are told by the Writer of his Life [f]. And Paulinus Biſhop of Nola is ſaid to have ordered an Altar to be prepared for himſelf in his Chamber, where he conſecrated the Euchariſt [g] in his Sickneſs not many Hours before his Death. Thus Gregory Nazianzen [h] tells us, That his Father conſecrated it in his own Chamber; and that his Siſter Gorgonia [i] had a Domeſtick Altar. Therefore we have no Diſpute with Bona upon this Point, nor ſhould we have any with his Church, if this were all that were meant by private Maſs in the Roman Communion. The Reader may hence obſerve the Miſtake of thoſe Learned Men [k], who aſſert, That the Primitive Fathers, though paſſionately indulgent towards their ſick Brethren in granting them their ſpiritual Viaticum, yet always took a Care that the Elements ſhould be conſecrated in the Church. For the Inſtances that have been given, both concerning the Martyrs and the Sick, are undeniable Evidence to the contrary. And there want not ſome Inſtances of private Conſecrations upon other Occaſions. Such as that mentioned by St. Auſtin in a private Houſe at Zubedi, [s] Conc. Tolet. 11. can. 11. In multorum exitu vidimus, qui optatum ſuis votis ſacræ Communionis Viaticum expetentes, collatam ſibi à Sacerdote Euchariſtiam rejecerunt. Non quod Infidelitate hæc agerent, ſed quod præter Dominici Calicis hauſtum, traditam ſibi non poſſent Euchariſtiam deglutire. Non ergo hujuſmodi à corpore Eccleſiæ ſeparandi ſunt, &c. [t] Conc. Carth. 4. can. 76. Is qui pœnitentiam in infirmitate petit, ſi caſu, dum ad eum ſacerdos invitatus venit, oppreſſus infirmitate obmutuerit, vel in phreneſim verſus fuerit, dent teſtimonium qui eum audierunt, & accipiat pœnitentiam. Et ſi continuo creditur moriturus, reconcilietur per manus Impoſitionem, & infundatur ori ejus Euchariſtia, &c. [u] Can. 77. Pœnitentes qui in Infirmitate ſunt, Viaticum accipiant. Can. 78. Pœnitentes qui in Infirmitate Viaticum acceperint, non ſe credant abſolutos ſine manus Impoſitione, ſi ſupervixerint. [x] Conc. Araſican. 1. can. 3. [y] Conc. Gerundens. can. 9. [z] Euſeb. lib. 6. cap. 44. [a] Vid. Gratian. de Conſecr. Diſt. 2. cap. 29. [b] Cypr. Ep. 5. ad Cler. p. 11. Presbyteri quoque, qui illic apud Confeſſores offerunt, ſinguli cum ſingulis Diaconis per vices alternent: quia & mutatio Perſonarum & viciſſitudo convenientium minuit invidiam. [c] Ap. Euſeb. lib. 7. cap. 22. [d] Vita Luciani. Philoſtorg. lib. 2. cap. 13. [e] Terrul. de Fuga. cap. 14. Non potes diſcurrere per ſingulos, ſic tibi & in tribus Eccleſia. [f] Paulin. Vit. Ambroſ. Per idem tempus cum trans Tyberim apud quendam clariſſimum invitaretur, ut ſacrificium in domo offerret, &c. [g] Uranius. Vit. Paulini. [h] Naz. Orat. 19. de Laud. Patris. p. 305. [i] Naz. Orat. 11. de Gorgonia. p. 187. [k] Hamon Leſtrange, Alyance of Div. Offic. Chap. 10. p. 299.

a Place

a Place in his Dioceſe, which was vexed with evil Spirits, whither one of his Presbyters went to pray and offer the Sacrifice [l] of the Body of Chriſt, at the requeſt of the Owner, that it might be delivered from them. And what the Hiſtorians [m] tell us of Conſtantine's Tabernacle, which he carried about with him in his Camp, where all Divine Offices and the Holy Myſteries were celebrated, may be reckoned another Inſtance of ſuch private Conſecrations.

SECT. XI. And commonly reſerved in the Church for the ſame Uſe.

IT was alſo very uſual for the Miniſters to reſerve ſome part of the conſecrated Elements either in the Church, or with them at their own Houſe, to be in great Readineſs upon all ſuch preſſing Occaſions. As is evident from the forementioned Story of Serapion in Euſebius. And Optatus [n] intimates as much in that remarkable Story which he tells of the Donatiſt Biſhops, who in their mad Zeal againſt the Catholicks threw the Euchariſt, which they found in their Churches, to the Dogs, but not without an immediate Sign of Divine Vengeance: For the Dogs, inſtead of devouring the Elements, fell upon their Maſters, as if they had never known them, and tore them to pieces, as Robbers and Prophaners of the Holy Body of Chriſt. The ſame is evident from the like Complaint of Chryſoſtom concerning the Tumult that happened in his Church at Conſtantinople, when the Soldiers broke into the Sanctuary [o] where the Holy Myſteries were repoſited, and many of them who were not initiated, ſaw the Secrets that were concealed within, and the Holy Blood of Chriſt was ſpilt upon the Soldiers Cloaths, as is uſual in ſuch Tumults and Confuſion. We may collect the ſame from what Victor Uticenſis [p] ſays of Valerian an African Biſhop, that he was baniſhed by Geiſericus King of the Vandals, becauſe he would not deliver up the Sacrament that was kept in his Church. Cyril of Alexandria in one of his Epiſtles [q] reproves thoſe who ſaid the Euchariſt was not to be reſerved to the next Day. And in the Council of Conſtantinople under Mennas [r] there is mention made of Silver and Golden Doves hanging at the Altar, which moſt probably were then uſed as the Repoſitories of the Sacrament kept in the Churches. Which is alſo mentioned in Amphilochius's Life of St. Baſil; but no ſtreſs need be laid upon that, becauſe it is a ſpurious Writing; nor need we deſcend to the ſecond Council of Tours [s], or other modern Decrees, for the Proof of that which has ſo good Authority among the more antient Writers.

SECT. XII. And alſo for Publick Uſe upon ſome Days when they made no new Conſecration. This called Miſſa Præſanctificatorum. Its Uſe and Original.

IT appears alſo from a Canon of the Council of Trullo, that the Euchariſt was ſometimes reſerved for the Publick Uſe of the Church, to be received ſome Days after its Conſecration, particularly in the Time of Lent, when they communicated on ſuch Elements as had been conſecrated the Saturday or Sunday in the foregoing Week, which were the only Days in Lent on which they uſed the Conſecration Service, though they communicated on other Days on ſuch Elements as they reſerved out of the former Conſecration. The Words of the Canon are theſe [t], That on every Day in the Holy Faſt of Lent, except Saturdays and Sundays, and the Feaſt of the Annunciation, the Liturgy of the pre-ſanctified Gifts ſhall be performed. This is beſt underſtood from another Canon of the Council of Laodicea [u], which orders, that the Euchariſt ſhould not be offered in Lent on any other Day except the Sabbath and the Lord's Day. Not that they prohibited the Communion to be received on other Days (for it was received every Day) but on theſe Days they received only that which had been conſecrated before on the Sabbath and Lord's-Day, and what was reſerved for the Communion of theſe Days without any new Conſecration. This is commonly reckoned by learned Men the Beginning of this Sort of Communions upon reſerved Hoſts, though it is hard to gueſs at the Reaſon of the Obſervation. Leo Allatius, who has written [x] two peculiar Diſſertations upon this Subject, tells us the Reaſon which the Greeks themſelves alledge for it, is, that the Conſecration Service is proper only for Feſtivals, and therefore all other Days in Lent beſides Saturdays and Sundays being Faſt-Days, they did not conſecrate on thoſe Days, but only communicated in the Elements which had been conſecrated before. This he ſhews at large [y] out of Alexius Ariſtenus, Matthew Blaſtares, Balzamon, Zonaras, Michael Cerularius and Simeon Theſſalonicenſis. Whether this was the true Reaſon, or whether it be a good Reaſon, is none of my Buſineſs to enquire. I only obſerve, that it was an antient Practice in the Greek Church, as it continues to be [z] at this Day, though the Latin Church never adopted it into her Service: For they uſed to conſecrate, as well as communicate, about Three in the Afternoon, all the Days of Lent, as is evident from Tertullian [a], St. Ambroſe [b], and many others, of which there will be Occaſion to ſpeak more fully when we come to the Faſts and Feſtivals of the Church. Leo Allatius thinks this Miſſa Præ-

[l] Aug. de Civ. Dei. lib. 22. cap. 8. p. 1485. Perrexit unus, obtulit ibi Sacrificium corporis Chriſti, orans quantum potuit, ut ceſſaret illa vexatio: Deo protinus miſerante ceſſavit. [m] Euſeb. Vit. Conſt. lib. 4. c. 56. Sozom. lib. 1. cap. 8. [n] Optat. lib. 2. p. 55. [o] Chryſ. Ep. ad Innocent. t. 4. p. 681. ἔνθα τὰ ἅγια ἀπέκειντο, &c. [p] Victor. de Perſecut. Vandal. lib. 1. Bibl. Patr. Tom. 7. p. 593. [q] Cyril. Ep. ad Caloſyrium in Præfat. lib. cont. Anthropomorph. t. 6. p. 365. [r] Conc. ſub Menna. Act. 5. Tom. 5. p. 159. [s] Conc. Turon. 2. can. 3. [t] Conc. Trullan. can. 52. ἡ ἁγία τεσσαρακοστὴ ἱερὰ λειτουργία γινέσθω. [u] Conc. Laodic. can. 49. ὅτι δεῖ τεσσαρακοστῇ ἄρτον προσφέρειν. εἰ μὴ ἐν σαββάτῳ ἢ κυριακῇ μόνον. [x] Leo Allat. Epiſt. ad Naudæum de Libris Eccleſ. Græcorum. It. Diſſert. de Miſſa Præſanctificatorum ad calcem libri de Conſenſu Eccl. Orient. & Occident. [y] Leo Allat de Miſſa Præſanctif. n. 12. [z] See Dr. Smith of the Greek Church. p. 175. [a] Tertul. de Orat. cap. 14. [b] Ambroſ. Ser. 8. in Pſal. 118. p. 656.

ſanctificatorum

ſanctificatorum is intended by Socrates [c], when he ſays on Wedneſdays and Fridays at Alexandria they had all Divine Service except the Conſecration of the Euchariſt: But it does not appear that they communicated at all upon thoſe Days, much leſs upon pre-conſecrated Elements. However he rightly concludes, that Durantus and others, who confound this Miſſa Præſanctificatorum with the Miſſa Sicca, or Dry Maſs, as they called it, are wholly miſtaken: Becauſe Dry Maſs was a Corruption peculiarly crept into the Latin Church, which was condemned by many of their own Divines, Eckius, Eſtius, Laudmeter, and the Belgick Biſhops [d], as a mere Novelty, a counterfeit, and a perfect piece of Pageantry; whereas this Miſſa Præſanctificatorum was an antient and approved Uſage of the Greek Church, upon the account of which a certain Portion of the conſecrated Elements were reſerved for the publick Uſe of the Church upon thoſe Days of Lent, on which they made no new Conſecration.

SECT. XIII. The Euchariſt ſometimes reſerved in private by private Men for daily Participation.

BUT beſides this Reſervation of the Elements for publick Uſe by the Miniſters of the Church, there was another private Reſervation of them allowed ſometimes to religious Perſons, who were permitted to carry a Portion of the Euchariſt home with them, and participate of it every Day by themſelves in private. This Cuſtom ſeems to owe its Original to the Times of Perſecution, when Men were willing to communicate every Day, but could not have the Convenience of daily Aſſemblies. To compenſate for the Want of which, they took a Portion of the Euchariſt home with them, and participated thereof every Day in private. This ſeems very plainly to be intimated by Tertullian [e], when ſpeaking of a Woman marrying an Heathen Husband, he asks her; Whether her Husband would not know what it was that ſhe eat before all her other Meat? And in another place [f], anſwering the Objection which ſome made againſt receiving the Euchariſt on a Faſt Day for fear of breaking their Faſt, he tells them (according as ſome Copies read it) They might take the Body of the Lord and reſerve it; and ſo they might both participate of the Sacrifice and fulfil their Duty of Faſting. But I lay no ſtreſs upon this, becauſe it is a doubtful Reading. The Teſtimony of Cyprian [g] is more full and pregnant, who tells us a moſt remarkable Story of a Woman, who having ſacrificed at the Heathen Altars, when ſhe came afterward to open her Cheſt, where ſhe kept the Holy Sacrament of the Lord, ſhe was ſo terrified with a ſudden Eruption of Fire, that ſhe durſt not touch it. And the antient Author who writes againſt the Roman Shows, under the Name of Cyprian [h], brings in one going immediately from Church, as ſoon as he was diſmiſt, to the Theater, carrying the Euchariſt with him, according to Cuſtom, even among the obſcene Bodies of Harlots. Gregory Nazianzen alſo [i] ſpeaks of his Siſter Gorgonia having the Euchariſt in her Chamber. And Baſil [k] ſays, it was cuſtomary in Times of Perſecution for Chriſtians, when they could not have a Prieſt or a Deacon preſent with them, to take the Euchariſt with their own Hands. As they who led a ſolitary Life, at a great Diſtance from the Prieſt, commonly took the Euchariſt with their own Hands alſo. And it was cuſtomary at Alexandria and throughout Egypt for the People every one to take the Sacrament home with them. St. Jerom [l] alſo intimates the ſame, when he asks thoſe who thought they might ſafely take the Sacrament at home, when they were not prepared to do it in the Church, whether they thought there was one Chriſt in publick, and another in private? Why were they afraid to go to Church? If it was not lawful to receive it in the Church, it was not lawful to receive it at Home. St. Ambroſe likewiſe in his Funeral Oration upon his Brother Satyrus [m] ſays of him, that he obtained the Body of Chriſt of ſome that had it in the Ship, wherein he ſuffered Shipwrack. It is true indeed this Cuſtom was diſcouraged in Spain in the Beginning of the fifth Century upon the Account of the Priſcillianiſts, who made Uſe of it as a Pretence to cover themſelves among the Catholicks, and yet never eat the Euchariſt at all. In Oppoſition to whom the Council of Saragoſſa [n], about the Year 381, made a ſevere Decree, that if any one was found to take the Euchariſt in the Church, and not eat it, he ſhould be anathematized. And this was ſeconded by a like Decree [o] in the firſt Council of Toledo. But as theſe Canons were only made upon a particular Occaſion, and for a particular Country, they did not much affect the reſt of the World. Inſomuch that Bona [p] himſelf obſerves, out of Johannes Moſchus and Anaſtaſius Bibliothecarius, ſeveral Inſtances of the Cuſtom continuing in the ſeventh and eighth Centuries. And doubtleſs it was the Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, and the [c] Socrat. lib. 5. cap. 22. ap. Allatium. Ep. ad Naudæum. [d] Allat. de Miſſa Præſanct. n. 10. Miſſa Sicca, recens, & Simulata & Hiſtrionica, confertur cum Cœnis Heliogabali. [e] Tertul. ad Uxor. lib. 2. c. 5. Non ſciet maritus quid ſecreto ante omnem cibum guſtes? [f] De Orat. cap. 14. Accepto corpore Domini, & reſervato (others read it, Re ſervata) utrumque ſalvum eſt, & Participatio ſacrificii, & executio officii. [g] Cypr. de Lapſis. p. 132. Cum quædam mulier arcam ſuam, in qua Domini Sanctum fuit, indignis manibus tentaſſet aperire, igne inde ſurgente deterrita eſt, ne auderet attingere. [h] Cypr. de Spectaculis. p. 3. in Append. Qui feſtinans ad ſpectaculum, dimiſſus, & adhuc gerens ſecum, ut aſſolet, Euchariſtiam inter corpora obſcœna meretricum tulit. [i] Naz. Orat. 11. de Gorgonia, p. 187. [k] Baſil. Ep. 289. ad Cæſariam Patriciam. [l] Hieron. Ep. 50. ad Pammachium. Quare ad Martyres ire non audent? Quare non ingrediuntur Eccleſias? An alius in Publico, alius in Domi Chriſtus eſt? Quod in Eccleſia non licet, nec domi licet. [m] Ambroſ. Orat. de Obitu fratris. t. 3. p. 19. [n] Conc. Cæſarauguſt. can. 3. Euchariſtiæ gratiam ſi quis probatur acceptam in Eccleſia non ſumpſiſſe, anathema ſit in perpetuum. [o] Conc. Tolet. 1. can. 14. Si quis acceptam à ſacerdote Euchariſtiam non ſumpſerit, velut Sacrilegus propellatur. [p] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 2. cap. 17. n. 4.

Adoration of the Hoſt that perfectly aboliſhed this Cuſtom, which was thought inconſiſtent with them.

SECT. XIV. Yet this never allowed in the publick Service.

IT muſt be noted under this Head, that though the Church for the Reaſons aforeſaid allowed the People to carry the Euchariſt home with them, and participate of it in private by themſelves; yet ſhe never permitted any Layman to have any hand in the Adminiſtration of it in her publick Service. As the Biſhops and Presbyters were the only Perſons that were allowed to conſecrate the Euchariſt, ſo it was the ordinary Office of Deacons to miniſter it [*] to the People. And when any Laymen preſumed to adminiſter it to themſelves in the Church, they were corrected for it [q] by Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures. And more eſpecially Women were debarred from this [r] and all other Offices in the publick Miniſtrations, except what belonged to the inferior Service of the Deaconeſſes, of which I have given a full Account [†] in another Place.

Here I cannot omit the pertinent Obſervation made by Morinus [s], and approved by Bona [t] as a judicious and true Remark, That the Mendicants were the firſt that introduced the Cuſtom of keeping the Sacrament in the Church for private Men in health to partake of extra Sacrificium, out of the time of publick Service in the Church. They freely own this to be a Novelty, and that againſt the Rules of the Roman Ritual, which orders the Sacrament to be kept in the Church only for the Sick. They ſay, the Ancients kept it in the Church only upon this account, for the Sake of the Sick; and that they allowed no uſe of the Communion to Men in health out of the time of the Oblation, ſave only when they permitted the People to carry it home with them, and participate thereof in private, which was a different thing from publick Communicating in the Church [‡].

SECT. XV. A novel Cuſtom noted, of Reſerving the Euchariſt for forty Days, and the Inconveniences attending it.

WHILST we are ſpeaking of reſerving the Sacrament, it may not be amiſs to make a Remark by the way upon a novel Cuſtom which is related by ſome of the Roman Ritualiſts about the Time of Charles the Great. They tell us, it was uſual in thoſe Days, in the Ordination of a Biſhop or Presbyter, not only to give the new ordained Perſon the Communion at that time, but alſo as much of it in reſerve as would ſerve him to partake of for forty Days after. This Cuſtom is mentioned by Alcuin [u] and the Ordo Romanus, and Fulbertus Carnotenſis, and Bona [x] does not pretend to find it in any more antient Writers. It is hard to gueſs at the Reaſons of this Cuſtom, and therefore I content my ſelf barely to mention it, without farther Enquiry into the Myſtery of it. I only obſerve, that ſometimes great Inconveniences follow'd upon this long Reſervation of the Sacrament: For it would often grow mouldy, corrupt and ſtink, and then they were hard put to it to determine which way to diſpoſe of it. Sometimes by the Negligence of the Prieſt it was devoured by Mice or other Animals, in which caſe the Prieſt was to do Penance forty Days for his Neglect, as Gratian [y] cites a Canon out of ſome Council of Arles or Orleance to this purpoſe. But if it grew ſtale and corrupted, then it was to be burnt, by other Canons cited by Ivo [z] and Burchardus [a] out of the Council of Arles, ordering, That in this Caſe it ſhould be burnt, and the Aſhes of it buried under the Altar. Which Algerus [b] aſſures us was the Cuſtom in his Time, as Bona [c] confeſſes out of him. And the very Canon of the Maſs [d] has a Rubrick ſtill in being, That if a Fly or Spider, or any ſuch Animal, falls into the Cup after Conſecration, the Prieſt, when Maſs is ended, muſt take it out and waſh with it Wine, and burn it in the Fire. And ſo he muſt do, if it be ſpilt upon the Ground, he muſt gather up the Earth and burn it. And yet ſome of the Schoolmen [e] cry out againſt this as an horrible Sacrilege, to burn the conſecrated Hoſt, though it be grown mouldy, which, according to their Opinion, would be to burn the Body of God. He that would ſee to what Difficulties the Roman Caſuiſts are driven upon this Point, to tell, what becomes of the Body of Chriſt, when the Sacrament happens to be thus corrupted, and how they diſtreſs and confute one another; may conſult the learned Aubertin [f], who has particularly conſidered their ſeveral different Anſwers, no leſs than ſeven in Number, and ſhewed the Vanity of them all, in that elaborate Work of his upon the Euchariſt againſt the Doctrine of the Romiſh Church. I will not lead my Reader too far out of his Way with long Digreſſions about ſuch Things; but return to the Buſineſs of the antient Church.

[*] See Book II. Chap. xx. n. 7. and 8. [q] Conc. Trullan. can. 58. [r] Vid. Firmil. Ep. 75. inter Epiſt. Cypr. Conc. Paris. an. 829. lib. 1. cap. 45. [†] Book II. Chap. xxii. [s] Morin. de Pœniten. lib. 8. cap. 14. [t] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 2. Chap. 17. n. 6. [‡] The Reader that would ſee more Abuſes crept into the Roman Service, may conſult the twenty firſt Seſſion of the Council of Baſil. Cap. De Spectaculis in Eccleſia non tacendis; or Mr. Gregory's Diſſertation, call'd, Epiſcopus Puerorum, where he will ſee how the Epiſcopal Office was uſed to be mimicked in Pageantry on Innocents Day in many Churches. [u] Alcuin. de Offic. cap. 37. Pontifex ad communicandum porrigit ei Formatam & ſacram Oblationem, quam accipiens communicat ſuper altare, cætera vero reſervat ſibi ad communicandum uſque ad dies quadraginta. It. Ordo Roma. in Ordinat. Epiſcopi. Et Fulbert. Ep. ad Finandum. [x] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 1. cap. 23. n. 9. [y] Gratian. de Conſecrat. Diſt. 2. cap. 94. Qui bene non cuſtodierit, Sacrificium, & mus vel aliquod aliud animal illud comederit, quadraginta diebus pœniteat. [z] Ivo. Decret. Par. 2. cap. 56. [a] Burchard. lib. 5. c. 50. [b] Alger. de Euchar. lib. 2. cap. 1. [c] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 2. cap. 19. n. 2. [d] Miſſal. de Defectibus Miſſæ. can. 5. Si muſca vel aranea vel aliquid aliud ceciderit in calicem—— ſacerdos extrahat eam & lavet cum vino, finitaque Miſſa comburat. &c. [e] Petrus Paludanus, in Sent. lib. 4. Diſt. 9. Quæſt. 1. art. 3. Hoſtias conſecratas quamvis mucidas comburere immane Sacrilegium. [f] Albertin. de Euchar. lib. 1. c. 19. p. 122.

SECT. XVI. The Eucharist sometimes given to Energumens in the Intervals of their Distemper.

THOUGH they did not receive Energumens, or Persons vexed with evil Spirits, promiscuously to the Communion, yet neither did they wholly reject them; but in the Intervals of their Distemper, if they shewed any Signs of Piety and Sobriety, they admitted them to partake of it. This we learn from the Canons of Timothy Bishop of Alexandria, who proposes this Question, whether a Communicant may communicate, if he be possessed? and answers it, If he does not expose or blaspheme [g] the Mysteries, he may communicate now and then. And Cassian [h] says, the same Resolution was given to the Question by the Egyptian Fathers, who did not use to interdict them the Communion, but rather desired they should, if possible, communicate every Day. For by this means they had relieved one Abbot Andronicus and many others of their Distemper. So that though the Canons and Rules of the Church seem to drive away the Energumens together with the Catechumens and Penitents, they are to be understood with this Exception: Or at least we must say, the Church observed a different Discipline in different Places.

SECT XVII. All Men debarred from it, that were guilty of any notorious Crime, of what Rank or Degree soever.

IT would be endless to enumerate here all the particular Crimes for which Men were debarred the holy Communion; we shall have a more proper Occasion to specify them in the next Volume, when we come to treat more perfectly and distinctly of the Church's Discipline: It may be sufficient to note here in general, That all who were guilty of any notorious Crimes, were rejected from participating at the holy Table, whatever Rank or Degree they were of, even tho' it were the Emperor himself, as appears from the Case of Theodosius, whom St. Ambrose resolutely and absolutely refused, for a barbarous Murder committed by his Authority upon seven thousand Men at Thessalonica, till he had both confessed his Fault, and made ample Satisfaction, as the Reader may find the Story at large excellently related by Theodoret [i] in his History, and which I will relate from him in the next Volume in its proper plae. Some other particular Cases are propos'd and answered in the Canons of Dionysius [k], and Timothy [l], and by St. Jerom [m], which because they are rather private Cases of Conscience than Matters of publick Discipline, I refer the Reader to their proper Authors for them.

SECT. XVIII. The Question of Digamy, or second Marriage, stated. Whether it debarred Men any time from the Communion.

THERE is one Question in a doubtful Case, which the Obscurity of some antient Canons has made very perplexed and intricate in the Resolutions of learned Men, which therefore may not be silently pass'd over: That is, the Question about Digamy or second Marriage, in what Sense it excluded Men for some time from the holy Communion? The Penalty inflicted upon them, is Abstinence from the Sacrament for one Year or two; which I freely own, as it is ordered and worded by the Canons of Neocæsarea [n], Laodicea [o], and St. Basil [p], is one of the hardest Cases we meet with in all the History of the antient Church. Bishop Beveridge and some others think they mean only second Marriages that are contracted whilst the first remains undissolved. And if so, there would be no Difficulty in the Case: For a severer Penance might be laid upon such as retain two Wives at once. And therefore others think, they intended to discourage, though not absolutely to forbid, second Marriages made successively after the Obligation of the first was cancelled by Death: But then, how to reconcile this with the Apostolical Rules, is not very easy to determine. Neither can it be excus'd from inclining to the Errors of the Novatians and Montanists, for which Tertullian pleads so stifly against the Church in his Book De Monogamia, and other Places. I should rather think these Canons intended no more but to discountenance marrying after an unlawful Divorce, which was a scandalous Practice, however allowed by the Laws of Jews and Gentiles. And this the rather, because Tertullian's Arguments against the Catholicks imply, That they allowed of second Marriages successively in all except the Clergy, and many Churches admitted Digamists (in that Sense) even into Orders too, as I have shewed out of Tertullian himself, and Chrysostom, and Theodoret more fully [*] in another Place. And if these Canons intended any thing more, they must be looked upon as private Rules, which could not prescribe against the general Sense and Practice of the Catholick Church.

SECT. XIX. The corrupt Custom of some who gave the Eucharist to the Dead, censured by the Ancients.

THERE was one very corrupt and superstitious Practice began to creep pretty early into the African Churches and some others, which the Fathers censure very heartily, as it justly deserved: that was, Giving the Eucharist to the Dead. The third Council of Carthage has a Canon to this Purpose [q], That the Eucharist should not be given to the Bodies of the Dead: For the Lord said, Take this and eat: But dead Bodies can [g] Timoth. Respons. Canon. c. 3. ap. Bevereg. tom. 2.

[h] Cassian. Collat. 7. cap. 30. Communionem vero eis sacrosanctam à senioribus nostris nunquam meminimus interdictam: Quinimo, si possibile esset, etiam quotidie eis impartire eam debere censebant. ——— Hoc namque modo curatum & Andronicum Abbatem nuper aspeximus, aliosque quamplures.
[i] Theod. lib. 5. cap. 17.
[k] Dionys. Can. 2. and 4.
[l] Timoth. Can. 5, 7, 12.
[m] Hieron. Ep. 20. ad Pammach. cap. 6.
[n] Conc. Neocæs. can. 7.
[o] Conc. Laod. can. 1.
[p] Basil. can. 4.
[*] Book IV. Chap. v. n. 4.
[q] Conc. Carth. 3. can. 6. Placuit ut corporibus defunctorum Eucharistia non detur. Dictum est enim à Domino, Accipite & edite: Cadavera autem nec accipere possunt nec edere. Cavendum est etiam, ne mortuos baptizari posse fratrum infirmitas credat, quibus nec Eucharistiam dari licitum est.

neither take nor eat. Caution alſo is to be uſed, that the Brethren may not through Ignorance believe, that dead Bodies may be baptized, ſeeing the Euchariſt may not be given to them. And this with a little Variation is repeated in the African [r] Code, where the Cauſe of both Errors, as well in Baptiſm as the Euchariſt, is aſcribed to the Ignorance of the Presbyters miſguiding the People. A like Canon was made in the Council of Auxerre in France, An. 578, a little [s] before the Time of Gregory the Great. Which ſhews that the ſame Abuſe had got ſome footing there alſo. St. Chryſoſtom alſo ſpeaks againſt it [t], though he does not intimate that it was practiſed by any Catholicks, but rather (if by any) by the Marcionite Hereticks, who as they gave a vicarious Baptiſm to the Living for the Dead, ſo perhaps might give the Euchariſt to the Dead themſelves: Both which Abſurdities he refutes at once from the Words of our Saviour. To whom did he ſay, Except ye eat my Fleſh, and drink my Blood, ye have no Life in you? Did he ſpeak to the Living, or to the Dead? And again, Except a Man be born of Water and of the Spirit, he cannot ſee the Kingdom of God. It appears alſo that long after St. Chryſoſtom's Time there were ſome Remains of this Error in the Greek Church: For the Council of Trullo [u] repeats the Prohibition in the Words of the Council of Carthage: Let no one impart the Euchariſt to the Bodies of the Dead; for it is written, Take, and eat; but the Bodies of the Dead can neither take nor eat.

SECT. XX. Parallel to which is the Abuſe of burying the Euchariſt with the Dead.

BONA does not undertake to defend this Abuſe, but he does another which is no leſs abſurd, becauſe he found it in the Practice of St. Benedict, and related with Approbation by Gregory the Great: that is, The Cuſtom of burying the Euchariſt with the Dead. Bona [x] ſays, this was done by St. Baſil in the Greek Church, as is reported in his Life: But all Men know the Author of that Life to be both a ſpurious and a Legendary Writer. That which he alledges out of Gregory [y] is more authentick: For he ſays, St. Benedict order'd the Communion to be laid upon the Breaſt of one of his Monks, and to be buried with him. He reckons theſe Things were done either by divine Inſtinct, or by Compliance with received Cuſtom, which is ſince abrogated. But he produces no Rule of his Church to ſhew its Abrogation. And whatever Rules there may be to the contrary, it is certain the Practice continued ſtill. For not only Balzamon [z] and Zonaras ſpeak of it in their Time; But Ivo [a] ſays, When the Body of St. Othmar was tranſlated, the Sacrament was taken up out of the Dormitory with him. And a Learned Man [b] now living aſſures us, that he himſelf with many others have ſeen the Chalice in which the ſacred Blood was buried, dug out of the Graves of divers Biſhops buried in the Church of Sarum. So that whatever the Laws might prohibit, the Profanation continued under Pretence of Piety among the greateſt Men, but without any Foundation or real Example in the Practice of the Primitive Church.

SECT. XXI. The Order of Communicating.

WE have hitherto conſidered what related to the Communicants themſelves; we are now to examine the Manner of their communicating. Where, firſt of all, the Order of their communicating occurs to our Obſervation: Which is thus deſcribed in the Conſtitutions: Firſt let the Biſhop receive [c], then the Presbyters, Deacons, Sub-deacons, Readers, Singers, and Aſceticks; among the Women, the Deaconeſſes, Virgins and Widows; after that the Children, then all the People in Order. In Juſtin Martyr's Time [d] when the Biſhop had conſecrated, the Deacons diſtributed both the Bread and the Cup among the Communicants: But in Afterages the Biſhop or Presbyter commonly miniſtred the Bread, and the Deacons the Cup after them. And there are ſome Canons that expreſly [e] forbid a Deacon to miniſter the Body of Chriſt, when a Presbyter is preſent, and others enjoining them not [f] to do it without Neceſſity, and a licence from the Presbyter to do it. And it was ever accounted ſo great an Abſurdity for a Presbyter to receive from the Hands of a Deacon, that the Council of Nice [g] thought fit to make a particular Canon to forbid it. But by Permiſſion and Cuſtom it became their ordinary Office to miniſter the Cup [h], and ſometimes both Species [i] to the People, obſerving the Method preſcribed to communicate every one in their proper Order.

SECT. XXII. Some Rules obſerved for Diſtinction of Places.

ANOTHER Diſtinction was made in placing the Communicants in their proper Stations. For though no Diſtinction was made in this Caſe between Rich and Poor; they being all called alike to partake together of the ſame Communion, as Friends of one common Lord [k]; yet ſome Diſtinction of Place for Order's ſake was generally obſerved, though not exactly the ſame in all Places, but with ſome [r] Cod. Afric. can. 18. [s] Conc. Antiſſiodor. can. 12. Non licet mortuis nec Euchariſtiam nec Oſculum tradi. &c.

[t] Chryſ. Hom. 40. in 1 Cor. p. 688. [u] Conc. Trull. can. 83. [x] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 2. cap. 17. n. 6.
[y] Greg. Dial. lib. 2. cap. 24. Juſſit communionem Dominici corporis in pectus defuncti reponi atque ſic tumulari.
[z] Not. in Can. 13. Conc. Trull. [a] Ivo. Vita Othmari. lib. 2. c. 3. ap. Surium die 16. Nov. [b] Dr. Whitby, Idolatry of Hoſt-Worſhip. Chap. 1. p. 26. [c] Conſtit. lib. 8. cap. 13. [d] Juſtin. Apol. 2. p. 97. [e] Conc. Arelat. 2. can. 15. Diaconi corpus Chriſti, præſente Presbytero, tradere non præſumant. [f] Conc. Carthag. 4. can. 38. Diaconus, præſente Presbytero, Euchariſtiam corporis Chriſti populo, ſi neceſſitas cogat, juſſus eroget. [g] Conc. Nic. can. 18. [h] Vid. Cyprian. de Lapſis. p. 132. Conſtit. lib. 8. c. 13. [i] Conc. Ancyr. can. 2. [k] Vid. Chryſoſt. Hom. 10. in 1 Theſ. p. 1485.

Variety

Variety according to the different Customs of different Churches. In the Spanish Churches it was customary for the Presbyters and Deacons to communicate at the Altar, and the rest of the Clergy in the Quire, and the People without the Rails of the Chancel, as is plain from a Canon of the fourth Council [l] of Toledo; and to this a Reference is made, as to an antient Custom, settled long before by former Canons, in the first Council of Braga [m]. Which implies that there were Rules of old about this Matter, since the Council of Braga could not mean the Council of Toledo, for that was after it, An. 633. The Reference must be to more antient Canons, such as that of the Council of Laodicea, which [n] orders, that none but the Clergy only should come to communicate within the Chancel. And this seems to have been the constant Practice of the Greek Church, where no Layman from that Time, besides the Emperor, was allowed to come to the Altar, to make his Oblations, and communicate there; but this Privilege was allowed the Emperor by antient Tradition [o], as the Council of Trullo words it. And yet even this was denied the Emperor in the Italick Church. For St. Ambrose would not permit the Emperor Theodosius himself to communicate in this Place, but obliged him to retire as soon as he had made his Oblations at the Altar. But Valesius [p] has observed out of the Epistles of Dionysius Bishop of Alexandria, that in the third Century it was customary both for Men and Women to come and stand at the Altar to communicate: And Mabillon shews [q] out of Gregory of Tours [r] that the same Custom prevailed in the Gallican Churches. And it is very evident from the second Council of Tours, which has a Canon to this purpose: That though Laymen at other Times should not come into the Chorus or Chancel, yet when the Oblation was offered [s], both Men and Women might come into the Holy of Holies to communicate at the Altar. So that this was plainly one of those Rites which varied according to the Difference of Times and Places, and the various Usages and Customs of different Churches. There are a great many other Customs relating to the Manner of communicating, which are of greater Moment, and become Matters of great Dispute in these latter Ages, and therefore it will be necessary to consider and examine them a little more particularly, which I shall do in the following Chapter.

CHAP. V.

A Resolution of several Questions relating to the Manner of Communicating in the Antient Church.

SECT. I. That the People were always admitted to receive in both Kinds.

THE first and most momentous Question of this Kind is, whether the People, and such of the Clergy as did not consecrate, were generally admitted to communicate in both Kinds? The principal Advocates of Popery at the Beginning of the Reformation [a] were not willing to own, that the universal Practice of the Primitive Church was against the modern Sacrilege of denying the Cup to the People: And therefore tho' they confessed there were some Instances in Antiquity of Communion under both Kinds, yet they maintained the Custom was not Universal. So Eckius and Harding and many others. But they who have since considered the Practice of the antient Church more narrowly, are ashamed of this Pretence, and freely confess, that for twelve Centuries there is no Instance of the People's being obliged to communicate only in one Kind, in the publick Administration of the Sacrament [b], but in private they think some few Instances may be given. This is Cardinal Bona's Distinction, whose Words are so remarkable, that I cannot forbear to transcribe them: It is very certain, says he, that antiently all in general, both Clergy and Laity, Men and Women, received the Holy Mysteries in both Kinds, when they were present at the solemn Celebration of them, and they both offered and were Partakers. But out of the Time of Sacrifice, and out of the Church, it was customary always and in all Places to communicate only in one Kind. In the first part of the Assertion all agree, as well Catholicks as Sec-

[l] Conc. Tolet. 4. can. 17. Sacerdos & Levita ante altare communicent, in Choro Clerus, extra Chorum populus.

[m] Conc. Bracaren. 1. can. 31. Placuit ut intra sanctuarium altaris ingredi ad communicandum non liceat Laicis Viris vel Mulieribus, sicut & antiquis Canonibus statutum est.

[n] Conc. Laodic. can. 19. μόνοις δὲ τοῖς ἱερατικοῖς ἐισιέναι εἰς τὸ θυσιαστήριον καὶ κοιμᾶσθαι.

[o] Conc. Trull. can. 69. καὶ ἀρχαιοτάτην παράδοσιν. &c.

[p] Vales. Not. in Euseb. lib. 7. cap. 9.

[q] Mabil. de Liturg. Gallic. lib. 1. cap. 5. n. 24.

[r] Greg. Turon. lib. 9. cap. 3. & lib. 10. cap. 8.

[s] Conc. Turon. 2. can. 4. Ad orandum & communicandum Laicis & Feminis, sicut mos est, pateant sancta sanctorum.

[a] Vid. Eckij Enchirid. cap. 10. de Euchar. p. 130. Harding's Answer to Jewel's Challenge. Art. 2. p. 30. Bellarmin. de Euchar. lib. 4. cap. 24.

[b] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 2. c. 18. n. 1. Certum est omnes passim Clericos & Laicos, viros & mulieres sub utraque specie sacra Mysteria antiquitus sumpsisse, cum Solemni eorum celebrationi aderant, & offerebant & de oblatis participabant. Extra sacrificium vero, & extra Ecclesiam semper & ubique Communio sub una specie in usu fuit. Primæ parti assertionis consentiunt omnes, tam Catholici, quam sectarii; nec eam negare potest, qui vel levissima rerum Ecclesiasticarum notitia imbutus sit. Semper enim & ubique ab Ecclesiæ primordiis usque ad Sæculum duodecimum sub specie panis & vini communicarunt Fideles; cœpitque paulatim ejus Sæculi initio usus calicis obsolescere, plerisque Episcopis eum populo interdicentibus ob periculum irreverentiæ & effusionis.

taries;

taries; nor can any one deny it, that has the leaſt Knowledge of Eccleſiaſtical Affairs. For the Faithful always and in all Places from the very firſt Foundation of the Church to the twelfth Century, were uſed to communicate under the ſpecies of Bread and Wine; and in the Beginning of that Age the Uſe of the Cup began by little and little to be laid aſide, whilſt many Biſhops interdicted the People the Uſe of the Cup for fear of Irreverence and Effuſion. And what they did firſt for their own Churches, was afterward confirmed by a canonical Sanction in the Council of Conſtance. This is as fair and ample a Confeſſion for the Practice of the Univerſal Church as we deſire, and it ſerves to ſhew the Vanity of all thoſe Arguments, from Scripture and Antiquity, that were offered at by the firſt Managers of this Diſpute, to prove the Practice of communicating in both Kinds not to be Univerſal. It ſuperſedes alſo all farther Trouble of citing Authorities in this Diſpute, as unneceſſary in a Matter ſo much beyond all Doubt and Exception by the Adverſaries own Confeſſion. Tho' the Reader that deſires to ſee the Authorities produced at large, may find them in Voſſius [c], and Du Moulin [d], and more amply in Chamier [e], and a late Treatiſe of a learned Writer [f] in our own Tongue, ſhewing, that there is no Catholick Tradition for Communion in one Kind. But Bona not only grants us all this, but tacitly anſwers all the plauſible Arguments uſed by Bellarmin [g] and others, to perſuade their Readers into a Belief of the antient Church giving the Communion only in one Kind. Bellarmin urges the frequent mention of reducing delinquent Clergymen to Lay-Communion; which he interprets Communion in one Kind. But Bona rejects this Notion of Lay-Communion as utterly falſe [h]; reflecting tacitly upon Bellarmin and other modern Writers of his own Church, as ignorant of the antient Diſcipline, who no ſooner hear of the Name, Lay-Communion, but preſently they take it in the Senſe that it now bears, and interpret it Communion in one Kind; which how falſe it is, ſays he, we may learn from hence, that we often read of Clergymen being thruſt down to Lay-Communion at that time, when Laymen communicated in both Kinds. Others draw an Argument from that which the Ancients call Communio Peregrina, the Communion of Strangers, which they interpret Communion in one Kind: But Bona [i] takes a great deal of Pains to ſhew the Ignorance of theſe Men, and makes an accurate Enquiry into the true Notion of this ſort of Communion, concluding that whatever it meant, it did not mean Communion in one Kind. Bellarmin draws another Argument or two from the Reſervation of the Euchariſt for the Uſe of the Sick, and from that private and domeſtick Communion which we have ſeen before was allow'd to private Chriſtians in their own Houſes, or in a Journey, or in the Wilderneſs: All which Bellarmin will have to have been only in one Kind. But beſides that this is falſe in itſelf: (For they reſerved not only one, but both Kinds for theſe Uſes, as we ſhall ſee more by and by) Bona [k] ſays, it is altogether beſide the Queſtion: For the Queſtion is not about private and extraordinary Communion in Caſes of great Exigency, but about the publick, ſolemn and ordinary Communion of the Church: Concerning which he concludes no Inſtance can be produced before the twelfth Century of its being celebrated only in one Kind.

But then, that he may not ſeem to give up the Cauſe of his Church, and deſert it as wholly deſperate, he pretends that the Change that was made by the Council of Conſtance, and confirmed by the Council of Trent, was againſt no divine Law; for Communion in both Kinds was neither inſtituted by God, nor did the antient Fathers ever teach it to be neceſſary to Salvation. One would wonder to ſee diſcerning Men ſo infatuated. What Words can be able to expreſs a divine Inſtitution, if thoſe of our Saviour are not, Drink ye all of this? Or how ſhould the Fathers believe Communion in both Kinds not to be neceſſary, who thought it neceſſary for Children, and actually communicated them in both Kinds, whenever they were capable of receiving it, as we have ſeen before? But he was ſenſible ſome of their own Popes have called it a grand Sacrilege to divide the Myſtery. Gelaſius [l] complains, that ſome received the Bread, but abſtained from the Cup, whom he condemns as guilty of Superſtition, and orders, that they ſhould either receive in both Kinds, or elſe be excluded from both: Becauſe one and the ſame Myſtery cannot be divided without grand Sacrilege. Leo the Great [m] declaims againſt them after the ſame manner: They receive the Body of Chriſt with an unworthy Mouth, but refuſe to drink the Blood of our Redemption. Such Mens ſacrilegious Diſſimulation being diſcovered, [c] Voſſ. Theſ. Theol. Diſp. 5. de Symbolis Cœnæ Domin.

[d] Moulin. Novelty of Popery. Book 7. Controverſy 12.
[e] Chamier de Euchariſt. lib. 8. cap. 9. [f] Demonſtration that the Church of Rome has erred in her Decrees about Communion in one kind. [g] Bellarm. de Euchar lib. 4. cap. 24.
[h] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 2. cap. 19. n. 3. Recentiores, qui audito nomine Communionis, ejus veteri notione neglecta, id ſolum concipiunt quod hodie ea voce ſignificatur, Laicam Communionem nihil aliud eſſe putant, quàm perceptionem Euchariſtiæ ſub unica ſpecie, aut extra Cancellos more Laicorum; Quod quàm falſum ſit vel ex eo liquet, quod ſæpe Clericos ad Laicam Communionem detruſos legimus, eo tempore, quo etiam Laici ſub utraque ſpecie communicabant. [i] Bona. ibid. n. 5. Quidam, inter quos Biniusi n notis ad Concilium Herdenſe, communionem Peregrinam cum Laica confundunt. Alii exiſtimarunt nihil aliud eſſe quam perceptionem Euchariſtiæ ſub una tantum ſpecie. Verum quid magis alienum à Diſciplina veterum Patrum? &c.
[k] Bona ibid. n. 1. [l] Gelaſ. ap. Gratian. de Conſecrat. Diſt. 2. cap. 12. Comperimus quod quidam ſumpta tantummodo corporis ſacri portione, à Calice ſacri cruoris abſtineant. Qui proculdubio, quia neſcio qua ſuperſtitione docentur obſtringi, aut integra Sacramenta percipiant, aut integris arceantur: quia diviſio unius ejuſdemque Myſterii ſine grandi Sacrilegio non poteſt provenire.
[m] Leo Ser. 4. de Quadrageſima. Ore indigno corpus Chriſti accipiunt, ſanguinem autem redemptionis noſtræ haurire omnino declinant.— quorum deprehenſa fuerit ſacrilega Simulatio, notati & prohibiti a Sanctorum Societate Sacerdotali auctoritate pellantur.

let them be marked, and by the Authority of the Prieſthood caſt out of the Society of the Faithful. It is in vain to ſay here, as Bona does, that theſe Decrees were only made againſt the Manichees, who believed Wine to be the Gall of the Prince of Darkneſs, and the Creature of the Devil, and therefore refuſed to drink it: For their Reaſons are general againſt all Superſtition whatſoever, and in their Opinion the Sacrament may not be divided without grand Sacrilege, and thwarting the Rule of the firſt Inſtitution. Which Bona might alſo have learned from another Decree related in their Canon Law [n] under the Name of Pope Julius, who ſays, the giving of the Bread and the Cup, each diſtinctly by themſelves, is a divine Order and Apoſtolical Inſtitution, and that it is as much againſt the Law of Chriſt to give them joyntly by dipping the one into the other, as it is to offer Milk inſtead of Wine, or the Juice of the Grape immediately preſſed out of the Cluſter: all which are equally contrary to the Evangelical and Apoſtolical Doctrine, as well as the Cuſtom of the Church, as may be proved from the Fountain of Truth, by whom the Myſteries of the Sacraments were ordained. Does not this plainly imply, that Communicating in both Kinds diſtinctly, was according to the Laws of Chriſt, and agreeable to his Rule and Doctrine, as well as his Example? With what Face then could Bona ſay, that Communion in both Kinds was neither inſtituted by God, nor did the antient Fathers judge it neceſſary? when even ſome of their antient Popes have told us ſo plainly, that Communion diſtinctly adminiſtred in both Kinds, is a divine Order, and that it is grand Sacrilege to divide them. And the Ancients always adminiſtred in both Kinds upon this Principle, becauſe it was the Law of Chriſt, whatever Bona or his Partizans can ſay to the contrary.

As to the other Part of the Queſtion, whether the Ancients did not in ſome private or extraordinary Caſes adminiſter the Sacrament in one Kind, we have no Diſpute with Bona, as being nothing to the Diſpute of publick Communion, by his own Confeſſion. Though all the Arguments made uſe of by him and Bellarmin in this Caſe, are far from being exactly true and concluſive. For whereas they argue for Communion in one Kind from private and domeſtick Communion, it appears from ſeveral Inſtances that this ſort of Communicating was often in both Kinds. Thus Nazianzen [o] ſays of his Siſter Gorgonia, that ſhe laid up the Antitypes both of the Body and Blood of the Lord. And St. Ambroſe ſpeaking of his Brother Satyrus [p] and others at Sea, expreſſes the Matter in ſuch Terms as plainly imply that they both eat the Bread and drunk the Wine. And whereas again they ſay, the Communion reſerved in the Church for the Uſe of the Sick was only in one Kind: The contrary is evidently proved from Juſtin Martyr [q], who ſays, The Deacons were uſed to carry both the Bread and Wine to the Abſent; and from St. Chryſoſtom's Complaint [r] to Pope Innocent, that in that horrible Aſſault that was made upon his Church, the holy Blood of Chriſt was ſpilt upon the Soldiers Cloaths. Which Baronius himſelf [s] brings as an Argument to prove, that they were uſed to reſerve the Sacrament in both Kinds in the Church for the Uſe of the Sick. They argue farther, from the Example of ſuch as took long Journeys, or went to Sea, that they always communicated in one Kind. But Baronius [t] proves in the ſame Place, from the Authority of Gregory the Great, that they who went to Sea, carried both the Body and Blood of Chriſt along with them in the Ship. And Bona himſelf [u] tells us, there are ſome Inſtances of the Communion being carried in both Kinds to Hermits and Recluſes in the Wilderneſs, as he gives an Example in Maria Ægyptiaca out of Sophronius. They urge likewiſe the Uſe of the Preſanctified Sacrament, which the Greeks uſed all Lent, except on Saturdays and Sundays, as has been noted before; and the Latins on the Paraſceue or Good-Friday; and this they pretend to tell us, with great Confidence, was only Communion in one Kind: For they reſerved only the Bread and not the Wine for this ſort of Communion. Bellarmin refers us to abundance of Authors for this, as Pope Innocent, Ep. 1. Cap. 4, who has not a Word about it; and Gregory's Sacramentarium, and the Ordo Romanus in Officio Paraſceues, and Rabanus Maurus and Micrologus. But Caſſander [x] has unluckily ſpoiled this Argument, and inverted it upon them. For he has obſerved, and Voſſius [y] after him, that the Ordo Romanus in the Office of Good-Friday, appoints Wine to be conſecrated with the Lord's Prayer, by putting ſome of the pre-conſecrated Body into it, Ut Populus plene poſſit communicare, that the People may have the full Communion in both Kinds. And the ſame is to be ſaid of the Greeks pre-ſanctified Communion: For in that Liturgy Wine and Water is ordered to be put into the Cup, and then in their Prayers before the Communion, the Elements are called the Body and Blood of the Lord. So Caſſander. But Leo Allatius [z], who wrote a peculiar Diſſertation upon this Subject, has more effectually ruined this Argument, which it is a [n] Jul. Ep. ad Epiſc. Ægypt. ap. Gratian. de Conſecr. Diſt. 2. cap. 7. Audivimus quoſdam Schiſmatica ambitione detentos, contra Divinos ordines, & Apoſtolicas Inſtitutiones, iac pro vino in divinis ſacrificiis dedicare; alios quoque intinctam Euchariſtiam populis pro complemento communionis porrigere.—Quod quam ſit Evangelicæ & Apoſtolicæ doctrinæ contrarium, & conſuetudini Eccleſiaſticæ adverſum, non difficile ab ipſo fonte veritatis probabitur, à quo ordinata ipſa Sacramentorum myſteria proceſſerunt. &c.

[o] Naz. Orat. 11. de Gorgon. p. 187. [p] Ambroſ. Orat. de Obitu Fratris, t. 2. p. 19. Toto pectoris hauriret arcano, &c. Vid. Voſſ. Theſes. p. 517. ex Tappero. [q] Juſtin. Apol. 2. p. 97. Thus alſo ſome think we may take St. Jerom ſpeaking of Exuperius Biſhop of Tholouſe, Nihil illo ditius, qui corpus Domini caniſtro vimineo, Sanguinem portat in vitro, meaning his carrying both kinds to the Sick. [r] Chryſ. Ep. ad Innoc. t. 4. p. 681. [s] Baron. an. 404. t. 5. p. 194. [t] Baron. ibid. ex Gregor. Dial. 3. cap. 36. [u] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 2. cap. 18. n. 2. ex Vita Mariæ Ægyptiacæ. [x] Caſſand. de Communione ſub utraque Specie. p. 1027. [y] Voſſ. Theſes Theol. p. 519. [z] Allat. de Miſſa Præſanctificatorum. n. 7. p. 1559.

Wonder

Wonder Bona ſhould not obſerve, who ſo often refers to his Diſſertation and commends it. For he ſhews out of the Greek Writers, Nicolas Cabaſilas [a], and Simeon Theſſalonicenſis [b], that in this Communion there were both the Elements of Bread and Wine, either conſecrated before, or by the Touch of one another. So that this Argument not only proves nothing to their Purpoſe, but ruins the Hypotheſis of the Objectors. For this pre-ſanctified Communion of the Greeks was in both Kinds. And the very Prayers in this Liturgy, both before and after the Communion, (as Allatius [c] there obſerves) evidently ſhew it. For the Prieſt thus prays before Communion: Vouchſafe by thy mighty Power to impart to us Thy immaculate Body and Thy precious Blood, and by our Miniſtry to all the People. And after Communion, We give Thee Thanks, O Lord, the Saviour of all, for all the good Things Thou haſt given us, and for the Participation of the Holy Body and Blood of Thy Chriſt. And Allatius obſerves farther [d], that the ſame ſort of Communion in both Kinds was uſed on Good-Friday in Spain by the Order of the Mozarabick Liturgy, which agrees with what Caſſander obſerved before out of the Latin Church. And that which led Bellarmin and Bona into the Miſtake, to take this for Communion in one Kind was, that both the Greek and Latin Church reſerved only the Bread, and not the Wine, for this Service; but when they came to communicate, they put the pre-conſecrated Bread into a Cup of Wine, and ſaid the Lord's Prayer and ſome other Prayers, and that was eſteemed a Conſecration of it, and ſo they proceeded to communicate in both. I have been a little more particular in explaining this Rite, becauſe it is the only Inſtance our Adverſaries can urge with any Colour, of publick Communion in one Kind; which yet when rightly underſtood, we ſee, is no Argument for them, but directly againſt them. And at this Day the Greeks, and Maronites, and Abyſſins, and all the Orientals, never communicate but in both Kinds, as Bona [e] himſelf confeſſes out of Abraham Echellenſis, and other Writers. And as to other Inſtances of the Sick or Infants, or Men in a Journey, who communicate only in one Kind (if they were never ſo true, as we ſee many of them are falſe) they are private and extraordinary Caſes, that relate not to the publick Communion of the Church, and ſo come not within the State of the preſent Queſtion, which is only about publick Communion, and not what was done in ſome very particular and extraordinary Caſes.

SECT. II. That in receiving in both Kinds, they always received the Elements diſtinctly, and not the one dipped in the other.

HAVING thus diſpatched this grand Queſtion about Communion in one Kind, and ſhewed the Practice of the Church to be conſtantly to receive in both Elements, we are next to enquire, whether they received them both ſeparately and diſtinctly, or the one dipped into and mixed with the other. The modern Greeks have a Cuſtom, which they have retained for ſome Ages, of dipping the Bread into the Wine, and miniſtring it ſo mixed in a Spoon to the People [f]. Some learned Men, among whom are Latinus Latinius [g] and Arcudius [h], make this Cuſtom as antient as the Time of Pope Innocent and St. Chryſoſtom: But Habertus [i] and Bona [k] prove there could be no ſuch Cuſtom in thoſe Days, it being altogether contrary to the Uſage of the Church in that Age to mingle the Elements together, or miniſter them any otherwiſe than ſeparate to the People. And indeed there is nothing more evident than this in all the Writings of the Ancients, who ſpeak of delivering the Bread firſt with a certain Form of Words, and after that the Cup with another Form (as we ſhall ſee more by and by) and that commonly by diſtinct Perſons, a Biſhop or a Presbyter miniſtring the one, and a Deacon the other. So that it is needleſs to multiply Teſtimonies to ſhew, that mixing of the Elements is a novel Invention. I only note one Paſſage of an Epiſtle that goes under the Name of Pope Julius [l] in Gratian's Collection, which ſeems to hint at the Beginning of the Practice, and condemns it as a great Corruption, contrary to the Primitive Inſtitution of our Saviour. Whereas, ſays he, ſome give the People the Euchariſt dipt in the Cup for a Complement of the Communion, this has no Authority to be produced for it out of the Goſpel, where Chriſt commended his Body and Blood to his Diſciples. For the Goſpel ſpeaks of the Bread being apart, and the Cup apart by themſelves. This is repeated in the ſame Words in the third Council of Braga, An. 675 [m]. Bona tells us farther, out of Micrologus [n], that it was forbidden by the old Roman Ordo; and that Humbertus de Sylva Candida, who wrote againſt the Greeks in the middle of the eleventh Century, declaims [o] bitterly againſt it; tho' he thinks, with more Zeal than he needed to do, for a very good Reaſon we may be ſure, becauſe the ſame Practice, as much an Abuſe as it was, and contrary to the firſt Inſtitution, was not long after authorized in the Roman Church. For Pope Urban the Second in the Council of Clermont ordered it in caſe of Neceſſity ſo to be adminiſtred to the Sick, and in other Caſes out of abundant Caution, for fear the Blood ſhould at any time be ſpilt. However it had various Fortune in the Roman Church. For Paſchal the Se-

[a] Cabaſilas Expoſ. Miſſæ. cap. 24. [b] Simeon. Opuſc. cont. Hæreſes. Et Reſp. 56. ad Gabriel. Pentapoliran.
[c] Allat. ibid. n. 19. [d] Ibid. n. 18. Ex Miſſa Mozarab. in die Paraſceues. [e] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 2. cap. 18. n. 2.
[f] Vid. Dr. Smith's Account of the Greek Church. p. 142.
[g] Latinius Ep. ad Anton. Auguſtin. [h] Arcud. de Concord. lib. 3. cap. 53. [i] Habert. Archieratic. Par. 10. Obſerv. 10. p. 271. [k] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 1. cap. 23. n. 8. & lib. 2. cap. 18. n. 3. [l] Gratian. de Conſecrat. Diſt. 2. cap. 7. Quod vero pro Complemento Communionis intinctam tradunt Euchariſtiam populis, nec hoc prolatum ex Evangelio teſtimonium recipit, ubi Apoſtolis Corpus ſuum & Sanguinem commendavit. Seorſum enim Panis, & ſeorſum Calicis commendatio memoratur. [m] Conc. Bracarenſ. 3 can. 1.
[n] Microlog. cap. 19. Non eſt Authenticum quod quidam corpus Domini intingunt, & intinctum pro Complemento Communionis populo diſtribuunt, nam Ordo Romanus contradicit.
[o] Humbert. Refutat. Calumniar. Michael. Cerularii.

cond not long after revoked the Licence of his Predeceſſor, and ordered [p] that neither Infants nor the Sick ſhould have the Communion mixed, but rather take the Blood alone, which he thought more decent than to give the Bread dipt in the Cup. Yet this did not ſatisfy the Council of Tours [q] mentioned by Ivo, for they thought ſtill, that the Sick in caſe of Neceſſity ought to have it dipt, that they might have it in both Kinds, and that the Presbyter who adminiſtred it, might ſay with Truth, The Body and Blood of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be unto thee for Remiſſion of Sins and Eternal Life. The Men of this Age did not yet think it lawful to communicate even the Sick in one Kind only, nor that the Prieſt could ſay with Truth to the Communicant, The Body and Blood of Chriſt, when he did not give him both Kinds. But Bona here pities their Ignorance: For they, poor Men! had not yet learned that noble Secret in Divinity, the Doctrine of Concomitancy, to know, that the Body of Chriſt cannot be without the Blood. But he goes on to acquaint us out of an old Ritual of Joannes Abrincatenſis, that this mixt Communion was ordered to be given to all the People likewiſe, for Fear of Effuſion. And in the antient Cuſtoms of the Monaſtery of Cluny publiſhed by Dacherius there is an Order, that the Novices ſhould thus communicate, for fear that if they took the Blood by itſelf, they might incur ſome Negligence and ſhed it. Though it is intimated in a Marginal Note there, that the old Cuſtom of giving both Kinds ſeparately was uſed in other Churches. In England the Cuſtom of mixing the Elements ſo far prevailed, that Ernulphus or Arnulphus Biſhop of Rocheſter, An. 1120, wrote a Letter in Defence of it, which is alſo publiſhed by Dacherius in his Spicilegium, Tom. 2. where one Lambert propoſes the Queſtion to him, why the Euchariſt was adminiſtred at preſent after a different and almoſt contrary manner to that which was obſerved by Jeſus Chriſt; becauſe it was cuſtomary at that Time to diſtribute an Hoſt ſteept in Wine to the Communicants; whereas Jeſus Chriſt gave his Body and Blood ſeparately? To this Arnulphus anſwers, that this was one of thoſe Things that might be altered, and therefore though antiently the two Species of Bread and Wine were given ſeparately, yet now they were given together, leſt any ill Accidents ſhould happen in the Diſtribution of the Wine alone, and leſt it ſhould ſtick on the Hairs of the Beard or the Whiskers, or ſhould be ſpilt by the Miniſter. Yet for all this not long after Richard Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in a Synod held at Weſtminſter, An. 1175, prohibited [r] the giving the Euchariſt ſteept in Wine as a Complement of the Communion. Thus this Matter was bandied about, and diſputed backwards and forwards in the Latin Church; ſome allowing it, others condemning it; now a Council ſettling it, and then another unſettling it, and condemning all that went before them; till at laſt the Council of Conſtance came in with her Paramount Authority, and, as Bona thinks, very wiſely put an End to all theſe Diſputes and Inconveniencies at once, by taking the Cup wholly from the People, and ordering that they ſhould neither have it ſeparately nor conjunctly: And ſo this Abuſe of giving the Euchariſt ſteept in Wine, after a long Courſe and Struggle of various Fortune, was cured with a worſe Error, which took away the Cup from the Laity, and denied one Part of the Sacrament wholly to the People. Let us now return again to the antient Church.

SECT. III. That the Ancients received ſometimes ſtanding, ſometimes kneeling, but never ſitting.

THE next Queſtion may be concerning the Poſture in which they received. The Reſolution of which muſt be in theſe three Concluſions. 1. That they ſometimes received ſtanding. 2. Sometimes kneeling. 3. Never ſitting, that we read of. That they frequently received the Communion ſtanding, may be evidenced two Ways: By a direct, and by a collateral Argument. The direct Argument is their poſitive Aſſertions concerning the ſtanding Poſture. Thus Dionyſius of Alexandria ſpeaking of one who had often communicated among the faithful, repreſents him, τραπέζῃ ᾠκοδομημένῃ, as ſtanding [s] at the Lord's Table. Upon which Valeſius [*] makes this Remark, that antiently they received the Euchariſt ſtanding, not kneeling, as now the Cuſtom is. And Habertus undertakes to prove againſt the Italian Divines [†] as he calls them, that the whole Divine Liturgy was celebrated ſtanding, and that they both conſecrated ſtanding, and received ſtanding. And Bona [‖] acknowledges the ſame for the Greek Church, though he is a little more doubtful of the Latin. For the Greek Church he produces the Authority of Chryſoſtom (Orat. in Encænia) and Cyril of Jeruſalem, who bids his Communicant [t] receive it bowing his Body in the Poſture of Worſhip and Adoration. Some interpret this Kneeling [u], but it ſignifies ſtanding with Inclination, or bowing of the Body in the manner of Adoration. And ſo St. Chryſoſtom [x] repreſents both Prieſt and People as ſtanding at the Altar. This Altar, ſays he, (ſpeaking of the Altar of a Man's own Soul, ſending up devoutly Prayers and Alms to God) is a more tremendous Altar than that whereat thou who art a Layman ſtandeſt. And again, As the Prieſt ſtands invoking the Spirit, ſo thou invokeſt him alſo, [p] Paſchal. Ep. 32. ad Pontium. [q] Conc. Turon. ap. Ivonem. Par. 2. cap. 19. Sacra Oblatio intincta debet eſſe in ſanguine Chriſti, ut veraciter Presbyter poſſit dicere infirmo, Corpus & Sanguis Domini noſtri Jeſu Chriſti proficiat tibi in remiſſionem peccatorum & vitam æternam. [r] Conc. Weſtmonaſter. can. 11. Inhibemus ne quis quaſi pro complemento Communionis intinctam alicui Euchariſtiam tradat. [s] Dionyſ. Epiſt. ap. Euſeb. lib. 7. cap. 9. [*] Valeſ. in Loc. Stantes, non ut hodie genibus flexis, accipiebant. [†] Habert. Archieratic. Par. 8. Obſerv. 10. p. 150. [‖] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 2. Chap. 17. n. 8. [t] Cyril. Catech. Myſt. 5. n. 19. κύπτων καὶ τρόπῳ προσευκτικῷ καὶ σεβάσματος, λέγων, ἀμήν. [u] Hamon L'Eſtrange, Allyance of Div. Offic. Chap. 7. p. 209. [x] Chryſ Hom. 20. in 2 Cor. p. 886. τοῦτο εἰκὼς ἔστιν ἐκείνῳ θυσιαστήριον, ᾧ σὺ παρέστηκας ὁ λαϊκός. It. καθάπερ ἕστηκε ὁ ἱερεὺς τὸ πνεῦμα καλῶν. &c.

not by thy Words, but by thy Works. In like manner St. Auſtin repreſenting the Chriſtians way of Worſhipping God at the Altar, to anſwer the Calumny of the Heathen, who accuſed them of giving divine Worſhip to their Martyrs, ſays, Which of the Faithful ever heard the Prieſt when he ſtands [y] at the Altar ſay in his Prayers, I offer Sacrifice unto thee, O Peter, or Paul, or Cyprian, when he offers to God at their Monuments or Memorials? Which I produce here only to ſhew, that their Prayers were then offered in a ſtanding Poſture at the Altar. Upon which Account it was uſual for the Deacon at ſuch Times, eſpecially on ſuch Days as this Poſture was uſed, to call upon the People in ſome ſuch Form of Admonition as that mentioned frequently by St. Chryſoſtom [z] and the Author of the Conſtitutions [a], ὀρθοὶ σώμῳ καλῶς, Let us ſtand rightly and devoutly to offer our Sacrifices and Oblations. Some think Tertullian alſo refers to this Poſture, when he ſays [b], Nonne ſolennior erit ſtatio tua, ſi & ad Aram Dei ſteteris? Will not your Station be the more ſolemn, if you alſo ſtand at the Altar of God? But to ſpeak freely, I think Tertullian in that Place uſes the Word ſtanding, not to diſtinguiſh any particular Poſture of Prayer, but only to denote a longer Continuance in it on the Stationary Days, or Half-Faſts, when they continued their religious Aſſemblies till three in the Afternoon: For on theſe Days, as we ſhall hear preſently, they prayed always kneeling, though on other Days they did not; and therefore Tertullian could not mean that they prayed ſtanding on thoſe Days, but only that they extended their Devotions to a greater length on thoſe Stationary Days beyond others. But without this controverted Paſſage of Tertullian, there is ſufficient Evidence from the foregoing Teſtimonies, of their ſtanding to receive the Euchariſt at the Lord's Table.

And this is farther confirmed by a collateral Argument, which is, that on the Lord's Day, and all the Days of Pentecoſt, they were obliged to pray ſtanding, and in no other Poſture, as has been ſhewed [*] at large above: Therefore it is very reaſonable to believe, that at all ſuch Times they received the Euchariſt in the ſame Poſture they were obliged to pray, that is, ſtanding at the Altar.

But then the uſual Cuſtom was, on all other Days, and particularly on the Stationary Days, for the whole Church to pray kneeling, as has likewiſe been fully [†] evinced before: And therefore it is no leſs reaſonable to believe, that they received the Communion in the ſame Poſture as they prayed, though there are not ſuch poſitive Evidences of their Practice. What ſome alledge out of Tertullian, that the People did Aris Dei adgeniculari, kneel down to the Altars of God [c], is no good Proof: For that is only a corrupt Reading of the firſt Editions, which others ſince read more correctly, Caris Dei adgeniculari, falling at the Knees of the Favourites of God; alluding to the Cuſtom of Penitents falling at the Feet of the Miniſters and People, to beg their Prayers for them when they went into the Church. Nor is the Argument much more ſolid that others bring out of Cyril's Catechiſm, where he bids his Communicant receive the Euchariſt κύπλων: For that, as I have obſerved juſt now, ſignifies not kneeling, but ſtanding in a bowing Poſture. What St. Chryſoſtom ſays in one of his Exhortations to Communicants, ſeems more nearly to expreſs it: Let us come with trembling, let us give thanks, let us fall down [d] and confeſs our Sins, let us weep and lament for our Miſcarriages, let us pour out fervent Prayers to God, and let us come with a becoming Reverence as to our heavenly King. But if there were none of theſe Expreſſions, the very Cuſtom of kneeling at Prayers on theſe Days is a ſufficient Indication of the Poſture in which at the ſame time they received the Communion.

As to Sitting, there is no Example of it, nor any Intimation leading toward it in any antient Writer. I have ſhewed before, that in many Churches they allowed no ſitting at all in time of Divine Service, neither in Preaching, nor Reading the Scripture, nor in Pſalmody, nor in Praying, nor after Praying neither. And it would be unreaſonable to imagine, that what was rejected at all other Times, ſhould be allowed in receiving the Communion. Cardinal Perron indeed labours hard to prove, that the Apoſtles received ſitting, and that ſitting was alſo a Poſture of Adoration But his Vanity is abundantly chaſtiſed and expoſed by the learned Daillé, as I have noted before [‡] upon another Occaſion. So that this Poſture is wholly without Example in the antient Church. Nor are there many Examples of it among the Moderns; and of thoſe that be, ſome of them are ſuch, as conſidering their Motives, one would leaſt of all chuſe to imitate them. The Arians in Poland are ſaid to receive the Communion ſitting, to ſhew that they do not believe Chriſt to be their God, but only their Fellow-Creature. For which reaſon ſome of the Proteſtant Poliſh Synods [e] expreſsly forbid this Poſture, as peculiar to the Arians, and obliged all their People to receive either ſtanding or kneeling, not ſitting, as being a Poſture taken up by the Arians, and contrary to the Practice of all Proteſtant Churches. We are likewiſe told, that it is the ſingular Privilege of the Pope to communicate ſitting, whenever he performs the Office of Conſecration. Bona [f] not only tells us this, but deſcribes the whole Ceremony out of the Book called Ceremoniale Romani Pontificis, and the old Ordo Romanus, which they that are curious in ſuch Matters may conſult in their proper Places. I go on with the Practice of the antient Church.

[y] Aug. de Civ. Dei lib. 8. cap. 27. Quis audivit aliquando Fidelium ſtantem Sacerdotem ad altare —— dicere in Precibus, Offero tibi Sacrificium Petre, vel Paule, vel Cypriane, cum apud eorum Memorias offeratur Deo, &c. It. cont. Fauſtum. lib. 20. cap. 21. Quis Antiſtitum aſſiſtens altari, aliquando dixit, Offerimus tibi Petre aut Paule aut Cypriane? ſed quod offertur, offertur Deo, &c.

[z] Chryſ. Hom. 2. in 2 Cor. p. 740. Hom. 29. de Incomprehenſibili. T. 1. p. 375. [a] Conſtit. lib. 8. cap. 12. [b] Tertul. de Orat. cap. 14. [*] Book XIII. Chap. viii. n. 3.

[†] Book XIII. Chap. viii. n. 4. [c] Tertul. de Pœnitent. cap. 9. [d] Chryſ. Hom. Ser. 31. in Natal. Chriſti. T. 5. p. 480. περσπέσωμεν ἐξομολογέμενοι, &c. [‡] Book XIII. Chap. viii. n. 7. [e] Synod. Wiodiſlav. an. 1583. Artic. 6. in Corpore Confeſſion. Par. 2. p. 309. Sententia jam olim in Sendomirienſi Synodo agitata, & Concluſio in generali Cracovienſi atque Petricovienſi Synodo facta ac repetita, in hoc etiam Confeſſu approbata eſt: nempe ne in uſu ſit ſeſſio ad Menſam Dominicam in ullis hujus noſtri Conſenſus Eccleſiis. Nam hæc Ceremonia, licet cum cæteris libera, Eccleſiis Chriſtianis & Cœtibus Evangelicis non eſt uſitata, tantumque Infidelibus Arianis, cum Domino pari ſolio ſeſe collocantibus propria, &c. Vid. Synod. Petricovenſ. Art. 4. ibid. p. 306. Synod. Cracovineſ. Art. 4. p. 303.

SECT. IV.

No Elevation of the Hoſt for divine Adoration in the antient Church for many Ages, till the Riſe of Tranſubſtantiation.

THERE is no one Thing that has made greater Stir and Confuſion in the Chriſtian World, for ſome Ages paſs'd, than the Adoration of the Hoſt, grounded upon a falſe Preſumption, that it is not Bread and Wine, but tranſubſtantiated into the real Body and Blood of Chriſt. I intend not to enter upon the Hiſtory of Tranſubſtantiation (which is a Doctrinal Point, and comes not properly into this Work, which only inquires into the Practice of the Church) but ſhall content myſelf to ſay, that in Fact the moſt eminent of the antient Fathers have declared, as plain as Words can make it, that the Change made in the Elements of Bread and Wine by Conſecration, is not ſuch a Change as deſtroys their Nature and Subſtance, but only alters their Qualities, and elevates them to a ſpiritual Uſe, as is done in many other Conſecrations, where the Qualities of Things are much altered without any real Change of Subſtance. Thus Gregory Nyſſen [g], This Altar before which we ſtand, is but common Stone in its Nature, differing nothing from other Stones wherewith our Walls are built; but after it is conſecrated to the Service of God, and has received a Benediction, it is an holy Table, an immaculate Altar, not to be touched by any but by the Prieſts, and that with the greateſt Reverence. The Bread alſo at firſt is but common Bread, but when once it is ſanctified by the holy Myſtery, it is made and called the Body of Chriſt. So the myſtical Oyl, and ſo the Wine, though they be Things of little value before the Benediction, yet after their Sanctification by the Spirit, they both of them work Wonders. The ſame Power of the Word makes a Prieſt become honourable and venerable, when he is ſeparated from the Community of the Vulgar by a new Benediction. For he who before was only one of the common People, is now immediately made a Ruler and Preſident, a Teacher of Piety, and a Miniſter of the holy Myſteries: And all theſe Things he does without any Change in his Body or Shape; for to all outward Appearance he is the ſame that he was, but the Change is in his inviſible Soul, by an inviſible Power and Grace. Cyril of Jeruſalem [h] uſes the ſame Similitude and Illuſtration: Beware that you take not this Ointment to be bare Ointment. For as the Bread in the Euchariſt, after the Invocation of the Holy Spirit, is not mere Bread, but the Body of Chriſt: So this holy Ointment after Invocation, is not bare or common Ointment, but it is the Gift or Grace of Chriſt and the Holy Spirit, who by his Preſence and Divine Nature makes it efficacious; ſo that the Body is anointed ſymbolically with the viſible Ointment, but the Soul is ſanctified by the Holy and Quickening Spirit. St. Chryſoſtom in his famous Epiſtle to Cæſarius makes a like Compariſon, to explain the two Natures of Chriſt againſt the Apollinarians, to ſhew that he had both an Human and Divine Subſtance in reality without any Transformation or Confuſion: As the Bread, ſays he, before it is ſanctified, is called Bread, but after the Divine Grace has ſanctified it by the Mediation of the Prieſt, it is no longer called Bread, but dignified with the Name of the Body of the Lord, though the Nature of Bread remain in it, and they are not ſaid to be two, but one Body of the Son: So here the Divine Nature reſiding or dwelling in the Human Body, they both together make one Son and one Perſon. When this Paſſage was firſt produced by Peter Martyr, it was looked upon as ſo unanſwerable, that they of the Romiſh Church had no other way to evade the Force of it, but to cry out, It was a Forgery. Peter Martyr left it in the Lambeth Library, but it was raviſh'd thence in the Reign of Queen Mary. Bigotius a Learned French Papiſt publiſhed the Original, but the whole Edition was ſuppreſſed. Yet Le Moyne publiſhed it again in Latin among his Varia Sacra: And a Learned Prelate, who now ſo deſervedly holds the Primacy in our own Church, and whoſe indefatigable Induſtry againſt Popery will never be forgotten, having procured the Sheets which the Sorbon Doctors cauſed to be ſuppreſs'd in Bigotius's Edition of Palladius, publiſhed it [i] in our own Tongue, with ſuch of the Greek Fragments as are now remaining. And in theſe Monuments it will ſtand as the unanſwerable Teſtimony of St. Chryſoſtom, and a Key to explain all other Paſſages of the Greek Writers of that Age, who were undoubtedly in the ſame Sentiments of the Bread and Wine ſtill remaining unalterable in their Subſtance.

Theodoret lived not long after St. Chryſoſtom, and he as plainly ſays, that the Bread and Wine remain ſtill in their own Nature after Conſecration. Our Saviour, ſays he, would have thoſe [k] who are Partakers of the divine Myſteries, not to mind the Nature of the Things they ſee, but by the Change of Names to believe that Change which is wrought by Grace. For he that called his own Natural Body Wheat and Bread, and gave it the Name of a Vine; he alſo honoured the viſible Symbols or Elements with the Name of his Body and Blood, not changing their Nature, but adding Grace to Nature. In another Place [l] he uſes the very ſame Weapon to foil an Eutychian Heretick, who to prove that Chriſt's Human Nature was changed into the Divine Nature after Union, uſes this Argument: As the Symbols of the Lord's Body and Blood are one Thing before the Invocation of the Prieſt, but after Invocation are changed, and become another Thing: So alſo the Body of our Lord after its Aſſumption was changed into the Divine Subſtance. To which Theodoret thus replies, Thou art taken in thy own Nets which thou haſt made: For neither do the myſtical Symbols depart from their own Nature after Conſecration, but remain in their former Subſtance, Figure and Form, and are viſible and palpable, as they were before; yet they are underſtood and believed to be what they are made, and are reverenced as thoſe Things which they are made. Compare therefore the Image with the Original, and thou ſhalt ſee their Likeneſs. For the Type muſt anſwer to the Truth. That Body has the ſame Form and Figure and Circumſcription, and in a word has the ſame Subſtance of a Body that it had before, but it is immortal after the Reſurrection, and is freed from all Corruption, and ſits at God's Right Hand, and is adored by every Creature, as being called the Body of the Lord of Nature. Theſe Words are ſo plain, that the Bread continues in its own Subſtance after Conſecration, as the Body of Chriſt continues in the Subſtance of Human Nature after its Aſſumption, that as Biſhop Coſins [m] has obſerved, Nicolin the Pope's Printer, who ſet forth theſe Dialogues at Rome, An. 1547, owns that Theodoret's Opinion, as to what concerns Tranſubſtantiation, was not found, but he might be excuſed, becauſe the Church had made no Decree about it.

[f] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 2. cap. 17. n. 8. [g] Nyſſen. de Bapt. Chriſti. Tom. 3. p. 369. [h] Cyril. Catech. Myſt. 3. n. 3. [i] Defence of the Expoſition of the Doctrine of the Church of England, againſt Mr. de Meaux. Lond. 1686. [k] Theod. Dialog. 1. tom. 4. p. 17. Vid. Ep. 130, & 145.

Ephrem Biſhop of Antioch lived about a hundred Years after Theodoret, An. 540, and he wrote againſt the Eutychians in the ſame manner. No Man, ſays he, that hath any Reaſon [n], will ſay, the Nature of palpable and impalpable, of viſible and inviſible, is the ſame. For ſo the Body of Chriſt, which is received by the Faithful, does not depart from its own ſenſible Subſtance, and yet it is united to a ſpiritual Grace: And ſo Baptiſm, though it becomes wholly a ſpiritual Thing and but one Thing, yet it preſerves the Property of its ſenſible Subſtance, I mean Water, and does not loſe what it was before.

The Latin Fathers are not leſs plain and full in their Teſtimony about this Matter. Tertullian not only frequently ſays it is Bread repreſenting [o] the Lord's Body; and the Figure of his Body [p]; but alſo teaches us to truſt to the Teſtimony of our Senſes in this and many other Things relating to Chriſt. We are not to call in Queſtion thoſe Senſes [q] of ours, leſt we begin to doubt of the Certainty of the very Things that are related of Chriſt, whether he was not deceived, when he ſaw Satan fall from Heaven, or when he heard the Father's Voice teſtifying of him, or when he touched the Hand of Peter's Mother, or when he ſmelled the Spirit of the Ointment which he accepted to his Burial, or when he taſted the Wine that he conſecrated to be the Memorial of his Blood. St. John argues upon the Teſtimony of our Senſes, what we have ſeen, what we have heard, what we have ſeen with our Eyes, and our Hands have handled of the Word of Life. But this Atteſtation is falſe, if our Senſes may be deceived in the Nature of Things, which we ſee with our Eyes, and hear with our Ears, and touch with our Hands. It is plain from theſe Words of Tertullian, that he never thought of Tranſubſtantiation, which contradicts four of the five Senſes of all Mankind, the Sight, the Touch, the Taſte and the Smell; and that he muſt be the moſt abſurd Man that ever wrote, if after all he could believe that not to be Bread, which according to his own Rule had the Teſtimony of ſo many ſeveral Senſes.

St. Auſtin uſes the ſame Argument with Tertullian in one of his Homilies to the newly baptized; which though it be not now among St. Auſtin's Works, yet it is preſerved by Fulgentius [r] and Bede and Bertram. Here inſtructing them about the Sacrament, he tells them, that what they ſaw upon the Altar was Bread and the Cup, as their own Eyes could teſtify [s] to them: But what their Faith required to be inſtructed about, was, that the Bread is the Body of Chriſt, and the Cup the Blood of Chriſt. But ſuch a Thought as this will preſently ariſe in your Hearts: Chriſt took his Body into Heaven, whence he ſhall come to judge the Quick and the Dead. And there he now ſits at the Right-hand of the Father. How then is Bread his Body? Or how is the Cup, or that which is contained in the Cup, his Blood? Theſe Things, my Brethren, are therefore called Sacraments, becauſe in them one Thing is ſeen, and another is underſtood. That which is ſeen, has a bodily Appearance; that which is underſtood, has a ſpiritual Fruit. If therefore you would underſtand the Body of Chriſt, hear what the Apoſtle ſays to the Faithful, Ye are the Body of Chriſt and his Members. If therefore ye be the Body and Members of Chriſt, your Myſtery or Sacrament is laid upon the Lord's Table, ye receive the Sacrament of the Lord. Ye answer, Amen, to what ye are, and by your Answer subscribe to the Truth of it. Thou hearest the Minister say to thee, the Body of Christ, and thou answerest, Amen. Be thou a Member of the Body of Christ, that thy Amen may be true. But why then is this Mystery in Bread? Let us here bring nothing of our own, but hear the Apostle speak again. When he therefore speaks of this Sacrament, he says, We being many, are one Bread, and one Body. Understand and Rejoice. We being many, are Unity, Piety, Truth and Charity, one Bread and one Body. Recollect and consider, that the Bread is not made of one Grain, but of many. When ye were exorcised, ye were then, as it were, Ground; when ye were baptized, ye were, as it were, sprinkled, or mixed and wet together into one Mass; when ye received the Fire of the Holy Ghost, ye were, as it were, baked. Be ye therefore what ye see, and receive what ye are. Here St. Austin first says plainly, That it was Bread and Wine that was upon the Altar, for which he appeals to the Testimony of their Senses. 2. That this very Bread and Wine is the Body and Blood of Christ. Consequently it could not be his natural Body in the Substance, but only Sacramentally. 3. He says, the natural Body of Christ is only in Heaven: But the Sacrament has the Name of his Body; because tho' in outward, visible, and corporeal Appearance it is only Bread, yet it is attended with a spiritual Fruit. 4. Lastly he says, that the Sacrament not only is a Representative of the natural Body of Christ, but also of the Mystical Body, the Church; and that, as a Symbol of the Church's Unity, it is called the Body of Christ in this Sense, as well as the other. So that if there were any real Transubstantiation, the Bread must be changed into the Mystical Body of Christ, that is, his Church, as well as into the Body natural. These Things might be confirmed from abundance of parallel Passages in St. Austin's Works, but this one is sufficient to shew his meaning.

[l] Id. Dial. 2. p. 85. [m] Coſins Hiſt. of Tranſubſtan. p. 77. [n] Ephrem ap. Photium. Cod. 229. [o] Tertul. cont. Marc. lib. 1. cap. 14. Panem quo ipſum corpus ſuum repræſentat. [p] Cont. Marc. l. 4. cap. 40. Panem corpus ſuum fecit, hoc eſt corpus meum dicendo, id eſt, Figura corporis mei. [q] De Anima. cap. 17. Non licet nobis in dubium ſenſus iſtos vocare, ne & in Chriſto de fide eorum deliberetur —— ne forte deceptus ſit, cum Petri ſocrum tetigit, aut alium poſtea untiguen ſenſerit ſpiritum, quod in ſepulturam ſuam acceptavit, alium poſtea vini ſaporem, quod in ſanguinis ſui Memoriam conſecravit, &c. Falſa utique Teſtatio, ſi oculorum & aurium & manuum ſenſus natura mentitur. [r] Fulgent. de Bapt. Æthiopis. cap. 11. Beda in 1 Cor. 10. Bertram. de Corpore & Sanguine Dom. [s] Quod ergo videtis, Panis eſt & Calix, quod vobis etiam oculi veſtri renunciant. Quod autem Fides veſtra poſtulat inſtruenda, Panis eſt Corpus Chriſti, Calix ſanguis Chriſti. —— Quomodo eſt Panis Corpus ejus? Et Calix, vel quod habet Calix, quomodo eſt Sanguis ejus? Iſta, fratres, ideo dicuntur Sacramenta, quia in eis aliud videtur, aliud intelligitur. Quod videtur, ſpeciem habet corporalem; quod intelligitur, fructum habet ſpiritalem. Corpus ergo Chriſti ſi vis intelligere, Apoſtolum audi dicentem Fidelibus, Vos eſtis Corpus Chriſti & Membra, &c.

the

The next irrefragable Testimony is that of Pope Gelasius, who wrote against the Nestorians and Eutychians about the Reality of the two Natures in Christ, An. 490, where he thus proves them: Doubtless the Sacraments of the Body and Blood of Christ which we receive, are a Divine Thing; and therefore by them we are made Partakers of the Divine Nature, and yet the Substance and Nature [t] of Bread and Wine do not cease to be in them. And indeed the Image and Similitude of the Body and Blood of Christ is celebrated in the mysterious Action. By this therefore is evidently shewed us, that we are to believe the same Thing in our Lord Christ, as we profess and celebrate and take in his Image: That as by the perfecting Virtue of the Holy Ghost the Elements pass into a Divine Substance, whilst their Nature still remains in its own Propriety; so in that principal Mystery (the Union of the Divine and Human Nature) whose Efficacy and Power these represent, there remains one true and perfect Christ, both Natures, of which he consists, continuing in their Properties unchangeable. He must be blind that cannot see, how the Force of this Argument supposes, that Bread and Wine continue in their proper Nature and Substance in the Eucharist, notwithstanding the Sacramental Union that is made between them and the Body of Christ by the sacred Use of them. Without this it had been of no Force against the Eutychians, and they might with a very obvious Reply have inverted the Argument upon him, by saying, that as the Bread was changed from its own Nature into the very Substance of the natural Body of Christ, and remained no longer Bread; so the Human Nature was really changed into the Divine Nature, and continued no longer in its own Substance after its Assumption into the Godhead. Which Argument in the Mouth of an Eutychian had been unanswerable to Gelasius, had he with his Successors given into the Doctrine of Transubstantiation.

Some time after Gelasius, lived Facundus, an African Bishop; about the Year 550, he wrote to excuse Theodorus of Mopsuestia, for saying, That Christ received the Adoption of Sons: Which he does after this manner: Christ vouchsafed to receive the Sacrament of Adoption, both when he was circumcised, and when he was baptized. Now the Sacrament of Adoption may be called Adoption, as we call the Sacrament of his Body and Blood, which is in the consecrated Bread and Cup, his Body and Blood, not because the Bread is properly [u] his Body, or the Cup his Blood, but because they contain the Mystery of his Body and Blood. Whence our Saviour, when he blessed the Bread and Cup, and gave them to his Disciples, called them his Body and Blood. It is plain, according to Facundus, that the Bread and Wine are not properly the Body and Blood of Christ, but properly Bread and Wine still, and only called his Body and Blood, as Baptism and Circumcision are called Adoption, because they are the Sacraments of Adoption, and not the very Thing which they represent.

To these I only add the Testimony of Isidore Bishop of Sevil, who lived in the Beginning of the seventh Century, An. 630. He speaking of the Rites of the Church [x], says, the Bread, because [t] Gelas. de duabus Natur. cont. Nestor. & Eutych. Bibl. Pat. t. 4. p. 422. Certe sacramenta quæ sumimus Corporis & Sanguinis Domini divina res est, propter quod & per eadem Divinæ efficimur consortes naturæ, & tamen esse non desinit substantia vel Natura Panis & Vini. Et certe Imago & Similitudo Corporis & Sanguinis Christi in actione Mysteriorum celebrantur, &c.

[u] Facund. lib. 9. cap. 5. Potest sacramentum Adoptionis adoptio nuncupari, sicut Sacramentum corporis & sanguinis ejus, quod est in pane & poculo consecrato, corpus ejus & sanguinem dicimus; non quod Proprie corpus ejus sit panis & poculum sanguis, sed quod in se Mysterium corporis sanguinisque contineant. Hinc & ipse Dominus benedictum panem & calicem, quem Discipulis tradidit, corpus & sanguinem suum vocavit. &c. [x] Isidor. Hispal. de Eccles. Offic. lib. 1. cap. 18. Panis quia confirmat corpus, ideo Christi corpus nuncupatur; Vinum autem, quia Sanguinem operatur in carne, ideo ad Sanguinem Christi refertur. Hæc autem duo sunt visibilia, &c.

it

it nouriſhes and ſtrengthens our Bodies, is therefore called the Body of Chriſt; and the Wine, becauſe it creates Blood in our Fleſh, is called the Blood of Chriſt. Now theſe two Things are viſible, but being ſanctified by the Holy Ghoſt, they become the Sacrament of the Lord's Body. Bertram alſo [y] quotes a like Expreſſion out of Iſidore's Origines: That as the viſible Subſtance of Bread and Wine nouriſh the outward Man; ſo the Word of Chriſt, who is the Bread of Life, refreſheth the Souls of the Faithful, being received by Faith. But as Biſhop Coſins and Mr. Aubertin have obſerved, this Paſſage by ſome pious Fraud is not to be found in its proper Place. Now if the Bread be ſuch Bread in Subſtance as nouriſhes the Body, then it muſt be ſuch as is properly Bread ſtill, and not the incorruptible Body of Chriſt, which cannot be ſaid to be caſt out into the Draught, which yet Origen ſays of it [z], that the material Part of the Sacrament, the typical and ſymbolical Body of Chriſt, which goes in at the Mouth, goes into the Belly; but the real Body of Chriſt is only received by thoſe that are worthy, and by Faith. By all which it is evident, the Ancients did not know any thing of the new Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, but believed that the Bread and Wine ſtill remained in the Euchariſt in their proper Nature. He that would ſee more of this, may conſult Biſhop Coſins's Hiſtory of Tranſubſtantiation, and Mr. Aubertin's elaborate Book of the Euchariſt, where he may find all the other Arguments againſt this Doctrine propoſed, and the Teſtimonies of every Father vindicated againſt the Sophiſtry of Perron and Bellarmin, and all other Romiſh Writers upon this Subject; and alſo ſee what Oppoſition was made to the new Hypotheſis of Paſchaſius Rathbertus (which was rather a Conſubſtantiation than a Tranſubſtantiation) as ſoon as it appeared, by Rabanus Maurus, Amalarius, Walafridus Strabo, Heribaldus, Lupus, Frudegardus, Joannes Erigena, Prudentius Tricaſſin, Chriſtianus Druthmarus, Alfricus and the Saxon Homilies, Fulbertus Carnotenſis, Leuthericus Senonenſis, Berno Augienſis and others, to the time of Berengarius, after whom it met with greater Oppoſition from Honorius Auguſtodunenſis, Amalricus, Peter and Henry de Bruis, Guido Groſſus Archbiſhop of Narbo, Francus Abbas, the Waldenſes and Albigenſes, the Bohemians and Followers of John Huſs and Jerom of Prague, the Wickleviſts here in England, among whom was the famous Riginald Peacock, and many other learned Men to the time of the Reformation. The firſt Inventor of the name Tranſubſtantiation was Stephanus Eduenſis [a], as Albertin there ſhews: And he lived not long before the Council of Lateran, which firſt dogmatically eſtabliſhed it, An. 1215. He ſhews, that before this they rather believed an Impanation, or Concomitancy of the Body with the Bread ſtill remaining. Biſhop Coſins has many curious Remarks of the ſame Nature, and particularly he obſerves of the Recantation which Pope Nicholas II. obliged Berengarius to make, that it was ſo crude and abſurd, that even the preſent Romaniſts cannot digeſt it: For there he was obliged to profeſs, that the very Body and Blood of Chriſt was touched and broken by the Hands of the Prieſt, and ground with the Teeth of the Faithful, not ſacramentally only, but in truth and ſenſibly. Which the Gloſſer upon Gratian, John Semeca, marks with this Note [b], that unleſs you underſtand it cautiouſly, it will lead into a greater Hereſy than that of Berengarius; for it exceeds Truth, and is ſpoken hyperbolically. So little Underſtanding was there of this monſtrous Doctrine, when firſt it began to make its Appearance in the World.

But I ſhall purſue this Matter no farther, having ſufficiently demonſtrated that the Ancients knew nothing of this Doctrine, ſince they unanimouſly declared, that the Bread and Wine continued in their own proper Subſtance after Conſecration. Whence it follows, that they could not adore the Euchariſt with divine Adoration, which they did not believe to be any otherwiſe than typically and ſymbolically the Body of Chriſt. Indeed they did not ſo much as elevate it upon any Account for many Ages, much leſs for Adoration. Some pretend to cite St. Baſil's Authority for lifting it up to ſhew it to the People in order to Adoration. So Schelſtrate [c], and Bona [d] after Bellarmin. But his Words will bear no ſuch Senſe: For he neither ſpeaks of Adoration, nor yet of Elevation to ſhew it to the People, but only of Conſecration, as the Greek Word, ἀνάδειξις, properly ſignifies, both in Foreign and Eccleſiaſtical Writers, as Mr. Aubertin proves by various Examples [e]. St. Baſil's Words are theſe, τὰ τῆ ἐπικλήσεως ῥήματα ἐπὶ τῆ ἀναδείξεως τῦ ἄρτυ τῆ ἐυχαριστίας, τίς τῶν ἁγίων ἐγγράφως ἡμῖν καταλέλοιπεν; [f]. Which Bellarmin, following a corrupt Latin Tranſlation, renders thus: Which of the Saints has left us in Writing the Words in which the People invocate the Euchariſt, when it is ſhewed to them? Whereas they ought to be rendered thus: Which of the Saints has left us in Writing the Words of the Invocation, or Prayer, wherewith the Euchariſt is conſecrated? And ſo Perron [g] himſelf with more than ordinary Ingenuity confeſſes, telling us, That St. Baſil's Words are not to be underſtood of the Peoples praying to the Euchariſt, but of the Miniſter's praying to God in a ſolemn Form of Invocation to conſecrate the Euchariſt. Which, as I have ſhewed before [*], was not done barely by pronouncing thoſe Words, This is my Body, as now it is in the Roman Church; but by a formal Invocation and Thankſgiving, beſeeching God to ſanctify the Gifts; which Form, St. Basil rightly says, was not by any of the Evangelists left in Writing. Some again urge the Testimony of Germanus Bishop of Constantinople, as one who speaks of elevating the Host after Consecration. And indeed he does so [b]: But then he gives another Reason for it, and not that of the Peoples Adoration. He says, It was to represent our Saviour's Elevation upon the Cross, and his Dying there, together with his Rising from the Dead. Which was far from the modern Intent of Elevation. This Author lived about the Year 715, and he is the first that mentions this Elevation among the Greeks, without any notice of Adoration. And for the Latin Church, there is a perfect Silence in all the older Ritualists about it till the eleventh Century, when it is mentioned by Ivo [i] Carnotensis and Hugo de sancto Victore [k], tho' still for the same Reason given by Germanus, and not for Adoration. The first Writer that assigns the Reason of it to be for Adoration, as Mr. Daillé [l] proves at large, is Gulielmus Durantus, who wrote his Rationale [m] about the Year 1386. So that Transubstantiation and Adoration of the Eucharist, as Mother and Daughter, came within an Age of one another. The most Learned now in the Roman Church, confess the main of this. Bona [n] says very frankly, he cannot trace the Original of elevating the Sacrament immediately after Consecration in the Latin Church, higher than Ivo, and Gulielmus Parisiensis, and Hildebert of Tours, who make mention of ringing a Bell at this Elevation, in the twelfth and thirteenth Century when they lived: But he owns the old Sacramentaria, whether Printed or Manuscript, and the old Ritualists, Alcuin, Amalarius, Strabo, Micrologus and the rest, have not a Syllable about it. And whereas Stephen Durantus [o] boasts of its Antiquity, and says it begun with the very Infancy of the Church, he corrects his Mistake, as relying only upon the Greek Writers, who prove nothing of the Customs of the Latin Church. So that here we have a plain Acknowledgment of its Novelty: And Daillé [p] takes the same Confession under the Hand of Morinus [q] and Goar [r], two other learned Writers of the Roman Church, as Bishop Stillingfleet [s] does also from Menardus.

[y] Bertram. de Corp. & Sang. Dom. ex Iſidor. Orig. lib. 6. cap. 19. [z] Origen. Com. in Mat. 15. t. 2. p. 27. [a] Albertin. de Euchar. lib. 3. p. 969. [b] Grat. de Conſecr. Diſt. 2. cap. 42. [c] Schelſtrat. de Conc. Antioch. p. 219. [d] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 2. cap. 13. n. 2. Bellarm. de Euchar. lib. 2. cap. 15. [e] Albertin. de Euchar. lib. 2. p. 446. [f] Baſil. de Spir. Sancto. cap. 27. [g] Perron. de Euchar. lib. 2. Author. 15. cap. 3. ap. Albertin. ibid. [*] Book XV. Chap. iii, n. 11.

which

SECT. V.

No Adoration of the Host before the twelfth or thirteenth Century.

BUT it may be said, Though there was no Elevation of the Host, nor Ringing of a Bell before this time in the Latin Church, yet there might be divine Adoration for all that paid to the Eucharist from the Beginning. Cardinal Perron was so confident of this, that he makes Sitting a Posture of Devotion, on purpose to prove that the Apostles adored it Sitting. The Vanity of which Pretence has been shewed before. A great many other Proofs are alledged out of the Ancients to prove this Adoration. But they prove no more, but either that a Veneration was paid to the Sacrament, as to the Books of the Gospel, and the Water of Baptism, and the Lord's Table, and many other sacred Things, which no one denies; or else, that the Adoration was given to Christ, as divinely present every where, or as Sitting at the Right-hand of God in Heaven, whither they were directed, by the Admonition of Sursum Corda, to lift up their Hearts, and to elevate their own Souls, to adore him there. St. Jerom speaks of common and ordinary Veneration, when he says, Men were taught [t] by the Scriptures, with what Veneration they ought to receive holy Things, and serve in the Ministry of Christ's Altar, and not to esteem the holy Cups, and holy Veils, and other Things pertaining to the Service of the Lord's Passion, to be without Holiness, as inanimate Things and void of Sense, but as Things, which for their Relation to the Body and Blood of the Lord, were to be venerated with the same Majesty and Reverence as his Body and Blood. Such Reverence as this, which was given to the Cups and other Utensils of the Altar, no doubt was given to the Sacrament, as the symbolical Body and Blood of Christ: But this could not be a Veneration of divine Worship and Adoration, unless we can think that they gave divine Worship to the Cups and Utensils of the Altar, which he says were venerated with the same Respect as the Body and Blood of Christ. Mr Aubertin [u] gives a great many Instances of this kind of Veneration paid to Churches, and the Book of the Law, and Baptism, which can signify no more than their reverend Use of them as sacred and venerable Things. And such a Veneration they paid to the Sacrament; never putting consecrated Bread to any prophane or common Use; much less violating its Sacredness by any more indecent Practice, as was that Outrage of the Donatists, when they threw it to the Dogs; never touching it with unwashen Hands; being extreamly cautious not to let any Particle of it fall to the Ground: Which is a particular Caution, noted by many of the Ancients, Tertullian [x], St. Austin [y], Cyril of Jerusalem [z], and Origen [*], who stiles it a Veneration in expres Terms. Whence Bellarmin very wisely concludes, they [b] German. Theoria Rer. Divin. Bibl.Patr. Gr. Lat. t. 2. p. 163. [i] Ivo, Epist. de Sacram. Missæ. [k] Hugo de S. Vict. de Missæ Observat. lib. 2. cap. 28. [l] Dallæ de Objecto Cultus, lib. 2. cap. 6. [m] Durant. Rational. lib. 4. de 6. Parte Canonis. [n] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 2. chap. 13. n. 2. [o] Bona. ibid. [p] Dallæ, ubi supra. [q] Morin. de Ordinat. Par. 3. Exercit. 9. cap. 1. [r] Goar. Not. in Eucholog. p. 146. [s] Stilling. Orig. Brit. p. 256. ex Menardo, Not. in Gregor. Sacram. p. 374. [t] Hieron. Ep. ad Theophil. Discant, qui ignorant, eruditi testimoniis Scripturarum, qua debeant Veneratione Sancta suscipere, & altaris Christi ministerio deservire, sacrosque Calices, & sancta Velamina, & cætera quæ ad cultum pertinent Dominicæ Passionis, non quasi inanima & sensu carentis sanctimoniam non habere, sed ex consortio corporis & sanguinis Domini, eadem qua corpus ejus & sanguis majestate veneranda. [u] Albertin. de Euchar. p. 432. [x] Tertul. de Coron. Mil. cap. 3. [y] Aug. Hom. 26. ex 50. [z] Cyril. Catech. Myst n. 18. [*] Orig. Hom. 13. in Exod. Cum suscipitis corpus Domini, cum omni Cautela & Veneratione servatis, ne ex eo parum quid decidat, &c.

must

muſt needs believe it to be Chriſt's natural Body, and adore it. As if holy Things could not be uſed with ſuch Caution and Reverence, but preſently it muſt be interpreted an Act of Adoration.

But the Ancients ſometimes ſay, they worſhipped Chriſt in the Euchariſt. Which we do not deny neither. St. Auſtin ſays, no Man eats [a] the Fleſh of Chriſt, but he that firſt worſhips it. And there are like Expreſſions in Ambroſe, Chryſoſtom, and ſome other antient Writers. But then they ſufficiently explain their own meaning, giving us to underſtand, that they neither ſpeak of Oral Manducation, nor of adoring Chriſt as corporeally preſent in the Euchariſt, but as ſpiritually preſent, or elſe as corporeally abſent in Heaven. St. Chryſoſtom [b] ſays, they fell down before Chriſt their King as Captives in Baptiſm, and that they caſt themſelves down upon their Knees before him. And yet no one would conclude therefore that they worſhipped him as corporeally preſent in Baptiſm, although Baptiſm made them Partakers of his Body and Blood alſo. He ſays farther [c] that the King himſelf bowed his Body, becauſe of God ſpeaking in the Holy Goſpels. But it would be ridiculous hence to infer, either that they worſhipped the Goſpels, or Chriſt as corporeally preſent in them. Mr. Aubertin [d] has demonſtrated out of St. Auſtin's Works theſe ſeveral Propoſitions, which are all Point Blank contrary to the Adoration of Chriſt as corporeally preſent in the Euchariſt. 1. That Bread and Wine are not properly and ſubſtantially the Body and Blood of Chriſt, but only Sacramentally and Figuratively. 2. That Chriſt is not ſubſtantially and corporally preſent in the Euchariſt, but corporally preſent only in Heaven. 3. That true Bread remains and is eaten in the Euchariſt. 4. That the Manducation of Chriſt in the Euchariſt is not oral, but ſpiritual. 5. That the Wicked do not eat or drink the proper Body and Blood of Chriſt in the Euchariſt. 6. That the ſame Body cannot be in different Places at one and the ſame time; and that this is particularly aſſerted of the Body of Chriſt. 7. That a Body muſt neceſſarily occupy ſome Place and Space, and be extended by Parts, with Longitude, Latitude, and Profundity. 8. That Accidents cannot ſubſiſt without a Subject. All which directly overthrow the corporal Preſence of Chriſt in the Euchariſt, and conſequently ſhew, that the Adoration which was given to Chriſt in the Euchariſt, was not to his corporal Preſence, but his ſpiritual Preſence, or to his Body as abſent in Heaven.

But Durantus [e] undertakes to prove, that the Body of Chriſt was not only worſhipped as corporally preſent in the Euchariſt in the Uſe and Time of Celebration, but at other Times by Non-Communicants alſo. For this he alledges Chryſoſtom [f], who ſays that the Energumens at that time were brought by the Deacon and made to bow their Heads. Which Durantus interprets of bowing to the Euchariſt. But Chryſoſtom unluckily ſpoils his Argument. For at that time, he ſays, the Euchariſt was not conſecrated, but only about to be conſecrated; and theſe Energumens were not allowed to ſtay to hear the Prayers of Conſecration with the Faithful, but were diſmiſſed with the Catechumens and other Non-Communicants before the Communion-Service began. So that if they worſhipped the Hoſt, it muſt be an unconſecrated Hoſt, which according to Durantus himſelf would be plain Idolatry. So unfortunate are theſe Gentlemen in the beſt Arguments they can produce for Hoſt-worſhip among the Ancients, that their own very Proofs manifeſtly overthrow it.

On the other Hand there are moſt certain Demonſtrations, that there could be no ſuch thing as Hoſt-worſhip in the antient Church, not only taken from their not believing Tranſubſtantiation and the corporal Preſence, but from many other Topicks ſolidly deduced and ſubſtantially proved by two learned Writers, Mr. Daillé [g] and Dr. Whitby [h] in two excellent Diſcourſes upon this very Subject, to which I will commend the Reader, contenting my ſelf to mention the Heads of the principal Arguments, which they have more fully drawn out and proved. Mr. Daillé ranks his Arguments under two Heads, ſome general ones againſt the Worſhip of the Euchariſt, Saints, Relicks, Images and Croſſes; and others more particularly levelled againſt the Worſhip of the Euchariſt. Among thoſe of the firſt Kind he urges this as very remarkable, that in all the antient Relations of Miracles, there is never any mention made of Miracles being wrought by the Euchariſt, as is now ſo common in later Ages, eſpecially in the Book called The School of the Euchariſt, which is a Collection of Legends under the Name of Miracles wrought by the Hoſt upon ſundry Occaſions. 2. He urges another general Argument from the Silence of all ſuch Writers of the Church as ſpeak of Traditions, that the Worſhip of the Euchariſt is never once named among them. 3. That among the Heathen Objections and Calumnies which they raiſed againſt them, ſuch as their worſhipping the Sun and an Aſs's Head, and the Genitals of their Prieſts, and a crucified and dead Man, they never objected to them the Worſhip of Bread and Wine, which yet had been very obvious and natural, and invidious enough to have accuſed them of, had there then been any ſuch plauſible Ground for an Accuſation, as there has been in later Ages. 4. The Chriſtians uſed to object to the Heathens, that they worſhipped Things that were dumb and void of Life; Things that muſt be carried upon Mens Shoulders, and if they fell, could not riſe again; Things that muſt be guarded by Men, to ſecure them from Thieves;

[a] Aug. in Pſal. 98. [b] Chryſ. in illud, Simile eſt Regnum Cœlorum, &c. [c] In illud, Attendite ne Eleemoſynam faciatis. ap. Albertin. de Euchar. p. 432. [d] Albertin. de Euchar. p. 602, &c. [e] Durant. de Ritibus, lib. 2. cap. 40. n. 5. [f] Chryſ. Hom. 3, & 4. de Incomprehenſibili, p. 365, & 374. tom. 1. [g] Dallæ de Objecto Cultus Religioſi. cont. Latinos lib. 1, & 2. [h] Whitby, Idolatry of Hoſt-Worſhip, Lond. 1679. 8vo.

Things

Things that might be carried Captive, and were not able to preſerve and deliver themſelves; Things that might be laid to Pawn, (as the Euchariſt has been by ſome Princes in later Ages;) Things that are expoſed to Fire and Weather, and Ruſt and Moth and Corruption and other Injuries of Nature; Things that might be devoured by Mice and other Animals, and might be gnawed and dunged upon by the moſt contemptible Creatures. All which Objections might eaſily have been retorted by the Heathen upon the Chriſtians, had they then worſhipped the Euchariſt, or Images, or Relicks, or Croſſes, which are liable to all the ſame Reproaches. Theſe are general Arguments againſt Hoſt-worſhip, together with the reſt of that idolatrous Worſhip which now ſo abounds in the Church of Rome. But there are a great many more ſpecial Arguments urged in particular againſt the Hoſt-worſhip by that learned Man. As firſt from the Silence of all antient Writers about it. 2. From their uſing no Elevation of the Hoſt for Worſhip for many Ages, as we have ſhewed at large out of Bona before. 3. The Ancients knew nothing of ringing a Bell to give Notice of the time of Adoration to the People. 4. There are no Hiſtories of Beaſts miraculouſly worſhipping the Euchariſt, which ſort of Fictions are ſo common in later Ages. 5. The Ancients never carried the Euchariſt to the Sick or Abſent with any Pomp or Signs of Worſhip; never expoſed it to publick View in Times of ſolemn Rejoycing or Sorrow; never adored or invoked its Aſſiſtance in Diſtreſs, or upon any great Undertaking; which are now ſuch common Practices in the Roman Church. 6. The Ancients never enjoined Perſons newly baptized and Penitents to fall down before the Euchariſt and worſhip it, as is now commonly done in the Roman Church. 7. The Ancients never allowed Non-Communicants to ſtay and worſhip the Euchariſt, as the Practice now is; which yet had been very proper, had they believed the Euchariſt to be their God. But they uſed it only for Communion, not for Adoration. 8. The Ancients never uſed to carry the Euchariſt publickly in Proceſſions, to be adored by all the People; which is a novel Practice in the Judgment of Krantzius [i] and Caſſander. 9. The Ancients lighted no Lamps nor Candles by Day to the Euchariſt, nor burned Incenſe before it, as is now the Practice. 10. They made no little Images of the Euchariſt, to be kiſſed and worſhipped as the Images of Chriſt. 11. They had no peculiar Feſtival appropriated to its more ſolemn Worſhip. This is of no longer Date than Pope Urban IV, who firſt inſtituted it, An. 1264, and it is peculiar only to the Roman Church. 12. The antient Liturgies have no Forms of Prayers, Doxologies, or Praiſes to the Euchariſt, as are in the Roman Miſſal. 13. The Adoration of the Euchariſt was never objected by the Heathens to the Primitive Chriſtians; nor were they reproached, as the Romaniſts have been ſince, as Eaters of their God. It is a noted Saying of Averroes, Quandoquidem comedunt Chriſtiani quod colunt, ſit anima mea cum Philoſophis, Since Chriſtians eat what they Worſhip, let my Soul rather have her Portion among the Philoſophers. This learned Philoſopher lived about the Year 1150, when the Hoſt-worſhip began to be practiſed, which gave him this Prejudice to the Chriſtian Religion. 14. The Chriſtians objected ſuch Things to the Heathens, as they never would have objected, had they themſelves worſhipped the Hoſt; as that it was an impious Thing to eat what they worſhipped, and Worſhip what they eat and ſacrificed. Which Objections might eaſily have been retorted upon them. 15. The Chriſtians were accuſed by the Heathens of eating Infants Blood in their ſolemn Myſteries, but never any mention is made of eating the Blood of Chriſt, either in the Objection or Anſwer to it. The Ground of the Story aroſe from the Practice of the Carpocratians and other Hereticks, and not from the Chriſtians eating the Blood of Chriſt. 16. Laſtly, the Chriſtians never urged the Adoration of the Euchariſt in their Diſputes with the Ebionites and Docetæ, which yet would have been very proper to confute their Errors, who denied the Reality of the Fleſh of Chriſt. To theſe Arguments of Mr. Daillé, Dr. Whitby has added theſe farther. 1. That the Scriptures and Fathers deride the Heathen Deities, and ſay, that we may know they are no Gods, becauſe they have no Uſe of their outward Senſes. 2. Becauſe they are made Gods by Conſecration, and by the Will of the Artificer, part of that Matter which is conſecrated into a God, being expoſed to common Uſes. 3. Becauſe they were impriſoned in their Images, or ſhut up in obſcure Habitations. 4. Becauſe they clothed their Gods in coſtly Raiments. 5. Becauſe they might be metamorphoſed or changed from one Shape to another. All which might have been retorted upon the Chriſtians, had they worſhipped the Euchariſt, without any Poſſibility of Evaſion. Soto and Paludanus own, that the whole Euchariſt, Subſtance as well as Species, may be vomitted up again, or voided at the Draught. Which to affirm of the real Body of Chriſt, the Ancients would have accounted the greateſt Blaſphemy. For theſe and the like Reaſons we may ſafely conclude, that there was no ſuch Practice among the Ancients, as giving divine Honour to the Hoſt upon Preſumption of its being the real Body of Chriſt, though they treated it as the ſacred Symbol and Antitype of his Body with all imaginable Reſpect and Veneration. To deduce theſe Arguments at their full Length would fill a Volume, and therefore it is ſufficient here to have hinted the Heads of them in this ſummary Account, referring the Reader to thoſe two learned Authors, who have proved every Thing they ſay, for fuller Satisfaction. I now go on with the Practice of the antient Church.

[i] Krantz. Metropol. lib. 11. cap. 39. Caſſander. Conſultat. Sect. de Circumgeſtat.

SECT. VI. The People allowed to receive the Eucharist into their own Hands.

IN distributing the Elements the People were allowed to receive them into their own Hands. Which now, since the belief of Transubstantiation and the Adoration of the Host came in, is severely prohibited in the Roman Church. And this is at least another strong Presumption, that the Ancients had very different Sentiments of the Eucharist from those which now prevail in the Roman Church. As to Fact, there is no Dispute of the Matter. The Thing is confest by Baronius [k] and Morinus [l] and Garsias Loaysa [m], as Daillé [n] has noted out of them. And Bona [o] confesses he cannot tell when the contrary Custom first came in, but he thinks it very probable, that it began at the same time that they first brought into the Western Church the Use of Unleavened Bread, and Wafer-Hosts; which, as he proves before, was not till the twelfth or thirteenth Century. But that the Reader may not wholly depend upon these Concessions, I will note a few Places in the Margin out of Tertullian [p], Clemens Alexandrinus [q], Cyprian [r], Origen [s], Dionysius Alexandrinus [t], Cyril of Jerusalem [u], Nazianzen [x], Basil [y], Ambrose [z], Austin [*], Chrysostom [†] and the Council of Trullo [a]: Which I think it needless to repeat at length in a Matter so plain and uncontested. The very Custom of Washing the Hands before Communion, in order to receive it, the frequent Admonitions to beware of letting it fall, the Allowance of private Men to carry it home with them and communicate in private, the sending it to the Sick sometimes by private Men, which we have spoken of before, do all bear Testimony to the same Practice. But all these Customs are perfectly antiquated and abolished in the Roman Church, since the Practice of Host-worship came in, partly by forbidding the People to touch the Bread with their own Hands, but suffer it to be dropt into their Mouths, and partly by withdrawing the Cup wholly from them. Many wise and pretty Reasons are used to be given for abolishing this antient Custom, as that it is to prevent Mens Negligence and Irreverence and other Abuses: But the Fathers had much better Reasons for allowing it. For then it afforded them a noble Argument to keep innocent and holy Hands, free from Idolatry, Murder, Rapine and Extortion, and other the like Vices, when they must with those very Hands receive the immaculate Body and Blood of their Lord. A Man might declaim, says Tertullian [b], all the Day long with the Zeal of Faith, and bewail those Christians, who work with their Hands at the Trade of making Idols for the Heathen Gods, and come immediately from the Shop of the Adversary to the House of God, to lift up those Hands to God the Father, which are the Makers or Mothers of Idols, and stretch forth those Hands to receive the Body of the Lord, that were instrumental in carving Bodies for Devils. With what Eloquence does St. Chrysostom inveigh against Rapine and Bloodshed, and Strife and Contention, upon this very Topick? Consider, says he [c], what thou takest into thy Hand, and never dare to smite any Man: Do not disgrace those Hands, which are adorned with so great a Gift, by the Crime of Fighting and Contention. Consider what thou takest into thy Hands, and keep them free from all Rapine and Extortion. Consider that thou not only takest it in thy Hands, but puttest it to thy Mouth; therefore keep thy Tongue pure from all filthy and contumelious Words, from Blasphemy, Perjury, and all such kinds of evil Discourse. So again, Reproving those who in time of Sickness went to the Jews to get Charms and Amulets to cure their Distemper, he asks them, What Apology they would [d] make to Christ for thus flying to his Enemies in their Distress? How they could call upon him in their Prayers? With what Conscience they could come into the Church? With what Eyes they could look upon the Priest? With what Hands they could touch the holy Table? And in another Place, repressing the Peoples Fury against Eutropius (who having procured a Law to be made against Mens taking Sanctuary at the Altar, was himself not long after, by falling under the Emperor's Displeasure, forced to fly thither for Refuge; and then some of the People clamoured against him with revengeful Thoughts, and cried out it was but just that he should suffer the Effects of his own Law;) to suppress the Peoples Anger in this Case, and incline them to Thoughts of Mercy and Pardon, he asks them, How otherwise they could take [e] the Sacrament into their Hands, when Sermon was done, and say that Prayer, which commands them to beg of God, That he would forgive them their Trespasses, as they forgave them that trespassed against them, if they persisted to call for Justice upon their Enemy? These are handsome Turns of Eloquence, grounded upon this innocent and pious Custom of the Peoples taking the Sacrament into their own Hands, and they had often their due Weight and Force even upon the greatest Minds, as may appear from the Effect of that Speech which St. Ambrose made to the Emperor Theodosius, when he had caused [k] Baron. an. 57. n. 147. [l] Morin. de Ordinat. Par. 3. Exercit. 12. c. 3. [m] Loaysa in Conc. Tolet. 1. can. 14. [n] Dallæ. de Objecto Cult. Relig. lib. 2. cap. 20. [o] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 2. cap. 17. n. 7. Vid. Vales. Not. in Euseb. lib. 7. c. 9. [p] Tertul. de Coron. Mil. cap. 3. de Idololatr. cap. 7. [q] Clem. Alex. Strom. 1. p. 318. [r] Cypr. de Lapsis. p. 132. De Patient. p. 216. Ep. 56. al. 58. ad Thibaritanos. p. 125. [s] Orig. Hom. 13. in Exod. [t] Ap. Euseb. lib. 7. cap. 9. [u] Cyril. Catech. Myst. 5. n. 18. [x] Naz. Carmen de Ornatu Mulier. t. 2. p. 152. [y] Basil. Ep. 289. ad Cæsaream Patriciam. [z] Ambr. Orat. ad Theodos. ap. Theodoret. lib. 5. cap. 18. [*] Aug. cont. Liter. Petil. lib. 2. cap. 23. Hom. 26. ex 50. [†] Chrys. Hom. 21. ad Pop. Antioch. t. 1. p. 266. Hom. 22. p. 285, & 290. Hom. 24. p. 316. Hom. 6. cont. Judæos. t. 1. p. 540. Hom. 6. in Seraphim. Hom. 13. in Ephes. & passim. [a] Conc. Trul c. 101. [b] Tertul. de Idololat. cap. 7. Vid. Tertul. de Spectac. c. 25. Cypr. Ep. 56. al. 58. ad Plcb. Thibarit. p. 125. [c] Chrys. Hom. 21. ad Pop. Antioch. t. 1. p. 266. Vid. Hom. 31. de Natali Christi. t. 5. p. 479. [d] Chrys. Hom. 6. cont. Jud. t. 1. p. 539. [e] Chrys. Hom. in Eutrop. t. 4. p. 554.

seven

ſeven thouſand Men to be ſlaughtered without any formal Tryal at Theſſalonica: St. Ambroſe met him as he was entring the Church, and thus accoſted him: With what Eyes wilt thou behold the Houſe of our common Lord? With what Feet wilt thou tread his holy Pavement? Wilt thou ſtretch out thoſe Hands yet dropping with the Blood of that unjuſt Slaughter, and with them lay hold [f] of the moſt holy Body of the Lord? Wilt thou put the Cup of that Blood to thy Mouth, who haſt ſhed ſo much Blood by the haſty Decree of an angry and impetuous Mind? This juſt Reproof of the Pious Biſhop, ſo handſomely addreſſed to the Emperor, made ſuch a deep Impreſſion on his Mind, that it melted him into Tears, and made him refrain from Church as a Penitent, till by way of Satisfaction, among other Things, by St. Ambroſe's Direction, he made this good Law, That no Sentence of Death or Proſcription for the future ſhould be executed till thirty Days after its Promulgation, that Reaſon, and not Paſſion, might judge of the Equity and Reaſonableneſs of it. Such brave Speeches, and ſuch worthy Effects did that antient pious Cuſtom miniſter the Occaſion to of old, which is now laid aſide in the Roman Church, and changed into another Cuſtom, that has neither Precedent nor Uſe; ſerving only to feed Superſtition, and keep Men under the monſtrous and inveterate Prejudices of Tranſubſtantiation, which this innocent Rite ſerved in ſome meaſure to keep out of the Minds of Men in the Primitive Church

SECT. VII. Whether the ſame Cuſtom was obſerved in delivering it to Women and Children.

IT is farther obſervable, That in this Caſe no Diſtinction was made between Men, Women, and Children, but all received into their own Hands who were capable of ſo doing. Only in the latter End of the ſixth Century, we find a Rule made about Women, that they ſhould not receive it in their bare Hand, but in a fair Linnen Cloth. Some think this as antient as St. Auſtin's Time, becauſe in one of the Sermons De Tempore [g] that go under his Name, there is mention made of it. For there it is ſaid, it was cuſtomary for Men to waſh their Hands when they communicated, and for Women to bring their little Linnen Cloths to receive the Body of Chriſt. But as many of theſe Sermons are ſpurious, ſo this in particular is ſometimes aſcribed to other Authors, and therefore no Weight can be laid upon it. However the Council of Auxerre [h] in France, An. 590, made a Rule, That no Woman ſhould receive the Euchariſt in her bare Hand. But after what manner ſhe ſhould receive it in her Hand, is not ſaid. A great many learned Perſons think that another Canon in that Council [i] orders them to receive it in a Linnen Cloth, becauſe there is mention made of Womens wearing a Dominicale when they communicate: Which they interpret a Linnen Cloth upon their Hand. So not only Baronius, and Binnius, and Sylvius, but alſo Bona [k] and Habertus [l], and even Mabillon [m], and Voſſius [n] underſtand it. But Baluzius, who is often more ſagacious than the reſt in telling the Meaning of hard Words, ſays, it means only the Womens Veil, which they were obliged to wear upon their Heads by antient Canons, conformable to the Rule of the Apoſtle [o]. And for this he quotes an antient Collection of Canons, where in the Council of Maſcon the Dominicale is expreſsly ſtyled the Veil which the Women wore upon their Heads at the Communion. So that whatever Covering the Women uſed for their Hands, when they received the Communion, it is plain it was a different Thing from the Dominicale. The Council of Trullo [p] ſpeaks of ſome in the Greek Church, who would not receive the Sacrament in their Hands, but in ſome little Inſtrument of Gold or other precious Material, out of a pretended Reverence to it, but they condemn, and forbid it as a ſuperſtitious Practice; ordering all Perſons to receive the Communion in their own Hands ſet in the Form of a Croſs, as is appointed in Cyril's Catechiſms [q] and ſome others before them: and for thoſe that pretended to bring thoſe little Trinkets to receive the Communion with, they order them to be rejected, as Perſons who preferred inanimate Matter to the living Image of God. And withal they threaten Suſpenſion to any Prieſt that ſhall admit any Communicants to receive in ſuch manner. By which it is plain no Alteration was as yet allowed in this Matter in the Greek Church.

SECT. VIII. The Euchariſt uſually delivered to the People with a certain Form of Words, to which they anſwered, Amen.

THE next Thing obſervable, is, That the Prieſt in delivering the Elements to the People uſed a certain Form of Words, to which the People anſwered, Amen. The Form at firſt ſeems to have been no more than this: The Body of Chriſt; and, The Blood of Chriſt; to each of which the People ſubjoyned, Amen. Tertullian is thought to refer to this, when he asks a Chriſtian [r] who was uſed to frequent the Roman Theaters, How he could give Teſtimony to a Gladiator with that Mouth wherewith he was wont to say Amen in the holy Mysteries? But that may refer as well to the Amen which they used at the End of the great Consecration Prayer, as to this Form at the Delivery. However Cornelius Bishop of Rome not long after speaks expressly of it. For he says [s] Novatian was used to make the People of his Party swear by the Body and Blood of Christ, when he delivered the Eucharist to them, that they would not forsake his Party and go over to Cornelius. So, says he, every Man instead of saying Amen, when he takes the Bread, is forced to say; I will not return to Cornelius. The Author of the Constitutions speaks of the Form in this manner [t]: Let the Bishop give the Oblation, saying, The Body of Christ: And let the Receiver answer, Amen. Let the Deacon hold the Cup, and when he gives it say, The Blood of Christ, The Cup of Life: And let him that drinks it say, Amen. So St. Cyril [u] bids his Communicant receive the Body of Christ, and say, Amen. And St. Ambrose [x], The Priest says to thee, The Body of Christ, and thou answerest, Amen. The like, as to the People's Answering Amen, is noted by St. Austin [y] as the general Practice of the whole World. And so by St. Jerom [z], Leo Magnus [a] and many others. By the Time of Gregory the Great, the Form of Delivery was a little enlarged: For then they said, The Body [b] of our Lord Jesus Christ preserve thy Soul. And by the Time of Alcuin and Charles the Great, it was augmented into this Form, The Body of our Lord Jesus [c] Christ, preserve thy Soul unto everlasting Life. Which is much the same with the former Part of that which is now used in our Liturgy. The Scotch Liturgy also orders the People to answer, Amen; which, we see, is conformable to antient Practice. The Romanists generally draw this Answer of the People into an Argument for Transubstantiation. Because saying Amen implies as much as the true Body of Christ. But they might as well argue, that the Bread is transubstantiated into the Bodies of the People, and that they too are but one proper, substantial, true, numerical Body with their Lord; Because St. Austin says this is one Meaning of the Body of Christ, to which when the Priest spake it, they answered, Amen: Ye answer, Amen, says he [d], to what ye are (that is, the Body of Christ), and by your Answer subscribe to the Truth of it. Thou hearest the Priest say, The Body of Christ, and thou answerest, Amen: Be thou a Member of the Body of Christ, that thy Amen may be true. In another Place he says, it denoted their Belief of the Reality of Christ's Suffering for them, that his Blood was truly shed [*] for their Sakes, and that they made Profession of this by saying Amen, This is true. And again [†], Christ shed his Blood upon the Cross for our Sakes: And ye who are Communicants, know what Testimony ye bear to the Blood which ye receive: For ye say Amen to it. Ye know what that Blood is, which was shed for many, for the Remission of Sins. So that in whatever Sense we take it, there is no Necessity of making it to signify a corporeal and substantial Presence, which it is certain St. Austin never thought of.

[f] Ap. Theodor. Hiſt. lib. 5. cap. 18. [g] Aug. Ser. 252. de Temp. Omnes Viri, quando communicare deſiderant, lavant manus: Et omnes Mulieres exhibent Linteamina, ubi corpus Chriſti accipiant. [h] Conc. Antiſſiodor. can. 36. Non licet mulieri nuda manu Euchariſtiam accipere. [i] Ibid. can. 42. Unaquæque mulier, quando communicat, Dominicalem ſuum habeat. Quod ſi non habuerit, uſque in alium Diem Dominicum non communicet. [k] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 2. cap. 17. n. 3. [l] Habert. Archieratic. Par. 10. Obſerv. 8. p. 264. [m] Mabil. de Liturg. Gallic. lib. 1. cap. 5. n. 25. [n] Voſſ. Theſ. Theol. de Symbolis Cœnæ Dom. p. 477. [o] Baluz. Not. in Gratian. Cauſ. 33. Quæſt. 3. cap. 19. Si mulier communicans Dominicale ſuum ſuper caput ſuum non habuerit, uſque ad alium diem Dominicum non communicet. [p] Conc. Trull. can. 101. [q] Cyril. Catech. Myſt. 5. n. 18. [r] Tertul. de Spectac. cap. 25. Quale eſt—— ex ore quo Amen in ſanctum proferis, gladiatori teſtimonium reddere?

SECT. IX. How Novatian and others abused the Communion to wicked Purposes.

IT is here proper, before we pass on, to make a just Reflection upon the horrible Abuses of the Communion committed by some against the true End and Design of it, which was intended by Christ to represent our Union with himself and one another, but wicked Men made Use of it to base Ends and Purposes. We have already heard how Novatian abused it to strengthen his Schism, and bind Men over by an Oath upon it, that they would not desert his Interest and Party. And it was a like Abuse that was some time allowed in the superstitious Times of Popery, under the general Notion of many other superstitious Practices, called, Canonical Purgations. Which was, that when any one was suspected of a Crime, he was to purge himself by taking the Sacrament upon it. Gratian cites a Canon out of the Council of Worms [e] to this purpose: Whereas it often happens, that Thefts are committed in Monasteries, and they that commit them are not known: We therefore order, That when the Brethren are to purge themselves of such Suspicions, Mass shall be celebrated by the Abbot or some other appointed by him, and when it is ended, every one of them shall communicate, saying these Words, Let the Body of Christ be my Purgation this Day. But though this was allowed by a Council, it is justly reckoned a great Abuse by all sober Men. Antonius Augustinus in his Emendations upon Gratian [f] passes this Censure upon it, That it is to be ascribed to the great Corruption and Filth of the Times which allowed it. For even as the old

[s] Ap. Euseb. lib. 6. cap. 43. p. 245. [t] Constit. lib. 8. cap. 13. [u] Cyril. Catech. Myst. 5. n. 18. [x] Ambros. de sacram. lib. 4. cap. 5. Dicit tibi sacerdos, Corpus Christi: Et tu dicis, Amen, id est, verum. It. de Initiatis. cap. 9. [y] Aug. cont. Faust. lib. 12. cap. 10. Habet magnam vocem Christi sanguis in terra, cum eo accepto ab omnibus gentibus respondetur Amen. [z] Hieron. Ep. 62. ad Theophil. [a] Leo Ser. 6. de Jejunio Septimi Mensis. [b] Joan. Diacon. Vit. Gregor. lib. 2. [c] Alcuin. de Offic. & Helgaldus Vita Roberti Regis Galliæ. ap. Bonam. Liturgic. lib. 2. c. 17. n. 3. [d] Aug. Serm. ad Infantes. ap. Fulgent. de Baptismo Æthiopis. cap. 11. Ad id quod estis, respondetis, Amen, & respondendo subscribitis. Audis Corpus Christi, & respondes, Amen. Esto membrum Corporis Christi, ut sit verum Amen tuum. [*] Aug. Ser. de 4. Feria sive Cultura agri. t. 9. p. 317. Quid dicit omnis homo, quando accipit Sanguinem Christi? Amen dicit. Quid est Amen? Verum est. Quid est verum? Quia fusus est Sanguis Christi. [†] Id. Ser. 29. de Verbis Apost. t. 10. p. 150. In cruce pro nobis Sanguinem fudit: Et nostis Fideles quale testimonium perhibeatis Sanguini quem accepistis. Certe enim dicitis Amen. Nostis qui sit Sanguis qui pro multis effusus est in remissionem peccatorum. [e] Con. Wormat. can. 15. ap. Grat. Caus. 2. Quæst. 5. cap. 23. Sæpe contingit, ut in Monasteriis furta perpetrentur, & qui hæc committant ignorentur. Idcirco statuimus, ut quando ipsi fratres de talibus se expurgare debuerint, Missa ab Abbate celebretur, vel ab aliquo cui ipse Abbas præceperit, præsentibus Fratribus: & sic expleta Missa, omnes communicent in hæc verba; Corpus Domini sit mihi ad Probationem hodie. [f] Anton. August. de Emendat. Grat. lib. 1. Dial. 15. p. 172. Hæc omnia sunt illorum temporum sordibus adscribenda, Gloſſer upon Gratian obſerves [g], The Communion was not to be given to ſuſpected Perſons, as he proves from other Laws, particularly the Extravagant de Purgatione Canonica. cap. Cum dilectis. And therefore he ſays, this Canon in Gratian was of no Force, being diſannulled in Law. So that we need not ſcruple to call this a great Abuſe of the Holy Communion, though it had ſynodical Authority ſome time to enjoyn the Practice of it. I know nothing hardly that exceeds it under Pretence of Religion, unleſs it be that more horrible Abuſe which Baronius [h] himſelf relates out of the Greek Hiſtorians, concerning Pope Theodore, and the Roman Council, An. 648, who in their Cenſure of Pyrrhus and Paulus the Monothelite Hereticks, took Blood out of the Cup, and mingled it with Ink, and therewith ſubſcribed their Condemnation. An unparallel'd Inſtance of intemperate Zeal, for which there was neither Law nor Example in the Roman Church, as Baronius confeſſes, nor any Inſtance like it, ſave one in the Greek Church, when Ignatius in the Council of Conſtantinople, An. 869, made Uſe of the Blood in the ſacred Cup inſtead of Ink to condemn his Adverſary Photius, as Baronius alſo tells us [i] out of Nicetas in his Life of Ignatius. But I paſs over theſe horrible Abuſes, more becoming Draco, and his ſanguinary Laws, than the Pens and Practices of Chriſtian Biſhops, and go on with the more innocent Practices of the Primitive Church.

SECT. X.

Proper Pſalms for the Occaſion uſually ſung while the People were communicating.

DURING the Time of communicating, while the Elements were diſtributed to the People, it was uſual in moſt Places for the Singers or all the People to ſing ſome Pſalm ſuitable to the Occaſion. The Author of the Conſtitutions [k] preſcribes the Thirty third Pſalm, which in our Diviſion is the Thirty fourth, for this Purpoſe: I will bleſs the Lord at all Times, his Praiſe ſhall be always in my Mouth. Which was chiefly ſung upon the Account of thoſe Words relating to the Sacrament, O Taſte, and ſee that the Lord is gracious, &c. For ſo St. Cyril more plainly declares, when he ſays [l], After this you hear one ſinging with a Divine Melody, and exhorting you to partake of the Holy Myſteries, and ſaying, O Taſte, and ſee that the Lord is gracious. St. Jerom [m] ſeems alſo to intimate, that they ſung both this and the xlvth Pſalm, when he ſays, They received the Euchariſt always with a good Conſcience, hearing the Pſalmiſt ſing, O Taſte and ſee that the Lord is gracious: And ſinging with him, My Heart is inditing of a good Matter, I ſpeak of the Things which I have made unto the King. This being a Pſalm peculiarly ſetting forth the Praiſes of Chriſt, and the Affection of the Church toward him: Hearken, O Daughter, and conſider, incline thine Ear, forget alſo thine own People and thy Father's Houſe: So ſhall the King have Pleaſure in thy Beauty; for he is thy Lord God, and worſhip thou Him. In Africk they ſeem to have delighted much in this Cuſtom, in ſo much that when one Hilarius a Tribune railed againſt it and all other Singing of Pſalms at the Altar, St. Auſtin wrote a Book particularly in Vindication of it, which is now loſt, but he mentions it [n] in his Retractations. And both he and Tertullian ſeem to intimate, that among other Pſalms they ſung the One Hundred Thirty third, Behold how good and joyful a thing it is, Brethren, to dwell together in Unity. For Tertullian [o] ſays, They were uſed to ſing this Pſalm when they ſupped together: By which moſt probably he means the Lord's Supper. And St. Auſtin ſays, it was a Pſalm [p] ſo noted and well known by its conſtant Uſe, that they who knew nothing of the Pſalter; could repeat that Pſalm, as having often heard it ſung, probably at the Altar. And he ſeems to ſay [q], that they ſung the xxxiiid Pſalm upon the ſame Occaſion. For he ſays expreſsly they ſung it daily, I will bleſs the Lord at all Times, his Praiſe ſhall ever be in my Mouth. Which conſidering how many Writers before ſpeak of it as ſung at the Diſtribution of the Elements, it is probable St. Auſtin means the ſame, that it was ſung daily at the Altar. St. Chryſoſtom ſays they ſung the cxlvth Pſalm upon this Occaſion, chiefly upon the Account of thoſe Words in it, The Eyes of all wait upon Thee, and thou giveſt them their Meat in due Seaſon. For he interprets this of their Spiritual Meat at the Lord's Table. This Pſalm, ſays he [r], is diligently to be noted: For this is the Pſalm which has theſe Words, which they that are initiated in the holy Myſteries ſing continually in Conſort, ſaying, The Eyes of all wait upon Thee, and Thou giveſt them their Meat in due Seaſon. For he that is made a Son, and Partaker of the ſpiritual Table, does juſtly give Glory to his Father. Thou art a Son, and Partaker of the ſpiritual Table; thou feedeſt upon that Fleſh and Blood which regenerated thee: Therefore give Thanks to him that vouchſafes thee ſo great a Bleſſing, glorify him who grants thee theſe Favours: When thou readeſt the Words, compoſe and tune thy Soul to what is ſaid, and and when thou ſay'ſt, I will exalt Thee, my God, [g] Gloſſa in Loc. Gratiani. Huic Capiti eſt derogatum, quia ſuſpectis non eſt danda Euchariſtia. [h] Baron. an. 648. n. 15. ex Theophane. [i] Baron. an. 869. t. 10. p. 428. [k] Conſt. lib. 8. cap. 13. [l] Cyril. Myſt. Catech. 5. n. 17. [m] Hieron. Ep. 28. ad Lucin. Bœticum. [n] Aug. Retract. lib. 2. cap. 11. Morem qui tunc eſſe apud Carthaginem cœperat, ut Hymni ad altare dicerentur de Pſalmorum libro, ſive ante Oblationem, ſive cum diſtribueretur populo quod fuiſſet oblatum, maledica reprehenſione ubicunque poterat lacerabat, &c. Huic reſpondi, & vocatur Liber contra Hilarium. [o] Tertul. de Jejun. cap. 13. Vide quam bonum & quam jucundum habitare fratres in unum. Hoc tu pſallere non facile noſti, niſi quo tempore cum compluribus cœnas. [p] Aug. in Pſal. 132. p. 629. Pſalmus brevis eſt, ſed valde notus & nominatus. Ecce quam bonum & quam jucundum, &c. Ita ſonus iſte dulcis eſt, ut & qui Pſalterium neſciunt, ipſum verſum cantent. [q] Ibid. p. 630. Impletum eſt in eo quod quotidie cantamus, ſi & moribus conſonemus: Benedicam Dominum in omni tempore, Semper Laus ejus in ore meo. [r] Chryſ. in Pſal. 144. t. 3. p. 594.

my my King (which are the first Words of this Psalm) shew thy great Love and Affection to him, that he may say to thee, as he said to Abraham, I am thy God. In the Liturgy which goes under St. Chrysostom's Name [s] there is mention made of the People's Singing at this Time, but no Psalm specified, as here in his genuine Works. In the Liturgy called St. James's [t] of Jerusalem, the Words of the Thirty fourth Psalm, O Taste and see that the Lord is gracious, are appointed to be sung by the Singers. St. Mark's Liturgy [u] appoints the Forty second Psalm, As the Hart desireth the Water Brooks, so panteth my Soul after Thee, O God. And Cotelerius [x] has observed, that in some antient Rituals at the End of Gregory's Sacramentarium the cxxxix Psalm is appointed: O Lord thou hast searched me out and known me, &c. So that though the Custom of Singing Psalms in this Part of the Service was Universal, the particular Psalms varied according to the Wisdom and Choice of the Precentor, or the different Rules and Usages of different Churches. I have now stated and resolved the several Questions and Cases that may be put concerning the manner of communicating in the antient Church: And there remains but one Thing more to be considered, which was the solemn Thanksgiving and Prayers after receiving, which may be included with some other Concomitant Rites in the general Name of their Post-Communion Service; of which we will discourse in the following Chapter.

CHAP. VI.

Of their Post-Communion Service.

SECT. I. The Communion Service closed with several Sorts of Thanksgiving. First the Deacon's Bidding Prayer and Thanksgiving.

WHEN all the People had communicated, and the Deacons had removed the Remainder of the Elements into the Pastophoria, or Place appointed for their Reception; it was usual first for a Deacon to admonish the People to return Thanks for the Benefits which they had received. The Form of this Exhortation in the Constitutions [a] runs thus: Now that we have received the precious Body and the precious Blood of Christ, let us give Thanks to him that hath vouchsafed to make us Partakers of his Holy Mysteries; and let us beseech him that they may not be to our Condemnation, but Salvation, for the Benefit of our Soul and Body, for the Preservation of us in Piety, for the Remission of our Sins, and obtaining of the Life of the World to come. Then he bids them rise up, and commend themselves to God by Christ. Upon which the Bishop makes a Prayer of Thanksgiving and Commendation of the People to God in the following Words.

SECT. II. The Bishop's Thanksgiving or Commendation of the People to God.

O Lord God Almighty, the Father of thy Christ, Thy blessed Son; who heareſt those that with an upright Heart call upon Thee, who knoweſt the Supplications of those that in Silence pray unto Thee; we give Thee Thanks for that Thou hast vouchsafed to make us Partakers of thy Holy Mysteries, which Thou hast given us for the Confirmation or full Assurance of those Things which we stedfastly believe and know, for the Preservation of our Piety, for the Remission of our Sins; because the Name of Thy Christ is called upon us, and we are united unto Thee. Thou that hast separated us from the Communion of the Ungodly, unite us with them that are sanctified unto Thee; confirm us in Thy Truth by the coming of Thy Holy Spirit and his resting upon us; reveal unto us what Thing we are ignorant of, supply what we are deficient in, and strengthen us in what we know. Preserve Thy Priests unblameable in Thy Service, keep our Princes in Peace, our Governours in Righteousness, the Air in good Temperature, the Fruits of the Earth in Plenty, and the whole World by Thy Almighty Providence. Pacify the Nations that are inclined to War; convert those that go astray; sanctify Thy People; preserve those that are in Virginity; keep those that are married in Thy Faith; strengthen those that are in Chastity; bring Infants to mature Age; confirm those that are newly baptized; instruct the Catechumens, and make them fit and worthy of Baptism: And gather us all into the Kingdom of Heaven, through Jesus Christ our Lord, with whom unto Thee and the Holy Spirit be Glory, Honour, and Adoration World without End. Amen.

SECT. III. The Bishop's Benediction.

AFTER this the Deacon bids the People bow their Heads to God in Christ, and receive the Benediction. Then the Bishop pronounces the Benediction in this following Prayer: Almighty God, and True, with whom no one can compare, who art every where, and present unto all, yet not in them as Things of which they consist, who art circumscribed by no Place, not grown old with Time, nor bounded by Ages; who art without Generation, and needest no Preserver; who art above all Corruption, uncapable of Change, and unalterable by Nature; that dwellest in Light which no one can approach unto, and art invisible by Nature; that art known to all Rational Natures that seek Thee with [s] Chrys. Liturg. t. 4. p. 618. [t] Jacob. Liturg. Bibl. Patr. Gr. Lat. t. 2. p. 20. [u] Marci Liturg. ibid. p. 40. [x] Coteler. in Constit. lib. 8. cap. 13. [a] Constit. lib. 8. cap. 14. it is called προσφώνησις μετὰ τὴν μετάληψιν.

an an upright Heart, and art apprehended by thoſe that ſearch after Thee with a Pure Mind; O Thou God of Iſrael, the Iſrael that truly ſees Thee, and the People that believes in Chriſt, ſhew thy ſelf propitious, and hear me for Thy Name's Sake; Bleſs this People that bow their Necks unto Thee, and grant them the Petitions of their Heart that are Expedient for them, and ſuffer none of them to fall from Thy Kingdom; but ſanctify them, keep and protect, help and deliver them from the Adverſary, and from every Enemy; preſerve their Houſes, and defend their going out and their coming in: For to Thee belongs Glory, Praiſe, Majeſty, Worſhip and Adoration: And to Thy Son Jeſus, thy Chriſt, our Lord and God and King; and to the Holy Spirit, now and for ever, World without End. Amen.

SECT. IV. The Deacon's Form of diſmiſſing the People with the ſhort Prayer: Go in Peace.

AFTER this the Deacon uſed a ſhort Form of Words in the Nature of a Prayer for Peace, which was the Signal wherewith he diſmiſſed the whole Aſſembly; intimating that the whole Service was now finiſhed, and therefore praying that the Peace of God might continue with them, and preſerve them, he ſaid, ἀπολύεσθε ἐν εἰρήνῃ, Depart in Peace. This was the uſual Form of breaking up all religious Aſſemblies in the Greek Church, as we have noted before in ſpeaking [*] of the Daily Morning Service out of this Author: And we are aſſured of it from St. Chryſoſtom [b], who ſpeaking of the frequent Uſe of that ſhort Prayer of Salutation, Peace be with you, particularly takes notice of the Deacon's uſing it at the Diſmiſſion of the Aſſembly: The Deacon, ſays he, when he diſmiſſes you from this Meeting, does it with this Prayer, πορεύεσθε ἐν εἰρήνῃ, Go in Peace. Whence we may learn, that they did not uſe it as an empty Form, but as a ſhort ſolemn Prayer, to ſend them away with a Benediction, or the Bleſſing of God upon them.

SECT. V. What Account we have of theſe Prayers in other Writers.

AS for the other Prayers uſed in this Part of the Service, we have no particular Account of them in other Writers. But they tell us in general, that ſuch Forms of Praiſe and Thankſgiving were always uſed after the Communion. St. Auſtin ſays [c], when all was ended, and every one had received the Communion, a ſolemn Thankſgiving concluded the whole Action. And ſo Cyril of Jeruſalem [d] bids his newly-baptized Communicant ſtay, when the Communion was done, to give Thanks to God, who had vouchſafed to make him a Partaker of ſo great Myſteries. St. Chryſoſtom has a long Invective [e] againſt thoſe who would not ſtay theſe laſt Prayers, but as ſoon as they had communicated themſelves, would be gone, and leave their Brethren to give Thanks alone: Whom he compares to Judas, who left the Apoſtles after Supper before the laſt Hymn was ſung; but all the other Apoſtles ſtaid to ſing the Hymn with their Lord, from whoſe Example the Church took up the Cuſtom of making theſe laſt Prayers after the Communion. It is an excellent Paſſage, and therefore I will tranſcribe it at length in his own Words: "Would you have me tell you "what is the Cauſe of Noiſe and Tumult in the "Church? It is becauſe we ſhut not the Doors "upon you all the Time of Divine Service, but "ſuffer you to draw off and go home before the "laſt Thankſgiving; which is a great Contempt "of God's Ordinance. What meaneſt thou, O "Man, in ſo doing? Chriſt is preſent, the An-"gels ſtand by him, the tremendous Table is "ſpread, thy Brethren are yet communicating, "and doſt thou deſert them and fly off? If thou "art called to a common Entertainment, thou "doſt not preſume, whilſt the reſt are ſitting, "to depart before thy Friends, though thou haſt "filled thyſelf before them: And doſt thou here "leave all and depart, whilſt the Holy Myſteries "of Chriſt are celebrating, and the ſacred Of-"fices performing? What Pardon can be ex-"pected, what Apology can be made for this? "Shall I tell you plainly, whoſe Work they are "a doing, who thus depart before all is finiſhed, "and wait not for the Euchariſtical Hymns at "the End of the Supper? It may perhaps ſeem "an hard and odious Saying, but it is neceſſary "to be ſaid, to reprove the Negligence of ma-"ny. When Judas communicated at the laſt "Supper in that laſt Night, whilſt all the "reſt were ſitting at Table, he ſtole off and "went out: And they imitate him, who go "away before the laſt Thankſgiving. For if he "had not gone out, he had not been made the "Traytor; if he had not deſerted his Fellow-"Diſciples, he had not periſhed; if he had not "broken away from the Flock, the Wolf had "not found him alone; if he had not ſeparated "himſelf from the Shepherd, he had not been a "Prey to the wild Beaſt. Upon this Account "we find him among the Jews, but the reſt ſtay "to ſing an Hymn, and go forth with their "Lord. Do you not now ſee, that the laſt "Prayers after the Sacrifice take their Riſe from "that Example?" Thus far St. Chryſoſtom, who ſeems to intimate, that they had not only Prayers, but alſo Pſalms and Hymns of Thankſgiving, in Imitation of our Saviour's ſinging an Hymn after his laſt Supper with his Diſciples. And it is very probable, from what St. Chryſoſtom tells us in another Place, that the Church had ſuch an Affection for David's Pſalms, that ſhe uſed and interſperſed them in all her Offices. Primus & medius & noviſſimus eſt David [f], David was in the Beginning, and Middle, and End of her Ser-

[*] Book XIII. Chap. x. n. 8.

[b] Chryſ. Hom. 52. in eos qui Paſcha jejunant. T. 5. p. 713.

[c] Aug. Ep. 59. ad Paulin. Quæſt. 5. Quibus peractis, & participato tanto Sacramento, Gratiarum actio cuncta concludit.

[d] Cyril. Catech. Myſt. 5. n. 19.

[e] Chryſ. Hom. 34. de Bapt. Chriſti. T. 1. p. 317. It. Hom. 82. al. 83. in Mat. n. 700.

[f] Chryſ. Hom. 6. de Pœnitentia, in Edit. Latinis.

vices. 'Tis true, the Author of the Conſtitutions takes no notice of Pſalms or Hymns in the forementioned Place: But in another Place [g], where he has alſo a Prayer μετὰ τὴν μετάληψιν, after Participation, beſides the Thankſgiving, there is order to ſing Maranatha, that is, The Kingdom of God, or the Lord cometh: And alſo, Hoſanna to the Son of David. Bleſſed is he that cometh in the Name of the Lord: Bleſſed be the Lord our God, who was manifeſted to us in the Fleſh. Which ſeems to imply, that there were different Uſages in different Churches, and that this Author made his Collections vary ſometimes from themſelves, by interpoſing the Rites of different Churches. In the old Gothick Miſſal publiſhed by Mabillon, there is nothing appointed after the Communion but only two Prayers, the one called Poſt-Communionem; and the other Collectio, the Collect or concluding Prayer. And it is much after the ſame manner in the Mozarabick Liturgy, of which Mabillon gives a Specimen or two in his Appendix. But in the Greek Liturgies, as that under the Name of St. James [h], beſides the Prayers, there are ſeveral ſhort Hymns and Praiſes collected out of the Pſalms and other Scriptures appointed to be ſaid after the Communion: As that of the lvii Pſalm, Set up Thyſelf, O God, above the Heavens, and thy Glory above all the Earth. And, Bleſſed be the Name of the Lord from this time forth for evermore. And, Bleſſed be he that cometh in the Name of the Lord. Save Thy People, O God, and bleſs Thine Heritage. And, O let our Mouth be filled with Thy Praiſe, that we may ſing of Thy Glory and Honour all the Day long, Pſal. lxxi. 7. So in St. Chryſoſtom's Liturgy [i], the People are appointed to ſing thoſe Words of the cxiii Pſalm, Bleſſed be the Name of the Lord from this time forth for evermore. And the whole xxxiv Pſalm, I will always give Thanks unto the Lord, his Praiſe ſhall ever be in my Mouth.

SECT. VI.

The Thankſgivings always made in the Plural Number by the whole Body of the Church.

AND it is obſervable, That in all the antient Forms, the Thankſgiving Prayers are always in the Plural Number, repreſenting the whole Body of the Communicants as returning their Praiſes to God for the Mercies they had received. For then there were no private nor ſolitary Maſſes, where the Prieſt ſays the Office alone by himſelf without any Hearers, or communicates alone without any Partakers; but they all aſſiſted and communicated together: And ſo long it was very rational and proper to return a general Thankſgiving for the Benefits of the Communion which they had all received. But ſince private and ſolitary Maſſes came in, all theſe Forms are very improper and abſurd, to tell God, they have all received the Sacrament, and bleſs him for it, when none has received it but one, and ſometimes none has ſo much as heard the Office, but the Prieſt alone that repeats it. Yet theſe Offices now ſtand in the Roman Maſs, to the eternal Reproach of thoſe that abuſe them. For they ſtill ſay, Quod ore ſumpſimus, &c. That which we [k] have received with our Mouths, O Lord, grant that we may receive with a pure Mind; and of a temporal Gift, make it unto us an eternal Remedy. And there are many other Prayers in the ſame Tenour; all which ſuppoſe many to have communicated, when yet no one has received but the Prieſt alone. Bona [l] confeſſes this is not according to the Primitive Cuſtom. For thoſe Prayers were inſtituted at firſt for Communicants, when all or a great Part of the Church communicated together; for otherwiſe the very Name of Communion would here be improperly uſed, if more than one did not partake of the Sacrifice. And all he has to ſay for their retaining thoſe Prayers in the Maſs, when the uſe of them by private Maſs is become ſo improper, is only this: That though the antient Cuſtom of many Communicating together be left off, yet no Change is made in the Prayers; but they are retained ſtill, to ſhew us what was done antiently, and to excite us by the very Tenour of the Prayers to return to the Primitive Fervour. How happy would it be, if the Roman Church would in all Things obſerve this Rule, and return to the laudable Practice and Simplicity of the antient Church; reforming her Offices by the Primitive Standard, and caſting away all thoſe Corruptions, which appear from the whole Series of this Hiſtory to be manifeſt Innovations, either privately crept in by Connivance and Negligence in Times of Ignorance, or elſe forcibly impoſed by Tyranny and Power, contrary to the Uſages of the antient Church, and many times to the very Deſign of Divine Service, and the natural Intent of holy Inſtitutions! As it is plain in the caſe of having Divine Service in an unknown Tongue, and worſhipping Saints and Angels, and Images and Croſſes with divine Worſhip, and dividing the Sacrament, and miniſtring it only in one Kind, and many other Things of the like Nature; which as they contradict the very End of the divine Ordinances, and the natural Deſign of God's Inſtitutions; ſo they run counter to the whole Practice of the antient Church, as any one may ſee by conſidering the Allegations produced in theſe Collections, in which I have endeavoured to point out as well the Riſe of Errors, and the Original of Corruptions in latter Ages, as the true antient Practice of the Primitive Church in all the ſeveral Parts of Divine Service relating to the ordinary Worſhip of God.

And here I ſhould have put an End to this Account, but that there are a few Queſtions more that may be asked concerning ſome Appendages and Circumſtances of the Communion, which it will be proper to anſwer in this Place. As 1. How they were uſed to diſpoſe of the Remains of the Euchariſt after Communicating? 2. What [g] Conſtit. lib. 7. cap. 26. Patr. Gr. Lat. T. 1. p. 21.

[h] Liturg. Jacob. Bibl.

[i] Chryſ. Litur. T. 4. p. 621.

[k] Miſſal. Roman. p. 24. de Ritu celebrandi Miſſam, & in Canone Miſſæ. p. 306.

[l] Bona Rerum Liturgic. lib. 2. cap. 20. n. 1.

was their Uſage and Practice in regard to their Agape or Feaſt of Charity, ſo famous in antient Hiſtory? 3. What Preparation they required as neceſſary to Communicants, to qualify them for a worthy Reception? 4. What Time they adminiſtred the Lord's Supper, and how often they exhorted or obliged all Perſons to receive it? I will give as ſhort an Anſwer as I can to theſe Queſtions, and therewith put an End to this Diſcourſe.

CHAP. VII.

How the Remains of the Euchariſt were diſpoſed of. And of their common Entertainment called Agape, or Feaſt of Charity.

SECT. I. Some Part of the Euchariſt antiently reſerved for particular Uſes.

WE have obſerved before in ſeveral Places of this Book, that ſome Part of the Euchariſt was commonly reſerved for ſeveral particular Uſes, to be ſent to the Abſent, and communicate the Sick, and to teſtify the Communion of diſtant Churches one with another. And this was one Way of diſpoſing of the Remains of the conſecrated Elements when the Communion was ended: To which, I conceive, the Author of the Conſtitutions had regard when he orders the Deacon [a] to carry what remained into the Paſtophoria or Veſtry, which was the Repoſitory for all Holy Things belonging to the Church.

SECT. II. The reſt divided among the Communicants.

IF any Thing remained over and above what was neceſſary for theſe Uſes, then by other Rules it was to be divided among the Communicants. As appears from the Canons of Theophilus Biſhop of Alexandria, one of which is to this Purpoſe [b]: Let the Clergy and the Faithful, that is, the Communicants, divide among themſelves the Oblations of the Euchariſt, after all have participated, and let not a Catechumen eat or drink of them.

SECT. III. This Diviſion of the conſecrated Elements a diſtinct Thing from the Diviſion of the other Oblations.

SOME learned Perſons [c] confound this Diviſion or Conſumption of the conſecrated Elements with that other Diviſion of the Oblations among the Clergy, and alledge the Author of the Conſtitutions for it, as if he intended this when he ſays, [d] Let the Deacons divide what remains of the myſtical Eulogiæ, by the Orders of the Biſhop or Presbyters, among the Clergy; to the Biſhop four Parts, to the Preſbyter three Parts, to the Deacon two Parts, to the reſt of the Clergy, Subdeacons, Readers, Singers, Deaconeſſes, one Part. For this is acceptable to God, that every one ſhould be honoured according to his Dignity. It is plain, he ſpeaks not here of the conſecrated Elements, but of the Diviſion of the Peoples Oblations among the Clergy, as Cotelerius rightly expounds it. For this was one Way of maintaining the Clergy in thoſe Days, as has been more fully ſhewn [*] in another Place. And though he calls theſe by the Name of the myſtical Eulogiæ, yet that does not determine it to the conſecrated Elements: For, as has been noted before, Eulogiæ is a common Name that ſignifies both. And Socrates [e] takes it for the Oblations in this very Caſe, when ſpeaking of Chryſanthus the Novatian Biſhop, he ſays, he never received any Thing of the Church ſave two Loaves of the Eulogiæ on the Lord's Day. Where he certainly means not two Loaves of the Euchariſt, but of the other Oblations of the People, which it was cuſtomary for the Clergy to have their proportioned Shares in.

SECT. IV. The Remains of the Euchariſt ſometimes given to innocent Children.

SOMETIMES what remained of the Euchariſt was diſtributed among the innocent Children of the Church. For, as I have briefly hinted before, whilſt the Communion of Infants continued in the Church, nothing was more uſual in many Places than both to give Children the Communion at the Time of Conſecration, and alſo to reſerve what remained unconſumed, for them to partake of ſome Day in the Week following. Thus it was appointed by the ſecond Council of Maſcon [f] in France, An. 588. That if any Remains of the Sacrifice, after the Service was ended, were laid up in the Veſtry, he who had the Care of them ſhould on Wedneſday or Friday bring the Innocents to Church faſting, and then ſprinkling the Remains with Wine, make them all partake of them. And Evagrius [g] ſays it was the Cuſtom of old at Conſtantinople to do the ſame: For when they had much Remains of the Body of Chriſt left, they were uſed to call in the Children that went to School, and diſtribute them among them. And he tells this remarkable Story upon it, That the Son of a certain Jew happening one Day to be among them, and acquainting his Father what he had done, his Father was ſo inraged at the Thing, that he caſt him into his burning Furnace, where he was uſed to make Glaſs. But [a] Conſtit. lib. 8. cap. 13. [b] Theoph. can. 8.

[c] Leſtrange, Allyance of Div. Offic. Chap. 7. p. 213.
[d] Conſtit. lib. 8. cap. 31. [*] Book V. Chap. iv. n. 1.
[e] Socrat. lib. 7. cap. 12. [f] Conc. Matiſcon. 2. can. 6. Quæcunque reliquiæ ſacrificiorum poſt peractam Miſſam in Sacrario ſuperſederint, quarta vel ſexta feria Innocentes ab illo, cujus intereſt, ad Eccleſiam adducantur, & indicto eis Jejunio, eaſdem reliquias conſperſas vino percipiant. [g] Evagr. lib. 4. cap. 36.

the Boy was preſerved untouched for ſome Days, till his Mother found him: And the Matter being related to Juſtinian the Emperor, he ordered the Mother and the Child to be baptized; and the Father, becauſe he refuſed to become a Chriſtian, to be crucified as a Murderer of his Son. The ſame Thing is related by Gregory of Tours [h], and Nicephorus Calliſtus [i], who alſo adds, that the Cuſtom continued at Conſtantinople to his own time, that is, the Middle of the fourteenth Century; for he ſays, when he was a Child, he was often called to partake of the Remains of the Sacrament after this Manner among other Children.

SECT. V. And ſometimes burnt in the Fire.

IN ſome Places they obſerved the Rule given by God for diſpoſing of the Remainders of the Sacrifices of Peace-Offerings and Vows under the old Law, which was to burn them with Fire. Lev. vii. 17. This was the Cuſtom of the Church of Jeruſalem in the fifth Century, when Heſychius a Presbyter of that Church wrote his Comment upon Leviticus, where he ſpeaks of it [k] in theſe Words: God commanded the Remainder of the Fleſh and the Bread to be burned with Fire. And we now ſee with our own Eyes the ſame Thing done in the Church: Whatever happens to remain of the Euchariſt unconſumed, we immediately burn with Fire, and that not after one, two, or many Days. From hence our learned Writers [l] generally obſerve two Things: 1. That it was not the Cuſtom of the Church of Jeruſalem to reſerve the Euchariſt ſo much as from one Day to another, though they did in ſome other Churches. 2. That they certainly did not believe it to be the natural Body and Subſtance of Chriſt, but only his typical or ſymbolical Body: For what an horrible and ſacrilegious Thing muſt the very Jews and Heathens have thought it for Chriſtians to burn the living and glorified Body of their God? And how muſt it have ſcandalized ſimple and plain Chriſtians themſelves, to have ſeen the God they worſhipped burnt in the Fire? And with what Face could they have objected this to the Heathen, that they worſhipped ſuch Things as might be burnt (which is the common Argument uſed by Arnobius, Lactantius, Athanaſius, and moſt others) if they themſelves had done the ſame Thing? If there were no other Argument againſt Tranſubſtantiation and Hoſt-worſhip, this one Thing were enough to perſuade any Rational Man, that ſuch Doctrines and Practices were never countenanced by the antient Church.

SECT. VI. The other Oblations partly diſpoſed of in a Feaſt of Charity. Which all the Ancients reckon an Apoſtolical Rite accompanying the Communion.

WE have ſeen how they diſpoſed of the conſecrated Elements; and are next to examine what they did with their other Oblations. It has been already obſerved, that ſome Part of theſe (by what Diſtinction made, is not very eaſy to tell) went toward the Maintenance of the Clergy. Out of the reſt a common Entertainment was uſually made, which from the Nature and Circumſtances of it was uſually called Agape, or Feaſt [m] of Charity; becauſe it was a liberal Collation of the Rich to feed the Poor. St. Chryſoſtom gives this Account of it, deriving it from Apoſtolical Practice: He ſays [n], the firſt Chriſtians had all Things in common, as we read in the Acts of the Apoſtles; and when that ceaſed, as it did in the Apoſtles Time, this came in its Room, as an Efflux or Imitation of it. For though the Rich did not make all their Subſtance common, yet upon certain Days appointed they made a common Table, and when their Service was ended, and they had all communicated in the Holy Myſteries, they all met at a common Feaſt; the Rich bringing Proviſions; and the Poor and thoſe who had nothing, being invited, they all feaſted in common together. In another Place [o] he repeats the ſame Thing, ſaying, from this Law and Cuſtom (of having all Things common) there aroſe then another admirable Cuſtom in the Churches. For when all the Faithful met together, and had heard the Sermon and Prayers, and received the Communion, they did not immediately return home upon the breaking up of the Aſſembly, but the Rich and Wealthy brought Meat and Food from their own Houſes, and called the Poor, and made a common Table, a common Dinner, a common Banquet in the Church. And ſo from this Fellowſhip in eating, and the Reverence of the Place, they were all ſtrictly united in Charity one with another, and much Pleaſure and Profit aroſe thence to them all: For the Poor were comforted, and the Rich reaped the Fruits of their Benevolence both from thoſe whom they fed and from God. The ſame Account is given by the Author under the Name of St. Jerom [p], who ſays, when they met in the Church, they made their Oblations ſeparately, and after the Communion whatever remained of thoſe Sacrifices, they eat and conſumed in a common Supper together. The like is ſaid by Theodoret [q], OEcumenius, Theophylact, and others upon that Place of the Apoſtle. From whence it appears that this was a Rite always accompanying the Communion. And it is a ſingular Opinion of Albaſpinæus, when he aſſerts [r] that theſe Agapæ and the Communion were never celebrated at the ſame time, which he maintains without any Foundation againſt the concurrent Senſe both of antient and modern Writers.

[b] Gregor. Turon. de Glor. Martyr. lib. 1. cap. 10. [i] Niceph. lib. 17. cap. 25. [k] Heſych. in Levit. lib. 2. Quod reliquum eſt de carnibus & panibus, in igne incendi præcepit. Quod nunc videmus etiam ſenſibiliter in Eccleſia fieri, ignique tradi quæcunque remanere contigerit inconſumta, non omnino ea quæ una die, vel duabus aut multis ſervata ſunt. [l] Vid. Du Moulin, Novelty of Popery, lib. 7. Controv. 11. chap. 19. Albertin. de Euchar. p. 853. Whitby, Idolatry of Hoſt Worſhip. [m] Ignat. Ep. ad Smyrn. n. 8. ἀγάπην ποιεῖν. Ep. Interpol. calls it Δοχὴν. Conſtit. lib. 2. cap. 28. Clem. Alex. Pædag. lib. 2. cap. 1. p. 165. [n] Chryſ. Hom. 27. in 1 Cor. p. 559. [o] Id. Hom. 21. Oportet Hæreſes eſſe, &c. T. 5. p. 310. [p] Hieron. in 1 Cor. 11. 20. In Eccleſia convenientes Oblationes ſuas ſeparatim offerebant, & poſt Communionem quæcunque eis de Sacrificiis Superfuiſſent, illic in Eccleſia communem cœnam comedentes pariter conſumebant. [q] Theod. in 1 Cor. 11. 16. μετὰ τὴν μυστικὴν λειτουργίαν ἑστιᾶσθαι. &c. OEcumen. in 1 Cor. 11. T. 1. p. 529. Theophylact. in 1 Cor. 11. 17.

nying

SECT. VII. Whether this Feaſt was before or after the Communion in the Apoſtles Days.

THERE is ſome Difference indeed between the antient and modern Interpreters concerning one Circumſtance of the Love-Feaſts in Point of Time, as practiſed in the Apoſtles Days. The Ancients, as we have heard already out of St. Chryſoſtom and the reſt, generally ſay, theſe Feaſts were not till after the Communion, when the whole Ceremony of Preaching, Praying, and participating of the ſacred Elements was over, and the Remainders of the Oblations were to be diſpoſed of. But many of the Moderns think otherwiſe: Dr. Cave [s] ſays 'tis probable that in the Apoſtles Time, and the Age after them, this Feaſt was before the Communion, in Imitation of our Saviour's Inſtitution, who celebrated the Sacrament after Supper; and St. Paul taxing the Abuſes of the Church of Corinth, reproves them that when they came together for the Lord's Supper, they did not tarry one for another, but every one took his own Supper, and one was hungry, and another was drunken. All this, he ſays, muſt needs be done before the Celebration of the Euchariſt, which was never adminiſtred till the whole Church met together. In this Opinion he has the Concurrence of Suicerus [t], and Daillé [u], and Eſtius [x], who ſays that Pelagius, Primaſius, Haimo, Hervæus, Aquinas, Lyra, Cajetan, and others of the Latins were of the ſame Opinion. That which ſeems moſt probable is, that they obſerved no certain Rule about this Matter, but had their Feaſt ſometimes before, ſometimes after the Communion, as it appears to have been in ſome meaſure in the following Ages.

SECT. VIII. How obſerved in the following Ages. The Euchariſt commonly received faſting, and before this Feaſt, except upon ſome particular Occaſions.

FOR when the Chriſtians in Time of Perſecution were obliged to meet early in the Morning before Day to celebrate the Euchariſt in their religious Aſſemblies, then their Feaſting before Communion could not well comport with the Circumſtances and Occaſion of their Meeting. And therefore in the Beginning of the ſecond Century we find the Euchariſt was received before, and the Feaſt poſt-poned. For ſo Pliny [y] repreſents it in the Account which he had from the Chriſtians in the Entrance of this Century: For having ſaid, that they met on the Lord's Day to ſing Hymns to Chriſt, they bind themſelves by a Sacrament, 'tis added, When this is done, our Cuſtom is to depart, and meet again to partake of an Entertainment, but that a very innocent one, and common to all. 'Tis plain here the Communion was firſt, and the Agape ſome time after. And ſo Tertullian, who gives the moſt particular Account of it, ſpeaks of it as a Supper a little before Night: Our Supper, which you accuſe of Luxury, ſhews its Reaſon in its very Name: For it is called ἀγάπη, which ſignifies Love among the Greeks. Whatever Charge we are at, it is Gain to be at Expence upon the account of Piety. For we therewith relieve and refreſh the Poor. There is nothing vile or immodeſt committed in it. For we do not ſit down before we have firſt offered up Prayer to God; we eat only to ſatisfy Hunger; and drink [z] only ſo much as becomes modeſt Perſons. We fill ourſelves in ſuch manner, as that we remember ſtill that we are to worſhip God by Night. We diſcourſe as in the Preſence of God, knowing that He hears us. Then after Water to waſh our Hands, and Lights brought in, every one is moved to ſing ſome Hymn to God, either out of Scripture, or as he is able, of his own Compoſing: And by this we judge whether he has obſerved the Rules of Temperance in Drinking. Prayer again concludes our Feaſt; and thence we depart, not to fight and quarrel, not to run about and abuſe all we meet, not to give ourſelves up to laſcivious Paſtime; but to purſue the ſame Care of Modeſty and Chaſtity, as Men that have fed at a Supper of Philoſophy and Diſcipline, rather than a corporeal Feaſt. As this is a fine Deſcription of theſe holy Banquets, where Charity is the Foundation, and Prayer begins and ends the Feaſt, and ſinging of Hymns and religious Diſcourſes ſeaſon the Entertainment, and Modeſty and Temperance runs through the whole: So the particular mention made of Lights, and Worſhipping God by Night, ſhews that they came after the Communion, and not before, in Tertullian's Time; when they were uſed to receive the Communion in the Morning, and always Faſting, even upon thoſe Days when they deferred it till three in the Afternoon, as upon the Stationary Days, or till ſix at Night. For it was a Rule in the African Church to receive the Euchariſt faſting at all Times, except one Day, which was the Thurſday before Eaſter, commonly called Cœna Domini, becauſe it was the Day on which our Saviour celebrated his laſt Supper, and inſtituted the Euchariſt after Supper: In Imitation of which, it was the Cuſtom to celebrate the Euchariſt after Supper on this Day, in the African Churches, but on no other Day whatſoever, as we learn from the third Council of Carthage and St. Au- [r] Albaſp. Obſervat. lib. 1. cap. 18. p. 57. [s] Cave Prim. Chriſt. Par. 1. c. 11. p. 344. [t] Suicer. Theſaur. Eccleſ. voce Ἀγάπη. [u] Dallæ. de Objecto Cult. Relig. lib. 2. cap. 19. [x] Eſtius in 1 Cor. 11. 20. [y] Plin. lib. 10. Ep. Quibus peractis morem ſibi diſcedere, rurſuſque coeundi ad capiendum cibam, promiſcuum tamen & innoxium. [z] Tertul. Apol. cap. 39. Ita ſaturantur, ut qui meminerint etiam per noctem adorandum ſibi eſſe; ita fabulantur, ut qui ſciunt Dominum audire. Poſt aquam manualem & lumina, ut quiſque de Scripturis Sanctis, vel de proprio ingenio poteſt, provocatur in medium Deo canere, &c.

ſtin. The Council of Carthage had an expreſs Canon [a] to this purpoſe: That the Sacrament of the Altar be never celebrated by any but ſuch as are Faſting, except on one Anniverſary Day, when the Supper of the Lord is ſolemnized. And purſuant to this they order, That if any Commendation of the Dead was to be made in the Afternoon, it ſhould only be done with Prayers, and not with the Celebration of the Euchariſt, if they that aſſiſted at the Funeral-Office had dined before. St. Auſtin was a Member of this Council, and he aſſures us, that this Decree was conformable to the Practice of the Univerſal Church in his Age, which he thought to be derived from the Appointment of the Apoſtles. For though it be very apparent, that when the Diſciples firſt received the Body and Blood of the Lord, they did not receive Faſting; yet does any one now accuſe the Univerſal Church [b], becauſe all Men receive Faſting? For ſo it pleaſed the Holy Ghoſt, that for the Honour of ſo great a Sacrament the Lord's Body ſhould enter into the Mouth of a Chriſtian before any other Food. And therefore this Cuſtom is obſerved by the whole World. For neither becauſe the Lord gave it after Meat, ought the Brethren to meet after Dinner or Supper to receive it, or to imitate thoſe whom the Apoſtle reproves and corrects, who mingled it with their Tables. Our Saviour, to commend the Greatneſs of this Myſtery, was minded indeed to fix it in the Hearts and Memory of his Diſciples as the laſt Thing, before He went from them to his Paſſion: But He did not therefore order in what Manner it ſhould be received, that he might reſerve this for his Apoſtles to do, by whom he intended to order his Church. For if he had appointed, that Men ſhould receive it after Meat, I ſuppoſe no one would have altered that Cuſtom. But when the Apoſtle ſpeaking of this Sacrament, ſays, The reſt will I ſet in order when I come, 1 Cor. xi. 34. we are given to underſtand, that he then appointed this Cuſtom of Receiving faſting, which now the whole Church over all the World obſerves without any Variation or Diverſity. But adds, that ſome upon a probable Reaſon were delighted to offer and receive the Body of the Lord after Meat on one certain Day in the Year, when the Lord himſelf gave his Supper, to make the Commemoration of it more remarkable. And becauſe ſome on that Day choſe to faſt, and others not, therefore in many Places it was cuſtomary to offer the Sacrifice twice, to ſerve the Ends of both. St. Chryſoſtom alſo frequently ſpeaks of their receiving the Communion Faſting [c]. Thou faſteſt, ſays he, before thou receiveſt the Euchariſt, that thou mayſt be worthy. And in one or two Places he vindicates himſelf from an Objection which his Adverſaries brought againſt him, as if he was uſed to tranſgreſs this Rule both in adminiſtring Baptiſm and the Euchariſt. They ſay, I gave [d] the Communion to ſome after eating. If I have done this, let my Name be wiped out of the Catalogue of Biſhops, and not be written in the Book of the Orthodox Faith. If I have done any ſuch thing, let Chriſt caſt me out of his Kingdom. But if they ſtill go on to object this, let them alſo degrade St. Paul, who baptized a whole Houſe after Supper. Let them alſo depoſe the Lord himſelf, who gave the Communion to his Apoſtles after Supper. So again [e], they object againſt me, Thou didſt firſt eat, and then adminiſter Baptiſm. If I did ſo, let me be Anathema; Let me not be numbered in the Roll of Biſhops; Let me not be among the Angels; Let me never pleaſe God. But if I had done ſo, what Abſurdity had I committed? Let them depoſe Paul, who baptized the Jaylor after Supper. Yea, I will ſay a bolder Thing, Let them depoſe Chriſt himſelf, for he gave the Communion to his Diſciples after Supper. This ſhews the Cuſtom of the Church was to adminiſter both Sacraments before eating, though at the ſame time it intimates, that to do otherwiſe was not an unpardonable Crime. Gregory Nazianzen hints alſo at this Cuſtom [f], when he ſays, Every Action of Chriſt is not neceſſary to be imitated by us: For he celebrated the Myſtery of the Paſſover with his Diſciples in an Upper Room and after Supper, but we do it in the Church, and before Supper. The like is ſaid by St. Baſil [g] and many other of the Greek Writers. And among the Latins there are ſeveral Canons of the Councils of Braga [h], Maſcon [i], Auxerre [k], and Toledo [l] to this purpoſe. Some of which allow the African Cuſtom of Communicating after eating on the Thurſday in Paſſion Week, but others upon the account of the Priſcillianiſts forbid it. And therefore Socrates notes it [m] as a ſingular Thing in the Churches of Egypt and Thebais, that on Saturdays they were uſed to adminiſter the Euchariſt after eating in the Evening. Which is prohibited by the Council of Trullo [n], not excepting the Thurſday in Paſſion Week, which though the African Fathers for probable Reaſons might allow, yet they utterly forbid it. By all which it appears, that the general Cuſtom of the Church was to celebrate the Euchariſt Faſting: And conſequently that theſe Love-Feaſts we are ſpeaking of, muſt be held after the Communion, and not before it. Yet it is but a ſorry Argument in Mabillon to conclude hence [o] that the Ancients muſt needs believe Tranſubſtantiation, becauſe they received [a] Conc. Carth. 3. can. 29. Ut Sacramenta altaris non niſi à jejunis hominibus celebrentur, excepto uno die Anniverſario, quo Cœna Domini celebratur. Nam ſi aliquorum pomeridiano tempore defunctorum, ſive Epiſcoporum ſive cæterorum, Commendatio facienda eſt, ſolis Orationibus fiat, ſi illi qui faciunt, jam pranſi inveniantur. [b] Aug. Ep. 118. ad Januar. cap. 6. Liquido apparet, quando primum acceperunt Diſcipuli corpus & ſanguinem Domini, eos non accepiſſe jejunos. Nunquid tamen propterea calumniandum eſt univerſæ Eccleſiæ quod à jejunis ſemper accipitur? Et hoc enim placuit Spiritui ſancto, ut in honorem tanti Sacramenti, in os Chriſtiani prius Dominicum corpus intraret, quam cæteri cibi. Nam ideo per univerſum orbem mos iſte ſervatur, &c. [c] Chryſ. Hom. 27. in 1 Cor. p. 567. [d] Chryſ. Ep. 125. ad Cyriacum. T. 4. p. 868. [e] Sermo ante quam iret in Exilium. T. 4. p. 969. [f] Naz. Orat. 40. de Baptiſmo. [g] Baſil. Hom. 1. de jejunio. [h] Conc. Bracar. 1. can. 16. Bracar. 2. can. 10. [i] Conc. Matiſcon. 2. can. 6. [k] Conc. Antiſſiodor. can. 9. [l] Conc. Tolet. 7. can. 2. [m] Socrat. lib. 5. cap. 22. [n] Conc. Trull. can. 29. [o] Mabil. de Liturg. Gallicana, lib. 1. cap. 6. n. 7.

the

the Communion Faſting. For he might as reaſonably have concluded from Chryſoſtom, that the Water in Baptiſm was tranſubſtantiated, becauſe we have heard him ſay before, that they always adminiſtred Baptiſm Faſting. And ſome learned Men [p] are of Opinion, that for the three firſt Ages, though they generally received the Euchariſt Faſting in the Aſſemblies before Day, yet ſometimes they received after Supper. For Cyprian diſputing againſt the Aquarians, who celebrated in the Morning in Water only, and in the Evening in Wine and Water mixed together, does not contend with them about celebrating after Supper, but only becauſe they did not at both Times mix Wine with Water after Chriſt's Example. He would not ſo eaſily have paſſed over the Practice of the Aquarians in celebrating in the Evening, had there been no Inſtances of the like Practice in the Church: But as it was cuſtomary in Egypt to celebrate the Euchariſt on Saturdays after Dinner, and in Africk one Day in a Year after Supper; all he pleads for upon this Point, is only this [q], That the general Cuſtom of the Church to celebrate the Euchariſt in the Morning only, was not againſt the Rule of Chriſt, though he gave it in the Evening after Supper: Becauſe Chriſt had a particular Reaſon for what he did, which he did not intend ſhould oblige the Church: Chriſt offered in the Evening, to ſignify the Evening or End of the World; but we offer in the Morning, to celebrate our Saviour's Reſurrection. And he gives another Reaſon why they did not celebrate in the Evening generally as in the Morning, becauſe the People could not ſo well all come together in the Evening as in the Morning. By which it is plain, in Cyprian's Time there was no abſolute Rule to forbid Communicating after Supper, though the Practice began generally to be diſuſed, and the common Cuſtom was to receive Faſting and at Morning Service.

SECT. IX.

Theſe Love-Feaſts at firſt held in the Church: But afterward forbidden by Orders of Councils.

THERE is one Thing more to be obſerved of their Love Feaſts, That as they were deſigned for the Promotion of Unity and Charity, they were commonly held in the Church for the three firſt Centuries, as learned Men [r] conclude from that Canon of the Council of Gangra [s], which was made againſt the Euſtathians, If any one deſpiſes the Feaſts of Charity which the Faithful make, who for the Honour of the Lord call their Brethren to them, and comes not to the Invitation, becauſe he contemns them, let him be Anathema. Theſe Euſtathians were Men who held their Meetings in private Houſes, and deſpiſed the Church; which is the Reaſon of this Canon made againſt them. However ſuch Abuſes were ſometimes committed in theſe Feaſts, that the Council of Laodicea not long after made a Law againſt having them in the Church [t], forbidding any to eat or ſpread Tables in the Houſe of God or the Church. And a like Decree was made in the third Council of Carthage [u], forbidding the Clergy to feaſt in the Church, unleſs it were by chance in a Journey for want of other Entertainment: And Orders are given to reſtrain the People as much as might be from ſuch Feaſting in the Church. But the Cuſtom was too inveterate to be rooted out at once; And therefore we find by St. Auſtin's [x] Anſwer to Fauſtus the Manichee, that they were ſtill kept in the Church: For whereas Fauſtus objected two Things againſt them: 1. That they were but the Spawn of the Gentile Banquets turned into Chriſtian Feaſts: 2. That the Catholicks were uſed to make themſelves drunk at them in the Memorials of the Martyrs: St. Auſtin rejects the firſt Charge as a mere Calumny, telling him, That the End of their Agape was only to feed the Poor with Fleſh, or the Fruits of the Earth: But the ſecond Charge he owns in Part as true, that the People ſtill held theſe Feaſts in the Church, and that ſome Exceſs was committed in them: But then, ſays he, there is a great deal of Difference between Tolerating and Approving: We do not approve of Drunkenneſs even in a private Houſe, much leſs in a Church: It is one Thing which we are commanded to teach, and another what we are forced to tolerate and endure, till we can correct and amend it. St. Auſtin [y] ſays all kind of Feaſting in the Church was prohibited by St. Ambroſe at Milan with good Succeſs: And it was he himſelf that gave the Advice to Aurelius Biſhop of Carthage to make the foreſaid Canon againſt it [z], in hopes to extirpate it, after the Example of St. Ambroſe. In France it was prohibited by the ſecond Council of Orleance [a] an. 541. Yet for all this, there were ſome Remains of it in the ſeventh Century, when the Council of Trullo [b] was obliged to reinforce the Canon of Laodicea againſt Feaſting in the Church under [p] Vid. Dallæ. de Objecto Cult. Relig. lib. 2. cap. 19. p. 297. Fell. Not. in Cypr. Ep. 63. p 156. [q] Cypr. Ep. 63. ad Cæcilium. p. 156. The Objection of the Aquarians: An illa ſibi aliquis contemplatione blanditur, quod etſi mane aqua ſola offerri videtur, tamen cum ad cœnandum venimus, mixtum calicem offerimus? Cyprian's Anſwer: Sed cum cœnamus, ad convivium noſtrum plebem convocare non poſſumus, ut ſacramenti veritatem Fraternitate omni præſente celebremus. The Aquarians Object: At enim non mane, ſed poſt cœnam mixtum calicem obtulit Dominus. Cypr. Anſwers: Nunquid ergo Dominicum poſt cœnam celebrare debemus, ut ſit mixtum calicem frequentandis Dominicis offeramus? Chriſtum offerre oportebat circa veſperam diei, ut hora ipſa ſacrificii oſtenderet Occaſum & Veſperam mundi.— Nos autem reſurrectionem Domini mane celebramus. [r] Bevereg. Not. in Can. 74. Trull. Suicer. Theſaur. Eccleſ. t. 1. p. 27.

[s] Conc. Gangren. can. 11. [t] Conc. Laodic. can. 28. [u] Conc. Carth. 3. can. 30. Ut nulli Epiſcopi vel Clerici in Eccleſia conviventur, niſi forte tranſeuntes hoſpitiorum neceſſitate illic reficiant: Populi etiam ab hujuſmodi conviviis, quantum fieri poteſt, prohibeantur. [x] Aug. cont. Fauſt. lib. 20. cap. 20. Nec ſacrificia eorum vertimus in Agapes.—— Agapes enim noſtræ Pauperes paſcunt ſive frugibus, ſive carnibus, &c. It. cap. 21. Qui autem ſe in Memoriis Martyrum inebriant, quomodo à nobis approbari poſſunt, cum eos, etiamſi in domibus ſuis id faciant, ſana doctrina condemnet? Sed aliud eſt quod docemus, aliud quod ſuſtinemus: aliud quod præcipere jubemur, aliud quod emendare præcipimur, & donec emendemus, tolerare compellimur. [y] Aug. Confeſſ. lib. 6. cap. 2. [z] Aug. Ep. 64. ad Aurelium. [a] Conc. Aurel. 2. can. 12. [b] Conc. Trull. can. 74.

Pain

Pain of Excommunication. So difficult a Matter was it to extirpate the Abuſes of antient Cuſtom, without deſtroying the Cuſtom itſelf, which was innocent in its Original, and of ſo great Service to the Chriſtian Church, whilſt it continued free from Abuſes, that it was the Envy and Admiration of the Heathen.

SECT. X.

How the Chriſtians were at firſt abuſed and calumniated by ſome of the Heathen, but admired and envied by others, upon account of theſe Feaſts of Charity.

SOME indeed were maliciouſly diſpoſed to calumniate and traduce the Chriſtians upon the account of this innocent Cuſtom, as guilty of I know not what black Deſigns. Origen [c] ſays, Celſus charged them with holding clancular and ſeditious Cabals upon the ſcore of theſe Agapes, or Meetings to ſhew Kindneſs to one another. Which is alſo noted by Tertullian in that Chapter of his Apology, where he gives [d] us that fine Deſcription of the Chriſtian Feaſts, in anſwer to this Suggeſtion. Others charged theſe Feaſts with the Practice of abominable Uncleanneſs: In anſwer to which Minucius [e] tells them, their Feaſts were not only chaſte, but ſober; for they did not indulge either Gluttony or Drunkenneſs; but tempered their Mirth with Gravity; with chaſte Diſcourſe, and chaſter Bodies. Others added that monſtrous Fable of their Feeding upon human Fleſh, and Feaſting upon Infants Blood. Which is mentioned and refuted by all the Apologiſts, Athenagoras [f], Theophilus [g], Tertullian [h], Minucius [i], Origen [k], Juſtin Martyr [l] and many others, whom the Reader may find at large, collected by the learned Kortholt [m] in his Book De Calumniis Paganorum, &c. The Reaſon of this Charge is by many of the Ancients aſcribed to the vile Practices of the Carpocratians [n], and other Hereticks, at leaſt tacitly or indirectly, whilſt they accuſe them of this Crime which the Heathens turned upon the Chriſtians in general. And ſo it is ſaid upon their Authority by many modern [o] Authors. OEcumenius [p] aſcribes it to another Reaſon: He ſays, in the Perſecution of the Chriſtians at Lyons under Antoninus, the Heathens having apprehended ſome Servants of certain Chriſtian Catechumens, put them to the Rack to make them confeſs ſome Secret of the Chriſtians; and they having heard their Maſters ſay, that the Holy Communion was the Body and Blood of Chriſt, and ſuppoſing it to be truly Fleſh and Blood (ἀυτὸι νομίζονλες τῷ ὄντι αἷμα καὶ σάρκα εἶ) to gratify the Inquiſitors they told them what they had heard. And the Heathens underſtanding this, as if the Chriſtians had really (ἀυτόχρημα) eat Fleſh and Blood, put two of the Martyrs, Sanctus and Blandina, to the Rack to make them confeſs it; to whom Blandina ſmartly reply'd, How ſhould they indure to do this, who for Exerciſe ſake abſtain from ſuch Fleſh as they might lawfully eat? If this were true, it would prove that the Heathens grounded their Calumny upon a falſe Apprehenſion they had of the Chriſtian Sacrament: But it would by no means prove what Perron and many of the Romaniſts would have, that the Ground of the Fable was the real Belief of Chriſtians, as if they believed the Euchariſt to be the real proper Fleſh and Blood of Chriſt: For this is expreſly ſaid to be only a falſe Apprehenſion of the Heathens, and utterly deny'd by the Chriſtians, according as OEcumenius relates the Story. Which yet is ſomething different from the Genuine Acts in Euſebius [q], for there is no Mention made of the Euchariſt in the Story, but it is only ſaid, that when ſome of the Chriſtian's Servants, who were Heathens, were apprehended, they fearing to be tormented, did by the Motion of Satan, and the Inſtigation of the Soldiers prompting them to it, falſely accuſe the Chriſtians, as if they were uſed to feaſt upon Man's Fleſh, and commit Inceſt, and other the like Things, which it is not fit either to ſpeak or think, and which we can hardly believe were ever done by any Men whatſoever. So that the Chriſtians Belief about the Euchariſt could not be the Ground about this Story, but it either ſprung from the Practices of the Carpocratians, or elſe (as the learned Kortholt [r] not without ſome probable Reaſons inclines to believe) it took its Riſe from the pure Malice and Fiction of the Heathens themſelves, ſome of whom never ſtuck at ſaying any Thing that would render the Chriſtians odious. However though there were many who thus calumniated theſe Chriſtian Feaſts by this Variety of Charges, yet there were ſome alſo who could diſcern the good Effects of them, and the great Influence they had not only on their own Members, but the very Heathen, who ſometimes would cry out and ſay, See how theſe Chriſtians love one another, as Tertullian [s] notes in ſpeaking of their Collations and Charity. Nay, Julian himſelf, though the bittereſt Enemy the Chriſtians ever had, could not help bearing Teſtimony to the Uſefulneſs of this Practice, which he looked upon with an envious Eye, as that which he imagined chiefly to uphold the Chriſtian Religion, and undermine the Religion of the Gentiles. For thus in one of his Letters to his Gentile Prieſts he provokes them to the Exerciſe of Charity by the Example of the Chriſtians and their Feaſts of Charity: There is the more Reaſon to be careful in this Matter, ſays

[c] Orig. cont. Celſ. lib. 1. p. 4. βέλεται διαβαλεῖν τὴν καλυμμένην ἀγάπην. &c. [d] Tertul. Apol. c. 39.
[e] Minuc. p. 92. De inceſto Convivio fabulam grandem adverſum nos Dæmonum coitio mentita eſt.——At nos Convivia non tantum pudica colimus, ſed & ſobria——caſto ſermone, corpore caſtiore. [f] Athenag. Legat. p. 4. [g] Theoph. ad Autolyc. lib. 3. [h] Tertul. Apol. cap. 7. & 11.
[i] Minuc. Octav. [k] Orig. cont. Celſ. lib. 6.
[l] Juſt. Apol. 1. & 2. & Dial. cum Tryph. [m] Kortholt. de Calumn. Pagan. cap. 18. p. 158. &c. [n] Epiphan. Hær. 26. Gnoſtic. n. 5. Euſeb. lib. 4. cap. 7. Aug. de Hæreſ. cap. 27. [o] Dallæ. de Objecto Cult. Relig. lib. 2. cap. 28. Baron. an. 120. n. 22. & 179. n. 44. [p] OEcumen. in 1 Pet. 3. 16. [q] Euſeb. lib. 5. cap. 1. p. 156.
[r] Kortholt. ubi ſupra. p. 163. [s] Tertul. Apol. cap. 39.

he [t], because it is manifestly the Neglect of this Humanity in the Priests, which has given Occasion to the impious Galilæans (so he commonly styles the Christians) to strengthen their Party by the Practice of that Humanity, which the others have neglected. For as Kidnappers steal away Children, whom they first allure with a Cake: So these begin first to work upon honest-hearted Gentiles, with their Love-Feasts and Entertainments and ministring of Tables, as they call them, till at last they pervert them to Atheism and Impiety against the Gods. This is a full Vindication of them from all those Aspersions, which the former Heathens had cast upon them, and an ample Testimony of their Usefulness from the Mouth of an Adversary, who saw and envied the Progress which Christianity made in the World by means of these Feasts of Charity, which he was minded to introduce into his own way of Heathen-Worship, with many other such Rites, in Imitation of the Christian Institution. Happy had it been for the Christian Religion, if Christians had never had Occasion to object more against their own Feasts of Charity, than Julian their bittereſt Enemy could find to object against them! They might then have gone on with Innocence and Glory, and have continued an useful and laudable Rite to this Day.

CHAP. VIII.

What Preparation the Ancients required as necessary in Communicants, to qualify them for a Worthy Reception.

SECT. I.

A general Answer to this Question, by referring to the Professions made by every Christian in Baptism, of Repentance, Faith, and Holy Obedience.

I CANNOT better answer this Question in general Terms than by saying, The Preparation which they required as necessary in every Christian, was the Performance of the Conditions and Obligations, which every Man laid upon himself in Baptism; the Observation of which put a Man in a Christian State, and the Favour of God; and was a continual Preparation for Death and Judgment; and consequently a continual and habitual Preparation for Approaches to God in Prayer and Holy Mysteries (between which, as to what concerns Preparation, the Ancients made little or no Distinction) since it was a Preparation that qualified a Man for a constant daily or weekly Communion, which was proper for those who were to receive the Communion in a manner every day, according to the Rules and Practice of those Primitive Ages, as we shall see in the next Chapter. Now the Obligation which every Man laid upon himself in Baptism, as we have shewed in a former Book, was the Profession and actual Performance of these three things. 1. Repentance, or a Renunciation of all former Sin, together with the Author of it, the Devil. 2. Faith, or Belief of the several Articles of the Christian Institution or Mystery of Godliness. 3. An holy and constant Obedience paid to the Laws of this Holy Religion. In the Performance of which sincerely and without Dissimulation, every Man was supposed to be truly qualified for Baptism: And what qualified him for Baptism, also qualified him for the Communion; of which there is this certain Evidence, that as soon as any Man was baptized, he was immediately communicated: Which could not regularly have been done, but upon Presumption, that he that was duly qualified for Baptism, was qualified for the Communion also. So that he that continued in the strict Observance of all the Particulars of his Baptismal Covenant, was presumed to be in a constant habitual Preparation for the Communion every Day: And this was that happy State of a Christian Life, which qualified those Primitive Saints for such frequent Reception; when frequency of Communion kept up a flaming Piety and Universal Holiness in their Souls, and such a State of continual Holiness made them always fit for, and desirous of frequent Communion. For these mutually acted in a holy Combination, and reciprocally assisted each other: An habitual Holiness was a constant Preparation for the Communion; and frequent Communion was one of the best Helps to keep them in a continual Preparation for it. And to Men of this Character and Behaviour there could be no great Labour needful, besides the constant Tenour of a pious Life; nor any long Time necessary to prepare for the Lord's Table, when the whole Business of their Lives was but as it were one continued Act of Preparation for it. They lived as Men that always expected Death, yet uncertain of the Time, and therefore were in a continual Preparation for it, which is the best Preparation for the Communion. Their Loins were girded about, and their Lamps burning; and they themselves like unto Men that waited for their Lord, that when he came and knocked, they might open to him immediately. And to them belonged the Blessing of Christ, Luke xii. 37. Blessed are those Servants, whom the Lord when he cometh, shall find watching: It was true of them, if ever of any, that Christ came and found them watching: And he girded himself, and made them sit down to Meat, in the spiritual Feast, and came forth and served them.

[t] Julian. Fragment. Epist. p. 555.

SECT. II.
What Failings are consistent with this Profession, and a State of Grace, and a continual Preparation for the Communion.

BUT it may be said, there is no such Thing possible as constant Preparation for the Communion: For no Man lives without Sin to be repented of. In many Things we offend all: And, If we say that we have no Sin, we deceive our selves, and the Truth is not in us. But notwithstanding this supposed Difficulty, the Fathers assure us there were antiently many that were in a continual Preparation for the Communion, and did actually communicate every Day. For those Sins which unqualify Men absolutely for the Communion, are not those lesser Sins of human Frailty and Infirmity, which are called Sins of daily Incursion, without which no Man lives; but habitual and reigning Sins, which Men indulge, or such single Acts of greater Sins, as are answerable to Habits of Sin, and require a more severe Repentance; such as Adultery, Murder, and the like, which wound the Conscience to an high degree, and are not ordinarily cured in an Instant, but by a longer Course of Discipline, exacting both greater Severities in Repentance, and a longer Time of Probation. But those Sins of human Frailty, which the best of Men daily commit in some Degree or other, are not of this Nature, but are such as are consistent with the Profession of a good Christian, and a State of Grace, and a continual Preparation for the Communion; and they do not exclude Men from God's Favour, so long as Men labour and strive against them, and mourn for them, as for Infirmities, in a general and daily Repentance, upon which God is willing to pardon them. If it were not so, there could be no such Thing as Preparation for the Communion at all: And it would not only destroy frequent and daily Communion, but Communion in general; since no Man lives without such Infirmities; and if he were not to communicate till he had perfectly cured them, he must for ever abstain from communicating, and never come at the Lord's Table: Which were at once to destroy the very Ordinance itself, by making the Qualification for it Impracticable, and rendring it Impossible for any Man to be perfectly and truly prepared for it. And it is to be feared that some in these later Ages, by overstraining the Point, have done this great disservice to Religion, by obliging Men to such a Preparation for the Communion as is impracticable in itself, and frighting tender Consciences from the Holy Ordinance under Pretence of greater Reverence to it. By which Means it has sometimes happened, that they who perhaps have been the best prepared to receive it, have by needless Scruples or Terrors been kept at the greatest Distance from it. But the Ancients were extreamly cautious of this Delusion, and carefully taught Men to distinguish between such Sins as lay waste the Conscience, and destroy a State of Grace, and unqualify Men for the Communion; and such Sins of Infirmity and Human Frailty, as are consistent with a State of Grace, and do not unqualify Men for constant Communion; being such as are done away by a general Repentance and daily Prayer for Pardon and Forgiveness. This Doctrine and Distinction of Sins is often inculcated by St. Austin and others. It will be sufficient to hear their Sense in St. Austin's Words upon [a] the Article of Remission of Sins in the Creed: Where speaking to the Catechumens, he tells them, when they had received Baptism, they should be careful to preserve a good Life in the Commands of God, that they might keep their Baptism to the End. I do not say, that ye should live here without Sin: But there are some venial Sins, without which we cannot live in this Life. Baptism is appointed for all Sins great and small: But for lesser Sins, without which we cannot live, Prayer is appointed. What says the Prayer? Forgive us our Trespasses, as we forgive them that trespass against us. We are once cleansed by Baptism, we are every Day cleansed by Prayer. But do not commit those Things, for which it will be necessary for you to be separated from the Body of Christ; which God forbid. For those whom ye see doing Penance, have committed great Crimes, either Adultery, or some other grievous Sins, for which they do Penance. For if their Transgressions had been light, the daily Prayer had been sufficient to blot them out. By this we may judge, that Sins of Infirmity, to which all Men are liable, and which were pardoned by their Daily Prayers, were reckoned no formal Breaches of the Baptismal Covenant, nor consequently any just Impediments to debar any Man from receiving the Communion every Day; (since none, except the Pelagians, thought it possible for Men to live in such Angelical Perfection, as to be above all manner of Failings in this mortal State of Human Frailty:) and therefore they did not require of Men, in order to communicate, such a Perfection as humane Nature was not capable of attaining.

SECT. III.
What Repentance required for such Failings.

YET for as much as lesser Sins, even of Infirmity, are Transgressions of the Law, and the Remainders of Corruption in our Nature, and in Strictness deserve Punishment, if God should be extream to enter into Judgment with us for them; nay, and if they be indulged and neglected, may commence greater and deadly

[a] Aug. de Symbolo. lib. 1. cap. 7. Cum baptizati fueritis, tenete vitam bonam in præceptis Dei: ut baptismum custodiatis usque in finem. Non vobis dico, quia sine peccato hic vivetis: sed sunt Venialia, sine quibus vita ista non est. Propter omnia peccata Baptismus inventus est: propter Levia, sine quibus esse non possumus, Oratio inventa. &c. Vid. Aug. Enchirid. ad Laurent. cap. 71. & Hom. 119. de Tempore. Ep. 108. ad Seleucianum. Hom. 27. ex 50. cap. 2. Hom. 12. in Joan. p. 47. Serm. 3. in Psal. 118. Hom. 26. in Joan. p. 93. But especially his Book de Fide & Operibus. cap. 26. where he distinguishes three sorts of Sins. 1. Such great Sins for which Men did Publick Penance. 2. Such great Sins as deserved to be corrected and punished with severe Reproof, though they did not bring Men under Publick Penance: such as Anger and Evil-speaking. 3. Sins of Human Frailty and Daily Incursion, for which the Daily Prayer was the Daily Medicine. This triple Distinction of Sins is the most exact of any other.

Sins

Sins of Wilfulneſs and Contempt; therefore upon this Account they adviſed, that Men ſhould not only ask Pardon daily for them, and confeſs them with Humiliation, and deplore them with Sorrow; but alſo ſtrive and labour againſt them with Care, and Diligence, and a perpetual Watchfulneſs, and pray againſt them, and yield no Conſent to them, but have their Wills continually bent againſt them, and hunger and thirſt after the Perfection of Righteouſneſs, and deſire to be filled therewith when they came to the Lord's Table. For as Gregory the Great expreſſes it [b], none are filled but thoſe that hunger; who faſt perfectly from Sin, and receive the Holy Sacrament with a Plenitude of Virtue. Therefore ſeeing the beſt of Men cannot be wholly without Sin, what remains, but that they ſhould endeavour daily to evacuate and purge themſelves from thoſe Sins, with which humane Frailty never ceaſes to defile them? For he that does not daily draw off the Dregs of Sin, though they be but little Sins which he amaſſes together, they will by Degrees fill his Soul, and deprive him of the Benefit of internal Satisfaction. In like manner Gennadius [c] perſuades thoſe who are guilty of no groſs Sins, but only of theſe leſſer Sins of Infirmity, to communicate every Lord's Day, or oftner if they pleaſe; only with this Caution, that their Mind be free from all Affection and Love to ſuch Sins. For he that ſtill retains a Willingneſs to commit them, will find himſelf more oppreſſed than purified by receiving the Euchariſt. And therefore let ſuch an one, when he is ſmitten or bitten in Mind for his Sin, cheriſh no Will or Inclination to his Sin for the future; and before he communicates, let him ſatisfy with Prayers and Tears; and ſo confiding in the Mercy of the Lord, who uſes to pardon Sins upon a pious Confeſſion, let him come to the Euchariſt in Security and without doubting. But this I ſpeak only of him who is not preſſed with capital and deadly Sins.

SECT. IV.

What Crimes unqualified Men abſolutely for the Communion, and what ſort of Repentance was required for them.

BUT, ſays he, if any Man is preſſed with the Commiſſion of mortal Sins after Baptiſm, I adviſe ſuch an one to make Satisfaction or Amends by publick Repentance, and to be reconciled to Communion by the Judgment of the Biſhop or Prieſt, if he would not receive the Euchariſt to his own Judgment and Condemnation. This he ſpeaks of ſuch heinous Offences as were direct Violations of the Baptiſmal Covenant, upon the Account of which Men were then by the uſual Diſcipline of the Church debarred from Communion and Prayers, till they had for a long time gone thro' the ſeveral Stages of publick Penance, and given ſuch evident Teſtimonies of their Abhorrence of Sin, and ſincere Converſion, as were requiſite and proper to ſatisfy the Church that they were real and hearty Penitents. In which State of Probation they were held a Year, or two, or three, or five, or ten, or twenty, according to the Nature and Quality of their Offence; and ſometimes all their Lives, if their Crime was extreamly great and ſcandalous, when they were allowed Communion only at the Hour of Death. And during this Courſe of Diſcipline, they were obliged conſtantly to attend the Church, to hear the Scriptures read, and the Sermon preached for their Inſtruction; and to exerciſe themſelves in Prayers, and Confeſſion, and Tears, and Watchings, and Faſtings, and Almſdeeds, and Good-works, and whatever was proper to demonſtrate that they were acting a ſincere Part, and not playing the Hypocrite, in the Buſineſs of Repentance. Then according to their Zeal and Earneſtneſs in ſuch Employments, a Judgment was made upon their Sincerity; and the Time of their Penance was lengthened or ſhortned according to the Meaſures of their Activity, and when they were deemed perfectly to have amended their Lives and become new Men, anſwerable to the Tenour of their firſt Covenant, then they were reconciled and abſolved, and admitted again to the Privilege of the Communion. This was the ſtanding Rule of the Church with reſpect to thoſe who had committed groſs and ſcandalous Crimes, for which they were cut off from the Body as putrified Members, and kept at a Diſtance from the Prayers of the Church, and the Communion of the Faithful at the Lord's Table.

SECT. V.

Scandalous and notorious Sinners not to be admitted to communicate, without giving ſatisfactory Evidences of their Repentance.

I need not ſtand here to enumerate all the particular Crimes that were deemed Breaches of the Baptiſmal Covenant, and unqualified Men for the Communion. Some Account has been given already [*] of them, in ſhewing what Perſons might, or might not make their Oblations at the Altar: For they who might not offer, might much leſs communicate; And this Matter will come to be conſidered more exactly in the next Volume, when we treat of the Diſcipline of the Church. Here I ſhall only obſerve in general, that the Rules of the Church laid an Obligation upon all Miniſters of the Altar, to refuſe the Communion to all ſuch notorious Offenders, as were declared uncapable and unworthy of it by the ſtanding Laws of Communion, then well known to all in the Church: And that an over-haſty Admittance of ſuch Criminals, without ſufficient Time of Probation and ſatisfactory Evidence of their ſincere Converſion, was always reckoned a great Tranſgreſſion and Failure in the Exerciſe of the Miniſterial Function. It will be ſufficient at preſent to give two or three plain Evidences of this out of Chryſoſtom and ſome others. Let no cruel Perſon, ſays Chryſoſtom [d], no unmerciful, no impure Soul, come near this Table. I ſpeak this as well to you that receive the Euchariſt, as to you that miniſter. For it is neceſſary to ſay this to you that miniſter, that ye may diſtribute the Gifts with great Care. There is no ſmall Puniſhment hangs over your Head, if ye give the Euchariſt knowingly to any flagitious Man. His Blood ſhall be required at your Hands. Tho' it be a General, though it be a Conſul, though it be him that wears the Crown, if he comes unworthily, reſtrain him: Thou haſt greater Power than he. But you will ſay, how ſhall I know what ſuch or ſuch an one is? I ſpeak not of thoſe that are unknown, but of thoſe that are known. I will ſay a fearful Word: It is not ſo bad to admit Energumens, or Perſons poſſeſſed with a Devil, to this Holy Place, as thoſe Men, who, as St. Paul ſays, Tread Chriſt under Foot, and count the Blood of the Covenant an unholy Thing, and do deſpight to the Spirit of Grace. Let us not therefore caſt out Demoniacks only, but all ſuch as come unworthily to be Partakers of this Table. It is a remarkable Saying of St. Ambroſe [e] upon this Occaſion: Some Men deſire to be admitted to Penance only for this Reaſon, that they may preſently receive the Communion again: Theſe Men do not ſo much deſire to be abſolved themſelves, as to bind the Prieſt: For they do not put off their own evil Conſcience. Such a raſh Act in a Prieſt, in receiving a notorious Criminal without any clear Evidences and Fruits of Repentance, puts him in the Sinner's Condition, and makes him a Criminal before God for the Abuſe of the Authority committed to him. Therefore as the Novatians were generally condemned for being too rigorous in denying the Communion for ever to all ſuch as fell into great Sins after Baptiſm: So on the other hand the Audian Hereticks are cenſured [f] for being too haſty, in aſſuming Authority to pardon Sins by their own Power, and granting Remiſſion upon a bare Confeſſion, without preſcribing a Time for Repentance, as the Laws of the Church always required. Cyprian gives as ſevere a Reproof to ſuch of the Clergy, as were over-haſty in admitting thoſe that had lapſed into Idolatry in Time of Perſecution, before they had gone through a due Courſe of Penance, and had taken time to bewail and confeſs their Sin, and give ſufficient Evidences of their Repentance. When-as, ſays he [g], Sinners for much leſſer Crimes take a juſt Time to do Penance, and according to the Order of Diſcipline come to Confeſſion, and by Impoſition of Hands given them by the Biſhop and Clergy receive a Right to communicate: Now they are very haſtily and unſeaſonably admitted to Communion, and their Name is offered; and before they have done Penance, before they have made their Confeſſion, before they have received Impoſition of Hands, the Euchariſt is given them, although it be ſaid, That Whoſoever eats the Bread, and drinks the Cup of the Lord unworthily, is guilty of the Body and Blood of the Lord. The Martyrs, who lay in Priſon, were a little concerned in this Irregularity: For they were uſed to interceed for ſuch Criminals, to gain them Admiſſion before their Time: and therefore he wrote another [h] Letter to the Martyrs, to ſhew them the Danger and Inconveniencies of ſuch precipitated communicating of Sinners, and to diſſuade them from ſuch unſeaſonable interpoſing in their Behalf, before they had done their regular Penance. And he alſo wrote a long Diſcourſe to the Lapſers [i] themſelves, wherein he more largely ſets forth the Fallacy that was put upon them by this too indulgent Facility in granting them ſuch a prepoſterous Peace, which did not really give them Peace, but deſtroy it; nor grant them true Communion, but hinder their Salvation. By all which, and Abundance more that might be added upon this Head, it is evident that to reconcile a Sinner to the Altar, after the Commiſſion of any heinous and publick Crimes, they required him to go through a long Courſe of Penance publickly in the Church, in Order to give clear Satisfaction and Demonſtration by manifeſt Works and Fruits of Repentance, that he was a real Convert, and worthy of the Communion which he deſired: And to admit him before, was only to impoſe upon the Sinner, and incur the Diſpleaſure of God by proſtituting his Ordinance, and ſuffering the Vile to tread under Foot the Son of God.

[b] Greg. lib. 2. in Reg. cap. 1. tom. 1. p. 189. Non ſaturantur ergo niſi Famelici, qui à vitiis perfecte jejunantes divina Sacramenta percipiunt in plenitudine virtutis. Et quia ſine peccato Electi etiam viri eſſe non poſſunt, quid reſtat, niſi ut à peccatis quibus eos humana fragilitas maculare non deſinit, evacuare quotidie conentur? &c. Vid. Aug. Tract. 1. in 1 Joan. [c] Gennad. de Eccleſ. Dogm. cap. 53. Quotidie Euchariſtiæ communionem nec laudo nec reprehendo. Omnibus tamen Dominicis diebus communicandum ſuadeo & hortor, ſi tamen mens ſine affectu peccandi ſit.—— Sed hoc de illo dico quem capitalia & mortalia peccata non gravant. &c. [*] Book XV. Chap. ii. n. 2.

But beſide theſe heinous Sins, which put Men under the publick Cenſures of the Church, there were alſo many other Crimes of an heinous Nature, which unqualified Men for worthy receiving, though they did not ordinarily bring them to a State of publick Penance, either becauſe Men could not be ſo directly and formally convicted of them, or becauſe they did not ſeem to carry ſo great Malignity and Contempt of God in them as the former. Among theſe St. Auſtin [k] reckons Anger and Evil-ſpeaking; and others add, raſh Swearing, Breach of Promiſe, Lying, Covetouſneſs, Drunkenneſs, and Sins of the like Nature. Now though theſe did not ordinarily ſubject Men to publick Penance, yet they were confeſſed on all Hands to be grievous and deadly Sins, and ſuch as Men ſhould not preſume to come with, unrepented of, to the Lord's [d] Chryſ. Hom. 83. in Mat. p. 705. Vid. Chryſ. in Pſal. 49. p. 303. [e] Ambroſ. de Pœnit. lib. 2. cap. 9. Nonnulli ideo poſcunt pœnitentiam, ut ſtatim ſibi reddi communionem velint. Hi non tam ſe ſolvere cupiunt, quam ſacerdotem ligare, &c.

[f] Theodor. de Fabulis Hæret. lib. 4. cap. 13. [g] Cypr. Ep. 10. al. 16. ad Cler. p. 37. Cum in minoribus peccatis agant peccatores pœnitentiam juſto tempore, & ſecundum Diſciplinæ ordinem ad exomologeſin veniant, & per manus Impoſitionem Epiſcopi & Cleri jus Communicationis accipiant: nunc crudo tempore—ad Communicationem admittuntur, & offertur nomen eorum, & nondum pœnitentia acta, nondum exomologeſi facta, nondum manu eis ab Epiſcopo & Clero impoſita. Euchariſtia illis datur, &c. [h] Cypr. Ep. 11. al. 15. ad Martyr. p. 34. [i] Id. de Lapſis. p. 128. &c. [k] Aug. de Fide & Operibus. cap. 26.

Table.

Table. And therefore though the Ancients did not forcibly repel ſuch Sinners from communicating, yet they never failed to ſtave them off by Admonitions and Reproofs, declaiming ſharply againſt all ſuch Vices, and ſhewing Men the Danger of them as well as thoſe of the higheſt Nature.

SECT. VI. Whether they required Confeſſion of Private Sins to the Prieſt as a neceſſary Qualification for the Communion.

THIS was their conſtant way of proceeding with great and heinous Sinners, when their Crimes were Publick, Notorious, and Scandalous, in order to qualify them for a worthy Participation of the Euchariſt after any manifeſt Breach or Violation of their Baptiſmal Covenant. As to private Crimes, they laid no Neceſſity upon the Conſcience of Men to make either publick or private Confeſſion of them to any beſide God, to qualify them for the Communion. They ſometimes adviſed Men to publick Confeſſion for private Crimes, and many times Men voluntarily confeſſed their private Crimes, and ſubmitted to do publick Penance for them, as thinking this the ſecureſt Way to obtain perfect Forgiveneſs of God: And in ſome Places a publick Miniſter, called the Penitentiary, was appointed to hear Mens Confeſſions, and direct them in their publick or private Repentance. But as yet no indiſpenſable Obligation was laid upon Men to make Confeſſion of their private Crimes as a neceſſary Condition of Communion: Much leſs did they injoin Men auricular Confeſſion in order to obtain private Abſolution of a Prieſt, and do Penance afterward, without giving at preſent any evident Demonſtrations of Repentance. Their private Confeſſions were all Voluntary, and theſe chiefly in order to publick Penance: But whether for publick or private Penance, the Confeſſion of private Sins was a Matter of Advice and Prudence and free Choice, and not forced upon Men by any Laws of Neceſſity or indiſpenſable Obligation. I ſhall have farther Occaſion to handle this Matter more fully in the next Book about the Diſcipline of the Church: And therefore I will only mention a Paſſage or two here, that relate to Mens Preparation for the Communion. Chryſoſtom explaining thoſe Words of the Apoſtle, Let a Man examine himſelf, and ſo let him eat of that Bread, and drink of that Cup: ſays, He does not [l] bid one Man examine another, but every one himſelf; making the Judgment private, and the Tryal without Witneſſes. And again [m] expounding the very ſame Words, The Apoſtle, ſays he, does not reveal or lay open the Sore, he does not bring the Accuſation upon the open Stage, he does not ſet Witneſſes of thy Crimes againſt thee: But bids thee, within thy own Conſcience, none being preſent but God who knows all Things, to ſet up a Judgment and ſearch after thy Sins; and recounting thy whole Life, to bring thy Sins to the Bar of thy own Mind; to reform thy Exceſſes, and ſo with a pure Conſcience to come to the ſacred Table, and partake of the Holy Sacrifice. And it is remarkable, that under Nectarius, St. Chryſoſtom's Predeceſſor, a Law was made (upon Occaſion of a Scandal that was given by the Confeſſion of a Gentlewoman, defiled by a Deacon at Conſtantinople) that the Office of the Penitentiary Prieſt, which had been for ſome Time in that Church, ſhould be laid aſide; and that Liberty ſhould be given to every one, upon the private Examination of his own Conſcience, to partake of the Holy Myſteries. Which evidently ſhews, that they did not then believe there was any Divine Law for the Neceſſity of Auricular Confeſſion, but that it was a Matter of Liberty and Prudence only. Socrates, who relates [n] the whole Story, ſays, he had it from the Mouth of Eudæmon the Presbyter, who gave Nectarius this Advice; and Sozomen [o] adds, that the Biſhops of moſt other Churches followed Nectarius his Example. In the Latin Church, it appears alſo from Gennadius [p], that the general Rule for great Crimes of a publick Nature was, to do publick Penance in the Church: But for private Crimes no other was neceſſarily required but private Satisfaction by a Change of Life from ſecular to religious, by continual Mourning to implore God's Mercy, by doing Things contrary to thoſe whereof the Sinner repents, and by receiving the Euchariſt every Lord's Day to the End of his Life. And Laurentius Biſhop of Novaria [q] ſpeaking of Repentance, ſays, After Baptiſm God hath appointed thee a Remedy within thy ſelf, he hath put Remiſſion in thy own Power, that thou needeſt not to ſeek a Prieſt when Neceſſity requires; but thou thy ſelf now, as a skilful Maſter always at hand, mayſt correct thy own Error within thy ſelf, and waſh away thy Sin by Repentance. It were eaſy to add Abundance more Teſtimonies both out of the Greek and Latin Writers, but theſe are ſufficient at preſent to ſhew that they did not require private Confeſſion, as any neceſſary Part of that Preparation which Men were obliged to make for the purging of private Sins before they came to the Lord's Table: But their Direction was the Apoſtle's Rule, Let a Man examine himſelf, and ſo let him eat of that Bread and drink of that Cup.

SECT. VII. That Preparation conſiſts not in com-

YET they did not hereby diſcharge Men of all Obligation to cleanſe themſelves from Sin, but [l] Chryſ. Hom. 28. in 1 Cor. p. 569. [m] Chryſ. Hom. 8. de Pœnitent. t. 1. p. 700. [n] Socrat. lib. 5. cap. 19. [o] Sozom. lib. 7. cap. 16. [p] Gennad. de Dogmat. Eccleſ. cap. 53. Sed & ſecreta ſatisfactione ſolvi mortalia crimina non negamus, ſed mutato prius ſeculari habitu, & confeſſo Religionis ſtudio per vitæ correctionem, & jugi, imo perpetuo luctu miſerante Deo ita duntaxat, ut contraria pro iis quæ pœnitet agat, & Euchariſtiam omnibus Dominicis diebus ſupplex ſubmiſſuſque uſque ad mortem ſuſcipiat. [q] Laurent. Hom. 1. de Pœnit. Bibl. Patr. tom. 2. p. 129. Poſt baptiſma remedium tuum in teipſo ſtatuit, remiſſionem in arbitrio tuo poſuit, ut non quæras ſacerdotem, cum neceſſitas flagitaverit: Sed ipſe jam, ac ſi ſcitus perſpicuuſque Magiſter, errorem tuum intra te emendes, & peccatum tuum pœnitudine abluas.

ing to Communion at certain holy Seasons, but in Sanctity and Purity at all Times.

carefully preſſed upon the Conſcience the Neceſſity of univerſal Purity when they came to Feaſt upon the Body and Blood of Chriſt, at his Table. Let a Man examine himſelf: For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, is guilty of the Body and Blood of the Lord, and eateth and drinketh Damnation to himſelf, not diſcerning the Lord's Body. There were ſome ſo vain as to think, that a formal Appearing at the Lord's Table at ſome certain holy and ſolemn Seaſons was all the Preparation that was needful: As if the Circumſtance of Time added any real Qualification to their Souls. Againſt theſe Mens Extravagance, St. Chryſoſtom inveighs with the greateſt Sharpneſs: I obſerve many, ſays he, who are Partakers [r] of the Lord's Body inconſiderately and at all Adventures, more out of Cuſtom than by any Rule, or Reaſon, and Underſtanding. If the holy Time of Lent comes, or the Day of Chriſt's Epiphany, or Nativity, then they partake of the Holy Myſteries, whatever Condition they are in. But Epiphany is not the Time of Approaching: Neither does Lent make Men worthy to come, but the Sincerity and Purity of their Souls. With this come at all Times; without it come never. Conſider thoſe who were Partakers of the Sacrifices under the old Law; What Abſtinence did they uſe? What did they not do? What did they not perform, to purify themſelves in every Reſpect? And doſt thou, when thou comeſt to the Sacrifice, at which the Angels are even amazed and tremble, meaſure the Buſineſs by the Revolution and Periods of certain Times and Seaſons? How wilt thou ſtand before the Tribunal of Chriſt, who dareſt to touch his Body with polluted Hands and Lips? Thou wouldſt not preſume to kiſs the King with a ſtinking Mouth: And doſt thou kiſs the King of Heaven with a ſtinking Soul? That is the higheſt Affront that can really be offered to him. Tell me, wouldſt thou chuſe to come to the Sacrifice with unwaſhen Hands? I ſuppoſe not, but wouldſt rather not come at all, than with unclean Hands. Since therefore thou art ſo ſcrupulous and religious in a ſmall Matter, how dareſt thou to come and touch the Sacrifice with a polluted Soul? When-as thy Hands only hold it for a time, but thy Soul has it wholly diſſolved into it. At other times ye come not to it, tho' ye be clean; but at Eaſter ye come, although ye be defiled with Sin. Oh Cuſtom! Oh Prejudice! Thus St. Chryſoſtom reproves thoſe who contented themſelves with an outſide, formal Preparation, to comply with the general Cuſtom of receiving at ſome of the holy Feſtivals; which was a mere corporeal Purification, like the Phariſaical Righteouſneſs: For they made clean the outſide of the Cup and Platter, whilſt their inward Part was full of Corruption and all Uncleanneſs. In another Place [s] he thus oppoſes this fantaſtical Preparation, and deſcribes the true Preparation of the Soul by the Purity of a Man's Conſcience and a ſanctified Life. Many Chriſtians now-a-days, ſays he, are ſunk into ſo great Stupidity and Contempt, that though they be laden with Sins, and take no manner of Care of themſelves, yet they come to the Holy Table at the ſolemn Feſtivals Hand over Head, and juſt as mere Chance directs them: Not conſidering, that what makes it ſeaſonable to communicate, is not merely a Feſtival, or the Time of a more ſolemn Aſſembly, but a pure Conſcience, and a Life free from Sin. For as he, who is conſcious to himſelf of no enormous Crime, ought to come every Day; ſo on the other Hand, he who is fettered in Sins, and does not repent, cannot ſafely come upon a Feſtival. For it is not our coming once a Year that diſcharges us of our Sins, if we come unworthily: But this very thing rather increaſes our Condemnation, that though we come but once a Year, yet we come not even then with a pure Conſcience. Wherefore I exhort you all, not to come to the Holy Myſteries barely upon the Account of a Feſtival; but whenever ye deſign to partake of this Holy Sacrifice, to purge your ſelves many Days before by Repentance, and Prayer, and Alms, and Attendance upon ſpiritual Things; and not to return again like the Dog to his Vomit. Is it not abſurd to ſpend ſo much Care upon corporeal Things, as that when a Feſtival approaches, you will bring forth your beſt Clothes out of your Wardrobe, and make them ready many Days before, and buy you Shoes, and prepare a more ſplendid Table, and think of many Ways to deck and adorn yourſelf; But in the mean time have no Regard to your Soul, which lies neglected in Filth and Naſtineſs, and ready to periſh with Famine, and over-run with Impurity? How abſurd is it to preſent the Body here finely adorned, but your Soul naked and vilely clothed? When yet none ſees your Body but your Fellow-Servants; but your Soul is nicely viewed by the Lord, who will alſo ſeverely puniſh your Neglect of it. Know you not, that this Table is filled with ſpiritual Fire, and ſends forth ſecret Flames, as Fountains do their Water in Abundance? Bring not therefore hither Wood, Hay, Stubble, leſt you increaſe the Flame, and burn your Soul by ſuch a Participation: But bring hither Gold, Silver, precious Stones, that ye may make thoſe Materials ſtill more pure, and go hence with greater Gain and Advantage. If any Evil remains in your Soul, chaſe and drive it thence. Has any one an Enemy, from whom he has ſuffered great Injuries and Injuſtice? Let him diſſolve his Enmity, and reſtrain his flaming, ſwelling Mind, that there be no Tumult or Perturbation within. For thou art now about to receive a King by Communion: And when a King enters into thy Soul, there ought to be a perfect Calm, Tranquility, and Silence, and a profound Peace in thy Thoughts. But thou haſt been exceedingly injured, and canſt not [r] Chryſ. Hom. 3. in Epheſ. p. 1050. Paſcha jejunant. t. 1. p. 710.

[s] Chryſ. Hom. 31. de Philogonio. t. 1. p. 402. Vid. Hom. 52. in eos qui bear

bear to moderate thy Anger againſt him. What then? Wilt thou therefore more grievouſly injure thy ſelf? For thy Enemy, whatever he does, cannot do thee ſo much Harm, as thou doſt to thy ſelf, if thou art not reconciled to him, but trampleſt on the Laws of God. He has injured and affronted thee, and wilt thou injure and affront God? For not to receive an Enemy to Pardon and Favour, is not ſo much to take Revenge on him, as to affront God, who has given us this Law of Reconciliation. Therefore look not to thy Fellow-Servant, nor to the Greatneſs of the Injuries that he hath done thee; but look unto God, and putting his Fear into thy Mind, conſider this, that the greater Violence thou offereſt to thy Soul, by compelling it to be reconciled after ſuffering a thouſand Indignities, ſo much the greater Honour ſhalt thou obtain from him who prohibits thee Revenge. And as thou receiveſt God with great Honour here, he will receive thee with great Glory hereafter, and recompence thee a thouſand-fold for this Obedience. Thus did this holy Man explain in general the due Manner and Method of Preparing to receive the Euchariſt, and with the ſtrongeſt Arguments of Piety, and the utmoſt Force of Eloquence and Reaſon endeavour to perſuade his Hearers to the Practice of it.

SECT. VIII. What Faith is required in Communicants.

I have not room to tranſcribe all that this Author [t] and the reſt have ſaid farther in the general Exhortations to make a due Preparation for the Communion: Much leſs will it conſiſt with the Deſign of this Work to deſcend to all the particular Caſes and Queſtions that might be moved about it, the handling of which would eaſily ſwell into a Volume: And the Reader may find it already done in a great meaſure by our learned Biſhop Taylor in his Worthy Communicant, where he ſtates all the Duties required in order to a worthy Participation, together with the Caſes of Conſcience occurring in the Duty of him that miniſters, and in the Duty of him that communicates, out of the antient Writers. I ſhall content my ſelf to ſuggeſt a few Things relating to theſe Particulars, which are: 1. Faith. 2. Repentance and Obedience. 3. Juſtice. 4. Peace and Unity. 5. Charity and Beneficence. 6. Pardoning of Offences. 7. Laſtly, Mens Behaviour at the time of Communicating and afterwards, which I ſhall chiefly repreſent in the Words of St. Chryſoſtom, who has ſpoken ſo largely upon this Subject. And firſt with reſpect to Faith, they required in every Communicant, that was of Years of Diſcretion, not only an Orthodox Profeſſion of the ſeveral Articles of the Chriſtian Faith in general, but alſo a particular Faith with relation to the Myſtical Eating and Drinking of Chriſt's Body and Blood in the Holy Sacrament. The former is evident from that uſual Form of Words in the Deacon's Admonition to all that had not a Right to communicate, to withdraw; among whom all Heterodox or Heretical Perſons were admoniſhed to be gone: μή τις τῶν ἑτεροδόξων, Let no Heterodox Perſon be preſent. And in regard to this St. Chryſoſtom [u], or whoever was the Author of the Sermon of Binding and Looſing Sin, ſpeaking of Mens private Examination of themſelves, ſays, God hath given thee the Power of Binding and Looſing. Thou haſt bound thy ſelf with the Chain of Covetouſneſs; Looſe thy ſelf with the Injunction of the Love of Poverty. Thou haſt bound thy ſelf with the furious Deſire of Pleaſure; Looſe thy ſelf by Temperance. Thou haſt bound thy ſelf with the Heterodox Belief of Eunomius; Looſe thy ſelf with the religious embracing of the Orthodox Faith. But they did not only require an Orthodox Faith in general, but a particular Faith with reſpect to the Sacrament it ſelf, teaching Men, not the monſtrous Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, but that under the viſible Elements of Bread and Wine, ſanctified by the Spirit, the worthy Communicant by Faith might receive the ſpiritual Food of Chriſt's Body and Blood, and all the bleſſed Effects and Benefits of his Death and Paſſion. To this Purpoſe, they required Men to come with the Mouth of Faith, ſpiritually to eat Chriſt's Fleſh and Blood; and to ſee him ſacrificed with the Eyes of their Mind, whilſt his real bloody Sacrifice once offered was daily repreſented and commemorated in the viſible Images and Symbols of Bread and Wine. St. Auſtin is very copious in ſetting forth this neceſſary Doctrine of ſpiritual Manducation by Faith, as that which makes both Senſe and Piety of ſo many Expreſſions in the Goſpel, which otherwiſe would ſeem horrible and abſurd. Explaining thoſe Words of our Saviour, Except ye eat the Fleſh of the Son of Man, and drink his Blood, ye have no Life in you, he ſays [x], This ſeems to command a Crime. Therefore it is a figurative Speech, commanding us to communicate in the Paſſion of our Lord, and with Pleaſure and Profit to lay it up in our Minds, that his Fleſh was crucified and wounded for our Tranſgreſſions. So again [y] he brings in our Saviour telling his Diſciples, "Ye are not to eat this "Body which ye ſee, and drink that Blood "which my Crucifiers ſhall ſhed. But I have "commended to you a certain Sacrament, which "being ſpiritually underſtood will quicken you; "and though it be celebrated viſibly, it is inviſibly or ſpiritually to be underſtood." Meaning this Faith, with which the Body of Chriſt was to be received, to make it ſpiritually and really the true Body, and Life to the Receiver.

[t] Vid. Chryſ. in Pſal. 133. p. 488. Hom. 27. in 1 Cor. p. 536. Hom. 17. in Hebr. p. 1872. [u] Chryſ. Hom. in illud Quodcunque ligaveris, t. 7. Edit. Savil. p. 268. [x] Aug. de Doctrina Chriſt. lib. 3. cap. 10. Facinus vel flagitium videtur jubere. Figura ergo eſſe, præcipiens Paſſioni Domini eſt communicandum ... Suaviterque utiliter in Memoria recondendum quod Caro ejus pro nobis crucifixa & vulnerata eſt, [y] Aug. in Pſal. 98. t. 8. p. 452. Non hoc corpus quod videtis, manducaturi eſtis; & bibituri illum ſanguinem, quod fuſuri ſunt qui me crucifigent. Sacramentum aliquod vobis commendavi; ſpiritaliter intellectum vivificabit vos, & ſi neceſſe eſt illud viſibiliter celebrari, oportet tamen inviſibiliter intelligi.

For

For the true Body of Christ could no other ways be eaten but spiritually by Faith [z], whilst it was really absent in Heaven. The Hand could not reach that Body, nor the Teeth consume it; but Faith [a] could ascend up to Heaven, and there touch the Body of Christ; and with the Heart it might be eaten, though not with the Teeth and oral Manducation. This is therefore that special Faith which the Ancients so often require in every pious Communicant, to qualify him to eat the Flesh of Christ to Life and Salvation; a Faith whereby in Heart he ascends to Heaven, (according to the usual Phrase of the Church in her Sacramental Prayers, Sursum Corda, Lift up your Hearts; We lift them up unto the Lord;) and whereby he receives the real Body of Christ by spiritual Eating, which no wicked Man can receive, though he receive the Sacrament of his Body both in his Hand and Mouth to his Condemnation. Therefore St. Austin bids all Communicants prepare [b] their Heart, and not their Mouths, to eat the Bread of Life, which came down from Heaven. And St. Chrysostom [c] calls upon them to imitate Eagles, and fly up to Heaven. For where the Carcass is, there will the Eagles be gathered together, says our Saviour, calling his Body the Carcass because of Death. For if he had not fallen, we had not risen. But he calls us Eagles, shewing, that he that comes to this Body, ought to soar aloft, and have nothing to do with the Earth, nor move downward and creep upon the Ground, but always to fly upward, and look to the Sun of Righteousness, and have the Eyes of his Mind quick-sighted. For this Table is the Table of Eagles, not of Jack-Daws. And they who thus worthily receive him, may expect to meet him when he shall come down again from Heaven.

SECT. IX.

What Purity of Soul by Repentance and Obedience. How far Fasting useful or necessary to this Purpose.

2. BUT St. Chrysostom [d] observes, that to come unto Christ by Faith, is not barely to receive him in the outward Element, but to touch him with a pure Heart. And therefore he discourses excellently upon this most necessary part of Preparation, to some who put great Confidence in their Observation of the Lent-Fast, as if that were a just Preparation for the Communion. Let us give up our selves, says he, to the Practice of Virtue. For at this End [e] aims all our Fasting, and Lent, and religious Assemblies so many Days together, and our Hearing, and Prayers, and Preaching; that by these Exercises we may wash away the Guilt and Stain of whatever Sins we have any ways contracted during the whole Year, and so come with Piety and spiritual Assurance to partake of that Unbloody Sacrifice. But if we do not thus purify our selves, all that other Labour is in vain and to no Purpose, we reap not the least Advantage from it. Let every one therefore consider with himself, and examine in his Account, what Defect he has amended, what Virtue he has acquired, what Vice he has washed away, in what Part he is grown better: And if he finds any considerable Advantage of this Kind arise from his Fasting, and that many of his Wounds have been cured by it, let him come: But if he has been negligent, and has nothing to shew but his Fasting, without any other Goodness or Amendment, let him keep off and abide without, and then come when he has purged himself from all his Sins. Let no Man place his Confidence in Fasting only, who adheres to his Sins without Amendment. For 'tis possible a Man that does not fast, may obtain Pardon, having the Excuse of bodily Infirmity: But he that does not correct his Faults, cannot possibly have any Excuse. Thou hast omitted to fast, by reason of the Infirmity of thy Flesh: But why hast thou not been reconciled to thy Enemies? Canst thou here pretend bodily Infirmity also? Thou still retainest Hatred and Envy: What Excuse, I pray, canst thou plead for these? There is no flying for Refuge to bodily Infirmity in Behalf of such Sins as these. Thus Chrysostom shews the Necessity of correcting every evil Way, in Thought, Word and Deed, in order to prepare Men for a worthy Reception at God's Table; and that no Pretences of other Qualifications without Holiness, nor any Excuses for Sin will be accepted, whilst Christ has made his Commandments very practicable, and recommended his Yoke as easy, and his Burden as Light.

SECT. X.

How necessary Justice and Restitution to a worthy Communicant.

3. AND because there are some great Sins, to which Men have a more than ordinary Propensity and Affection, and are ready to find out a thousand Arts to palliate and retain them with a Semblance of Piety and pretended Devotion: The same Author is always very careful to particularize about these in Mens Preparation, pulling off the Vizard and false Colours they were apt to lay upon them. Thus in the Case of Injustice, many were inclined to impose upon themselves by that old Pharisaical Pretence of giving something to the Corban, to make a full Atonement, as they thought, for their manifold Rapines and Oppression. Whom he thus reproves, and lays open their Folly. Let no Judas, no Simon Magus come near this Table [f]: For they both perished in their Avarice and Love of Money. Wherefore let us fly from this Pit, and not imagine it sufficient for our Salvation, that when we have ſpoiled Widows and Orphans, we offer a Golden Cup adorned with Jewels to this Table. Wouldſt thou honour this Sacrifice? Offer thy Soul, for which Chriſt was offered, and make it a Golden Soul. But if thy Soul remain worſe than Lead or Earth, what will thy Golden Veſſels profit thee? Let us not therefore labour to offer Golden Veſſels only, but offer what we acquire by our juſt and honeſt Labour. For theſe are more precious than Gold, which are not the Fruits of Covetouſneſs and Injuſtice. The Church is not the Work-houſe of Silver and Gold, but the Congregation of Angels. Therefore the Purity of our Souls is required: For God receives theſe Things upon the Account of our Souls. Doubtleſs that Table was not of Silver, nor that Cup of Gold, wherein Chriſt gave his Blood to his Diſciples: Yet all was precious and full of Reverence, becauſe they were filled with the Spirit. St. Chryſoſtom ſpeaks this to Mens own Conſciences in private, who knew their own Extortions, when perhaps the Church knew nothing of them; and he lays upon them the Neceſſity of Juſtice and Reſtitution in their private Accounts with God, before they could hope to gain his Favour, or be accepted at his Altar. For as to publick Offences of this kind, we have noted before [*], That when they were ſuch as the Church could take Cognizance of, they fell under her publick Diſcipline: And it was a ſtanding Law, that the Oblations of known Oppreſſors ſhould not be received; much leſs their Perſons to the Communion of the Altar.

[z] Id. Ser. 2. de Verb. Apost. t. 10. p. 94. Manduca vitam, bibe vitam. Tunc autem hoc erit, id est, vita unicuique erit Corpus & Sanguis, si quod in Sacramento visibiliter sumitur, in ipsa veritate spiritaliter manducetur, spiritaliter bibatur. It. Tract. 26. in Joan. t. 9. p. 94. Qui manducat intus, non qui manducat foris; qui manducat in corde, non qui premit dente. [a] Aug. Tract. 1. in 1 Joan. p. 236. Ipsum jam in cœlo sedentem manu contrectare non possumus, sed Fide contingere. [b] Aug. Ser. 33. de Verb. Dom. p. 40. Nolite parare fauces, sed Cor. &c. [c] Chrys. Hom. 24. in 1 Cor. p. 536. Vid. Hom. 14. in Ephes. p. 1127. [d] Chrys. Hom. 51. in Mat. p. 454. [e] Chrys. Hom. 22. de Simultate. t. 1. [f] Chrys. Hom. 51. in Mat. p. 445. It. Hom. 86. p. 722. cited before, Chap. ii. n. 2.

ent

SECT. XI. The Neceſſity of Peace and Unity.

4. ANOTHER Thing they much inſiſted on, was Unity and a peaceable Spirit: By which they chiefly intended that ſort of Peaceableneſs, which preſerves the Unity of the Church, not only in Oppoſition to formed and profeſſed Schiſms, but all Factions and Diviſions within the Boſom of the Church. As to formal and profeſt Schiſmaticks, they were Objects of the publick Diſcipline, and not to be admitted to Communion without publick Recantation and formal renouncing of their Errors. But beſides theſe there were another ſort of turbulent Spirits, who without breaking forth into profeſt Separations, were often the Occaſion of great Tumults and Diſquiet in the Church. Such were thoſe Corinthians, whom the Apoſtle ſo often rebukes for their factious Zeal and unneceſſary Diſputations and Contentions one with another; which proceeded from many evil Cauſes, and were attended with as bad Effects. For they ſprung from the bitter Roots of Envy and Pride and Ambition, and Covetouſneſs and Self-intereſt, and Self-love, and a blind, or elſe crafty and deſigning Admiration of one Teacher above another. For one ſaid, I am of Paul; and another, I of Apollos; I of Cephas; and I of Chriſt. And the Effects were Debates, Envyings, Wraths, Strifes, Backbitings, Whiſperings, Swellings, Tumults. Inſomuch that in their Sidings and Partyings, they came to expreſs a Diſdain and Contempt of one another in that, which ſhould have taught them the quite contrary Leſſon, the Celebration of the Lord's Supper and their Feaſts of Charity. For in eating, every one took before others his own Supper: And one was hungry, and another was drunken. Upon which the Apoſtle gave them that moſt ſolemn Admonition, 1 Cor. xi. 28. Let a Man examine himſelf, and ſo let him eat of that Bread, and drink of that Cup. For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh Damnation to himſelf, not Diſcerning the Lord's Body. It was not long after St. Paul's Death, that Clemens Biſhop of Rome had Occaſion to write a long Epiſtle to theſe Corinthians upon the very ſame Subject of their ſeditious Factions and Diviſions, where among many other Arguments to perſuade them to Unity and Peace, he bids them [g] beware, that the manifold Bleſſings of God did not turn to their Condemnation, if they walked unworthy of him, and neglected to do what was good and pleaſing in his Sight with Unanimity and Concord. Therefore he bids [h] them, quickly remove this Evil, and fall down before the Lord, and weep and pray to him, that he would be merciful and reconciled to them, and reduce and reſtore them to the pure and comely Way of Brotherly Love. For this is the Gate of Righteouſneſs which opens unto Life. Charity unites us [i] unto God; Charity covers a multitude of Sins; Charity beareth all Things: Charity has nothing of Pride or Baſeneſs in it; Charity has no Schiſm; Charity raiſes no Sedition; Charity does all Things in Concord. By Charity all the Elect of God are made perfect; without Charity nothing is acceptable unto God. Therefore he adviſes the Ring-leaders of the Sedition and the Heads of Faction to be ſubject to their Rulers, and repent, and to lay aſide all arrogant [k] and proud Boaſting of the Tongue; ſince it was better to be found little and approved in the Fold of Chriſt, than to be high-minded and rejected from the Hope of his Kingdom. He bids them ſacrifice their own Intereſt to the Peace of the Church. Who among you is of a noble and generous Temper? Who [l] has any Bowels of Compaſſion? Who is filled with Charity? Let him ſay: If upon my Account there be Sedition, and Diſcord, and Schiſm; I will willingly depart, and go away whitherſoever you pleaſe; I will do what the People command me; only let the Fold of Chriſt be in Peace under the Elders that are ſet over them. He that does this, ſhall purchaſe to himſelf great Honour in the Lord, and every Place will receive him. For the Earth is the Lord's, and the Fulneſs thereof. Thus did that holy Man exhort the ſeditious Corinthians to lay aſide their factious and turbulent Spirit, and betake themſelves to the Ways of Unity and Peace, as ever they hoped to find Mercy and Fa-

[*] Book XV. Chap. ii. n. 2.
[g] Clem. Rom. Ep. 1. ad Cor. n. 21.
[h] Ibid. n. 48.
[i] Ibid. n. 49.
[k] Ibid. n. 57.
[l] Ibid. n. 54.

vour

vour at the Hands of the Lord. And the Ancients generally uſe this Argument againſt uncharitable Strife and Contention, and Schiſm and Diviſion, that they are Crimes of that Magnitude, that without Repentance even the Blood of Martyrdom will not waſh away and blot out the Stain and Guilt of them. Which is a noted Saying of Cyprian's [m], repeated and approved by Chryſoſtom [n], St. Auſtin [o], Fulgentius [p] and many others.

SECT. XII. Of Charity and Mercy to the Poor.

5. ANOTHER Thing they much recommended as a neceſſary Qualification in a worthy Communicant, was the Exerciſe of Beneficence and Charity to the Indigent, eſpecially to the poor Members of Chriſt. For when they themſelves were about to receive the greateſt Bleſſings in the World, they thought it but reaſonable that they ſhould ſhew Kindneſs, according to their Ability, to his and their Brethren. This was the Foundation of their Oblations and Love-Feaſts mentioned before; and the Neglect, or Abuſe, or Partiality uſed in them, was always reputed a capital Miſdemeanor. But this was not all: They not only required Men to be charitable in the Act of Communicating, but at all Times; and allowed not the moſt plauſible Pretences that could be offered to the contrary. Some apologized for their Uncharitableneſs, as they did for their Injuſtice; they wiped their Mouths, and cried out Corban, It is a Gift to Chriſt, wherewith thou mighteſt be profited by me: And ſo they thought themſelves diſcharged by Commutation: They gave to God's Uſe ſome Gift which he required not, and let the Poor periſh, whom he had commanded them to ſuſtain. To theſe St. Chryſoſtom [q] thus elegantly diſcourſes. Would you honour the Body of Chriſt? Do not then deſpiſe him when he is naked. Do not honour him here in the Church with Veſtments of Silk, and neglect him without Doors, when ready to periſh with Cold and Nakedneſs. For he that ſaid, This is my Body, and confirmed the Thing with his Word, ſaid alſo, Ye ſaw me an hungred, and fed me not: And, for as much as ye did it not to one of the leaſt of theſe, ye did it not unto me. For this Body of Chriſt (the Euchariſt) needs no Clothing, but a pure Mind: But that other Body of his needs much of our Care. Therefore let us learn to be wiſe, and honour Chriſt according to his own Will. Give him that Honour which he has commanded; diſtribute your Riches among the Poor. God has no need of golden Veſſels, but of golden Souls. I ſay not this, to forbid any Man to offer ſuch Gifts; but becauſe I judge it proper, together with theſe, and before theſe, to do Works of Charity. For God indeed receives theſe, but the other are much more acceptable to him. Veſſels only profit him that offers them, but Works of Charity profit both the Giver and Receiver. The one is often an Occaſion of Oſtentation, but the other is all Humanity and Mercy. What Profit is it to Chriſt, that his Table is filled with golden Cups, whilſt he himſelf is famiſhed by Want? Therefore firſt feed him when he is hungry, and then of your Superfluity and Abundance adorn his Table. You make him a golden Cup, but will not give him a Cup of cold Water. What does this profit him? You prepare Coverings for his Table embroidered with Gold; but he himſelf is naked, and you cover him not with neceſſary Clothing. What Advantage is there in all this? Tell me, I pray: Suppoſe you ſhould ſee a Man want neceſſary Food, and you inſtead of relieving his Hunger, ſhould only adorn his Table with Gold: Would he take this as any Kindneſs, and not rather look upon it with Indignation? Or, if you ſaw a Man cloathed in Rags, and frozen with Cold, and you inſtead of giving him Raiment, ſhould erect golden Pillars, and ſay, you did it for his Honour: Would he not rather ſay you mocked him, and think you put the greateſt Affront imaginable upon him? You may apprehend the Caſe to be the very ſame with Chriſt: When he wanders about as a Stranger, having no Houſe to cover his Head, then thou neglecteſt to take him in; thou contemneſt his Perſon, but beautifieſt his Pavement and his Walls, and the Heads of his Pillars: Thou makeſt his Lamps to hang on Silver Chains, but wilt not vouchſafe to viſit him when he is chained in Priſon. I ſpeak not this to prohibit thee from doing theſe Things, but to excite thee to do the other together with them, or rather before them. For no Man was ever condemned for not building magnificent Temples, but for neglecting the Poor Hell is threatned, and the Fire that ſhall never be quenched, and Puniſhment with Devils. Whilſt therefore you adorn God's Houſe, do not neglect your afflicted Brother. For he is more properly the Temple of God than the other. For thoſe may be plundered of all their Treaſure by Infidel Kings, and Tyrants, and Thieves: But what thou doſt to a Brother that is hungry, or a Stranger, or naked, the Devil himſelf cannot rob thee of, but it is laid up in a ſafe Repoſitory, where no Violence can make a Prey of it. It were eaſy to give the Reader many other ſuch affecting Paſſages out of Chryſoſtom [r] and others, but this one is ſufficient to ſhew what Streſs they laid upon Charity or Beneficence to the Poor, in order to qualify Men for a worthy Reception of the Holy Communion.

SECT. XIII. Of Charity in Forgiving Enemies, and Pardoning Offences.

6. BUT this was not the only kind of Charity they required to be exerciſed upon this Occaſion: There was another more difficult to be practiſed, and yet no leſs neceſſary to be performed by all that would lay any

[m] Cypr. de Unit. Eccleſ. p. 113. [n] Chryſ. Hom. 11. in Epheſ. p. 1107. [o] Aug. de Bapt. cont. Donat. lib. 4. cap. 17. [p] Fulgent. de Fide ad Petrum. cap. 39. [q] Chryſ. Hom. 51. in Mat. p. 455. [r] Vid. Chryſ. Hom. 1. in 1. Tim. p. 1631. Hom. 9. de Pœnitent. t. 1 p. 704. Hom. 25. t. 5. p. 369.

any juſt Claim to the Mercy of God in the Sacrifice of Chriſt's Body and Blood: And that was the Duty of Pardoning and Forgiving Enemies, without which it was abſurd and impudent to preſume to ask God Pardon at the Holy Table. Therefore St. Chryſoſtom [s] explaining thoſe Words of our Saviour, Matth. v. If thou bring thy Gift to the Altar, and there remembreſt that thy Brother hath ought againſt thee; leave there thy Gift before the Altar, and go thy way, firſt be reconciled to thy Brother, and then come and offer thy Gift: ſays, By all this Chriſt intended to ſignify, that the Holy Table would not receive Men that were at Enmity with one another: No, nor yet could they ſo much as offer their Prayers acceptably to God. Therefore hear this, ſays he, all ye that are initiated in the Holy Myſteries, and come not in Enmity to the Communion of the Altar. Let them alſo hear it, who are not yet initiated. For they have a common Concern in theſe Words alſo. For they offer likewiſe their Gifts and their Sacrifice, I mean their Prayers and their Alms; which the Pſalmiſt often calls Sacrifice: The Sacrifice of Praiſe ſhall honour me: And, Offer unto God the Sacrifice of Praiſe: And, Let the lifting up of my Hands be an Evening Sacrifice. Whence he concludes, That if a Man come to pray with ſuch a Mind, he had better leave his Prayers, and go firſt and be reconciled to his Brother, and then come and offer his Prayers. It is uſual with Chryſoſtom upon this account to tell his Hearers, that they [t] who are unqualified for the Communion, are unqualified for their Prayers likewiſe: Becauſe they in effect pray to God to curſe themſelves, whilſt they pray for Forgiveneſs of Sins only in the ſame manuer as they forgive their Enemies. If we have Deſigns of Revenge in our Hearts, ſays he [u], when we pray, we pray againſt our ſelves, ſaying, Forgive us our Treſpaſſes, as we forgive them that treſpaſs againſt us. Theſe are terrible Words, and the ſame as if one ſaid to God: "Lord, I have "forgiven my Enemy, forgive Thou me: I "have looſed him, looſe Thou me: I have par- "doned my Enemy, pardon me: If I have re- "tained his Sins, retain thou mine: If I have "not looſed my Neighbour, do not thou looſe "my Offences: What Meaſure I have meted to "him, meaſure thou to me again." It was with this Argument that he induced the People to ſhew Mercy to their great Enemy Eutropius, when he was fled for Sanctuary to the Altar. How will you be able to take the Holy Sacrament into your Hands, and uſe the Words of that Prayer, wherein we are commanded to ſay, Forgive us our Treſpaſſes, as we forgive them that treſpaſs againſt us, if you exact Puniſhment of your Debtor? In another Place [x] he tells them if they forgave their Enemies, they might then come with a pure Conſcience to the Holy and Tremendous Table, and boldly ſay the Words contained in that Prayer, Forgive us, as we forgive. But if they retained Anger or Malice in their Hearts [y], they were no fitter to partake of that Holy Table than Fornicators, or Adulterers, or Blaſphemers. For how canſt thou deſire God to be gracious and merciful to thee, who art ſo implacable and inexorable to thy Fellow-Servant? Admit he has injured and affronted thee. Haſt thou not often injured and affronted God? And what Compariſon is there betwixt the Lord and a Servant? It may be alſo thy Fellow-Servant was firſt injured by thee, and only returned the Complement, and payed thee in thy own kind, and thou art incenſed at that: But thou, without any Injury or Provocation received from God, treateſt him contumelioufly; nay, not only when He does thee no Harm, but when He daily loads thee with Bleſſings, and continually pours forth his Benefits upon thee. He adds [z], that this Sin of Malice and Revenge was the more dangerous and inexcuſable, becauſe it had none of the little Pleas which were commonly urged in the Behalf of other Sins, to be offered in its Favour. If I bid you faſt, you plead the Excuſe of bodily Infirmity; if I bid you give to the Poor, you plead Poverty your ſelf, and the Care of your own Children: If I call upon you to attend divine Worſhip, you pretend the Avocations of worldly Care and ſecular Buſineſs; If I bid you hear Sermons, and conſider the Power of the Doctrine contained in them, you plead Diſability and want of Learning to underſtand them; If I adviſe you to admoniſh and correct your Brother, you tell me, he will not hearken to your Counſel; you have admoniſhed him, and he deſpiſes you. Theſe are but cold Excuſes, yet they are Excuſes in ſome ſort. But if I bid you lay aſide your Anger, which of theſe Excuſes can you make? You cannot plead bodily Infirmity, nor Poverty, nor Want of Underſtanding, nor Want of Time and Leiſure from worldly Buſineſs, nor any other ſuch Excuſe: Therefore this of all others is a moſt unpardonable Sin. How then will you hold up your Hands to Heaven, or move your Tongue, or ask Pardon of your Sins, when if God were diſpoſed to pardon them, you will not ſuffer him to do it, while you refuſe to pardon the Offence of your Fellow-Servant? Having uſed theſe and many other excellent Arguments to ſhew Men the Neceſſity of Reconciliation and mutual Forgiveneſs, when they came to the Holy Communion, which is the Covenant of Forgiveneſs, and Peace with God and Man, he takes notice of two Evaſions, which ſome Men uſed in this Caſe to palliate and foſter ſtill ſomething of an ill-natured Temper, and make it ſeem conſiſtent with their Duty. Some were indeed afraid to ſay thoſe Words of the Lord's Prayer, Forgive us our Treſpaſſes, as we forgive them that treſpaſs againſt us; as being ſenſible it was no better than curſing themſelves, while they continued in ſuch an evil Diſpoſition: And therefore they only ſaid the firſt Clauſe, Forgive us our Treſpaſſes, and drop'd the ſecond, which contains the Condition of their forgiving others: And they were ſo vain as to think, this was a ſufficient Salvo to their Conſciences, and a Security againſt the Menaces that were threatned to a revengeful Temper. To whom he replies [a], That this was but a vain Caution, for whether they ſaid the Words or not, God would deal with them according to their Actions; Chriſt having told them in the very next Words, If you forgive not Men their Treſpaſſes, neither will your Heavenly Father forgive you your Treſpaſſes. Others excuſed themſelves by ſaying, I bear no Hatred or Malice againſt my Enemy, I am not concerned or troubled at his Enmity, I will have nothing to do with him. But ſays Chryſoſtom, this is not enough, that thou wilt give him no Trouble, that thou wilt do him no harm, that thou wilt bear no rancorous Mind againſt him; but thou muſt endeavour to reſtore him to a friendly Temper. For God has not commanded us to have nothing to do with our Enemy, but to have many things to do with him. For this Reaſon he is our Brother: and for this Reaſon God ſaid not, Forgive thy Brother what thou haſt againſt him; but Go, and be reconciled to him, if he hath ought againſt thee; and ceaſe not, till thou haſt brought that Member to its proper Harmony and Concord. He has alſo there [b] theſe remarkable Words, I tell you before, I proteſt, I proclaim it aloud, Let no Man that has an Enemy, come to the Holy Table, and receive the Body of the Lord. Let no Man come that has an Enemy. Haſt thou an Enemy? come not. Wouldſt thou come? Be reconciled, and then come and receive the Holy Body. Thy Lord, to reconcile thee to his Father, refuſed not to be ſlain, and ſhed his Blood for thy Sake: And wilt not thou ſpeak a Word, nor go to make the firſt Offer, to reconcile thy Fellow-Servant? This he ſays to thoſe, who thought it below them, and an Act of Puſillanimity and Diſgrace, to ſeem to make the firſt Step toward reconciling an Enemy, by being firſt in the Offer and Motion of Peace. But he aſſures them it was a Duty, and an honourable Duty, thus to imitate Chriſt in a charitable Condeſcenſion? And whatever might be the Effect of it here, it would have a double and a triple Crown hereafter. Finally he tells them with a ſolemn Proteſtation [c], in the Cloſe of all, that if after Forty Days Warning he found any ſtill perſiſt irreconcilable to one another, he would no longer uſe Admonitions, but proceed to ſeverer Methods, and order them to be kept back from the Holy Myſteries, till they ſhould amend their Fault, and come to the Holy Table with a pure Conſcience, which was the only proper Way to partake of the Communion.

[s] Chryſ. Hom. 16. in Mat. p. 166. [t] Chryſ. Hom. 3. in Epheſ. p. 1051. Hom. 22. de Ira. t. 1. p. 288. [u] Chryſ. Hom. in Eutrop. t. 4. p. 554. Hom. 38. de Pœnitent. & Euchar. t. 5. p. 570. [x] Chryſ. Hom. 27. in Gen. p. 358. [y] Hom. 22. de Ira. t. 1. p. 277. [z] Ibid. p. 282.

SECT. XIV. Of their Behaviour at the Communion and afterwards.

THESE were ſome of thoſe neceſſary Qualifications they required in Men before they came to the Holy Communion. And at the Time of Celebration, the very Offices of the Church were ſo framed as to elevate Mens Souls to the higheſt Pitch of Reverence, Devotion and Thankfulneſs to God for his Mercies in the Sacrifice of Chriſt his only Son. To which purpoſe the Reader may recollect what has been ſaid of the great Thankſgiving in the Conſecration of the Euchariſt; and the Surſum Corda, or Call to lift up their Hearts to the Lord; and of the Seraphical Hymns and Angelical Glorifications intended to ſet forth the Praiſes of God in this excellent Myſtery. To which may be added that Advice of Origen [d], That Men ſhould approach it with the profoundeſt Humility, imitating the good Centurion, and ſaying, Lord I am not worthy that thou ſhouldſt come under my Roof. That they ſhould then quit all Thoughts of earthly Things, and conſider they were then in the midſt of Cherubims and Seraphims, Angels and Archangels, and all the Powers above. For this Myſtery, [e] in Chryſoſtom's Phraſe, turns Earth into Heaven. Open the Gates of Heaven, and ſee; or rather not Heaven, but the Heaven of Heavens, and then you ſhall ſee what I ſay. For that which is the moſt honourable of all Things there, that I will now ſhew you upon the Earth; not Angels, or Archangels, not the Heavens, or the Heaven of Heavens, but the Lord of them all, whom you not only ſee, but touch, and eat, and carry Home with you. Therefore upon this he grounds ſeveral excellent Exhortations. Let us become Eagles [f] and fly up to him in Heaven; let us have nothing to do with the Earth, but look upward to the Sun of Righteouſneſs; let us not receive him with polluted Hands, but come to him with Reverence and all imaginable Purity; ſaying, By this Body I am no longer Earth and Aſhes; I am no longer a Captive, but free: For this I hope to receive Heaven and all the good Things therein, Immortal Life, the Condition of Angels, the Society of Chriſt. Cleanſe therefore and waſh thy Soul, prepare thy Mind for the Reception of theſe Myſteries. If the Son of a King in all his Ornamental Robes, his Purple and his Diadem, were put into thy Hands to carry, thou wouldſt contemn all earthly Things. But now thou receiveſt not the Son of a Mortal King, but the Only-begotten Son of God: And art thou not afraid ſtill to retain the Love of worldly Things? Why is not this Ornament alone ſufficient for thee, but thou muſt yet needs look to the Earth, and be in love with Riches? Knoweſt thou not that thy Lord has an Averſion to all the Pomp and Magnificence of this Life? Was he not therefore born of a poor Mother, and at his Birth laid in a Manger? And was not not his Anſwer this, to the Man who thought to make a gain of his Service, The Son of Man hath not where to lay his Head? Let us therefore imitate him; and paſſing by the Beauty of Pillars and Marbles, let us ſeek for Manſions in Heaven above; and trampling upon all worldly Pride, and the love of Riches, let us take to our ſelves lofty Souls, and mind the Things that are on high. When you come to the holy Table and the ſacred Myſteries, ſays he [g] in another Place, do it with Fear and Reverence, with a pure Conſcience, with Faſting and Prayer. Conſider what a Sacrifice you partake of, what a Table you approach unto. Conſider, that thou who art but Duſt and Aſhes, receiveſt the Body and Blood of Chriſt. God calls thee to his own Table, and ſets before thee his Son; where the Angelical Powers ſtand about with Fear and Trembling, and the Cherubims cover their Faces, and the Seraphims cry with Reverence, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord of Hoſts. Let us therefore come with the greateſt Reverence alſo, and give Thanks, and fall down and confeſs our Sins, and with Tears bewail our Offences, and offer up fervent Prayers to God. And ſo purifying our ſelves in Quietneſs and decent Order, let us come as to an heavenly King; and receiving the Holy and Immaculate Sacrifice, let us kiſs and embrace it with our Mouths and Eyes, and therewith warm our Souls; that we come not together to Judgment and Condemnation, but to create in us Sobriety of Mind, and Charity and Virtue, and reconcile our ſelves to God, and obtain a laſting Peace, and whatever other Bleſſings ariſe from thence; that we may both ſanctify our ſelves and edify our Neighbours.

[a] Ibid. p. 289. [b] Ibid. p. 285. [c] Ibid. p. 294. [d] Orig. Hom. 5. de Diverſis. t. 2. p. 441. [e] Chryſ. Hom. 24. in 1 Cor. p. 38. [f] Ibid. p. 536. & 538.

And as they thus taught Men, with what Veneration and ſerious Deportment they ought to behave themſelves at the Lord's Table; ſo they endeavoured to make laſting Impreſſions of Virtue upon Men's Minds by this Argument, ſhewing them what Obligations of Holineſs and Purity the Reception of the Body and Blood of Chriſt laid upon every Member of the Body, and every Faculty of the Soul. It was an Oblation of their Bodies and Souls to God; it was an Oath, or Bond and Covenant to do no Evil, but to exerciſe themſelves in all manner of Virtue, as Pliny [h] repreſents it from the Mouths of ſome Chriſtians. Therefore Chryſoſtom elegantly repreſents it as an Obligation laid upon every Member of the Body, the Hands, the Eyes, the Lips and Tongue, the Heart and Soul eſpecially, to abſtain from all Pollution and Impurity of Sin. Thou faſteſt, before thou doſt communicate, that thou may'ſt appear worthy [i]: And doſt thou deſtroy all after Communicating, when thou oughteſt to be more temperate? I do not enjoyn thee to faſt, but to abſtain from Luxury and all the evil Effects of it, immoderate Laughter, diſorderly Words, pernicious Jeſting, fooliſh and vain Diſcourſe, and whatever a Chriſtian ought not to ſpeak, who has been entertained at Chriſt's Table, and touched his Fleſh with his Tongue: Whoever thou art therefore, purify thy Hands, thy Lips and thy Tongue, which have been the Gates at which Chriſt enter'd into thee. When thou ſitteſt down to a common Table, remember that ſpiritual Table, and call to mind that Supper of the Lord. Conſider [k] what words thy Mouth hath ſpoken, Words worthy of ſuch a Table, what Things thy Mouth hath touched and taſted, what Meat it has fed upon. Doſt thou think it no harm with that Mouth to ſpeak evil of and revile thy Brother? How canſt thou call him Brother? If he is not thy Brother, how couldſt thou ſay, Our Father? For that implies more Perſons than one. Conſider with whom thou ſtoodſt in the time of the Holy Myſteries; with Cherubims, with Seraphims. But the Cherubims uſe no Reviling. Their Mouth is filled with one Office, Glorifying and Praiſing God. How then canſt thou ſay with them, Holy, Holy, Holy, who uſeſt thy Mouth to Reviling? Tell me, if there were a royal Veſſel, always filled with royal Dainties, and ſet apart only for this Uſe; and one of the Servants ſhould uſe it to put Dung in; would he dare after that to put it, thus filled with Dung, among the other Veſſels appointed for royal Uſe? No, certainly. Yet this is the very Caſe of Railing and Reviling. You ſay at the Holy Table, Our Father, and then immediately add, which art in Heaven. This Word raiſes you up, and gives Wings to your Soul, and ſhews that you have a Father in Heaven. Therefore do nothing, ſpeak nothing of earthly Things. He hath placed you in the Order of Spirits above, and appointed you a Station in that Quire. Why then do you draw your ſelf downward? You ſtand by the Royal Throne, and do you revile your Brother? How are you not afraid, leſt the King ſhould take it as an Affront offered to himſelf? If a Servant beats or reviles another in our Preſence, who are but his Fellow-Servants, though he does it juſtly, we rebuke him for it. And dare you ſtand before the Royal Throne, and revile your Brother? See you not theſe holy Veſſels? Are they not always appropriated to one peculiar Uſe? Dares any one put them to any other? But you are more Holy than theſe Veſſels, yea, much more Holy. Why then do you pollute and defile your ſelf? You ſtand in Heaven, and do you ſtill uſe Railing? You converſe with Angels, and do you yet revile? You are admitted to the Lord's Holy Kiſs, and do you yet revile? God hath honoured and adorned your Mouth ſo many ways, by Angelical Hymns, by Food, not Angelical, but Super-angelical, by his own Kiſſes, and by his own Embraces, and do you after all theſe revile? Do not, I beſeech you. Let that which is the Cauſe of ſo many Evils, be far from the Soul of a Chriſtian. With what Force and Eloquence does this holy Writer here ſhew us the Obligation, which the Reception of the Euchariſt lays upon Men to abſtain from Evil-ſpeaking? But it equally lays a Reſtraint upon all the other Members of the Body, and Operations of the Soul, as well as the Tongue. Which Chryſoſtom excellently deduces after this manner in another Place: Be grateful to thy Benefactor by an excellent Converſation [l]; Conſider the Greatneſs of the Sacrifice, and let that ingage thee to adorn every Member of thy Body. Conſider what thou takeſt in thy Hand, and never after endure to ſtrike any Man: Do not diſgrace that Hand by the Sin of Fighting and Quarrelling, which has been honoured with the Reception of ſo great a Gift. Conſider what thou takeſt in thy Hand, and keep thy Hand free from all Rapines and Injuſtice. Think again, how thou not only receiveſt it it in thy Hand, but putteſt it to thy Mouth, and keep thy Tongue pure from all filthy and contumelious Speech, from Blaſphemy and Perjury, and all Words of the like Nature. For it is a moſt pernicious Thing, that the Tongue, which miniſters in ſuch tremendous Myſteries, and is dyed with the Purple of ſuch precious Blood, and made a golden Sword, ſhould be put to the vile Practice of Railing and Reviling, and ſcurrilous and abuſive Language. Regard with Veneration the Honour wherewith God has honoured it; and do not debaſe it to ſuch mean Offices of Sin. Conſider again, that after thy Hand and thy Tongue, thy Heart receives that tremendous Myſtery: Then never deviſe any Fraud or Deceit againſt thy Neighbour, but keep thy Mind pure from all malicious Deſigns. After the ſame manner guard thy Eyes and thy Ears. For is it not moſt abſurd, after that myſtical Hymn that was brought from Heaven by the Cherubims, to defile thy Ears with the Songs of Harlots, and effeminate Muſick? And what Puniſhment can be too great for thee, if thou ſuffereſt thoſe Eyes, which have ſeen the unſpeakable and venerable Myſteries, to wander gazing after Harlots, and committeſt Adultery in thy Mind? Tertullian, among many other Arguments which he uſes againſt a Chriſtian's going to be a Spectator at the Roman Games, uſes this as one, taken from the ſame Topick: What an Abſurdity is it [m] for a Man to go from the Church of God into the Church of the Devil? Out of Heaven, as the Saying is, into the Mire? Firſt to lift up his Hands in Prayer to the Lord, and then to toſs thoſe very Hands to wearineſs in the Praiſe of a Stage-Player? To make that Mouth, which was uſed to ſay Amen at the Holy Euchariſt, give Teſtimony to a Gladiator? To cry out, World without End, to others beſides Chriſt his God? By ſuch familiar Arguments drawn from the Nature of the Sacrament, and the Inconſiſtency of all vicious Actions with the Deſign, and Circumſtances, and whole Tendency of it, did the Ancients endeavour to poſſeſs Mens Minds with the Senſe of their Duty, and their great Obligation to perſevere in Holineſs, and glorify God both in Body and Spirit all their Days. Which as it was but their reaſonable Service, ſo it was the only Way to make this Holy Sacrament effectual to their Salvation, and uſeful in their preſent State, by keeping up a perpetual and flaming Love for Chriſt, which qualified them for a frequent Reception, and almoſt daily Repetition of it; which is the laſt Thing to be conſidered in this whole Enquiry.

[g] Chryſ. Hom. 31. de Nativ. Chriſti. t. 5. p. 479. [h] Plin. lib. 10. Ep. 97. [i] Chryſ. Hom. 27. in 1 Cor. p. 567. [k] Id. Hom. 14. in Epheſ. p. 1127.

CHAP. IX.

Of frequent Communion, and the Times of celebrating it in the antient Church.

SECT. I.

All Perſons, except Penitents under Cenſure, antiently obliged to receive the Communion every Lord's Day, by the Canons of the Church.

IT has been ſhewed before, in ſpeaking againſt private and ſolitary Maſſes, that though it be now the Cuſtom in the Church of Rome for the Prieſt to receive the Euchariſt without any other Communicants, either Clergy or Laity, how many ſoever be preſent at the Action, yet there was no ſuch Cuſtom ever heard of in the antient Church. And tho' in moſt other Churches this Corruption be reformed, yet there remains a great Defect ſtill uncorrected, which is the Want or Neglect of frequent Communion. I ſhall make no farther Enquiry into the Cauſes of this Neglect, whether it proceed from a general Decay of Chriſtian Piety, or from a Want of ſtrict Diſcipline in the Church, but only obſerve that it is a great Declenſion from the Zeal and Fervour of the Primitive Ages. For then it is certain it was both the Rule and Practice for all in general both Clergy and Laity to receive the Communion every Lord's Day, except ſuch as were unqualified for it either as Catechumens or Penitents, who of courſe for want of a due Preparation were obliged to abſtain from it. Among the Apoſtolical Canons there are two to this Purpoſe. The firſt ſays, If any Biſhop, Presbyter or Deacon, or any other of the Clergy, does not communicate, when the Oblation is offered [a], let him ſhew Cauſe why he does not, that if it be a reaſonable Cauſe, he may be excuſed; but if he

[l] Chryſ. Hom. 21. ad Pop. Antioch. T. 1. p. 266.

[m] Tertul. de ſpectac. cap. 25. Quale eſt de Eccleſia Dei in Diaboli Eccleſiam tendere? de cœlo, ut aiunt, in cœnum? illas manus quas ad Dominum extuleris, poſtmodum Hiſtrionem laudando fatigare? Ex ore quo Amen in ſanctum protuleris, Gladiatori teſtimonium reddere? εἰς αἰῶνας alii omnino dicere niſi Deo Chriſto? See more ſuch Arguments in Cyprian. Ep. 36. al. 38. p. 125.

[a] Can. Apoſt. Can. 8.

ſhew

ſhew no Cauſe, let him be excommunicated; as giving Scandal to the People, and raiſing Suſpicion againſt him that offers. And the next Canon ſays, If any of the Faithful come to Church to hear the Scriptures read, and ſtay not to join in the Prayers and receive the Communion, let them be excommunicated, as the Authors of Diſorder in the Church. The Council of Antioch, which was held in the Middle of the fourth Century, repeats this Decree: Let all thoſe be caſt out of the Church, who [b] come to hear the Scriptures read in the Church, but do not communicate with the People in Prayer, or diſorderly turn away from the Participation of the Euchariſt, till by Confeſſion and Fruits of Repentance and Interceſſion they have obtained Pardon. Theſe Canons ſhew, that as often as they met together for Divine Service on the Lord's Day, they were obliged to receive the Euchariſt under Pain of Excommunication. And all other Canons which ſpeak of the Order of Divine Service, plainly ſhew that the Celebration of the Euchariſt was always one inſeparable Part of it. The Council of Laodicea [c], as has been often noted before, deſcribes the whole in this Order. Firſt after the Sermon the Prayers of the Catechumens, and then the Prayers of the Penitents, and after their Departure, the Prayers of the Faithful, and then the Kiſs of Peace, and laſt of all the Offering of the Holy Oblation. And all ſuch Canons as forbid the Penitents to be Partakers of the Euchariſt [d], do plainly ſuppoſe all the reſt of the People to be Partakers of it. And if any Man did not partake of it, it was an Intimation either that he was doing Penance, or at leaſt was conſcious to himſelf of ſome great Crime, for which he ought to do Penance: For no others were allowed to abſtain from the conſtant Participation of the Euchariſt. All they that do not communicate, ſays St. Chryſoſtom [e], are Penitents: If thou art of the Number of thoſe who do Penance, thou mayſt not partake. For whoever does not partake, is one of that Number. Which implies, that all were obliged conſtantly to communicate, who were not doing Penance publickly or privately for their Offences. And this was ſo much the Practice of thoſe Days, that the Council of Eliberis [f] orders, that they who would not communicate, ſhould not be allowed to make their Oblations. Which was a Sort of Excommunication of them. For the Oblations and the Euchariſt commonly went together. The firſt Council of Toledo [g] orders thoſe who come to Church, but neglect to communicate, to be admoniſhed: And if they amend not upon Admonition, then to be reduced to the State of formal Penance for their Crime. It were no hard Matter to ſhew the like Preſcriptions in many other [h] Councils, but theſe are ſufficient to ſhew what was the ſtanding Rule of the firſt Ages, as to Mens Obligations to be conſtant in receiving the Communion once a Week in their ſolemn Aſſembly on the Lord's Day.

SECT. II. This ſhewed to be the conſtant Practice for the three firſt Ages.

AND if we run over the whole Hiſtory of the three firſt Ages, we ſhall find this to have been the Church's conſtant Practice. Ignatius exhorts the Epheſians [i] to be diligent in aſſembling frequently to celebrate the Euchariſt, and glorify God. For when ye often meet together, ye demoliſh the Power of Satan; and the Harmony of your Faith deſtroys the Deſtruction which he meditates againſt you. This Frequency of Communion may reaſonably be ſuppoſed to be then, according to the known Practice, once a Week, on every Lord's Day. For on this Day, (as Pliny, who was Cotemporary with Ignatius, informs us [k], from the Teſtimony and Confeſſions of ſome Chriſtians, whom he as Proconſul of Bithynia examined) they were uſed to meet before it was Light by reaſon of the Perſecutions, and then not only ſing Hymns to Chriſt their God, but alſo to bind themſelves by a Sacrament againſt the Commiſſion of all manner of Wickedneſs. Juſtin Martyr ſays [l] more expreſsly in his Apology to the Emperors, that on the Day called Sunday they were all uſed to meet together both out of City and Country, and hold a religious Aſſembly in this manner: Firſt a Reader read the Writings of the Prophets and Apoſtles: Then the Preſident of the Aſſembly made a Sermon; after which they all roſe up to common Prayers; and when thoſe were ended, Bread and Wine were brought to the Preſident, who conſecrated them with Prayer and Thankſgiving, to which all the People ſaid Amen. Then all the preſent Members participated of the Euchariſt, and it was carried to the Abſent by the Deacons. The like Account is given by Clemens of Alexandria, when he ſays [m] that as ſoon as the Bread was broken in the Celebration of the Euchariſt, they permitted every one of the People to take Share of it. And we ſhall preſently ſee more of this Cuſtom of communicating every Lord's Day in the Writings of Tertullian, and Cyprian, and Euſebius, and many others, who ſpeak of other Days as well as the Lord's Day, appropiated in ſome Churches to this Service: But about theſe the Cuſtom varied: For on other Days ſome Churches celebrated the Euchariſt, and others did not; but on the Lord's Day it was univerſally celebrated in all Churches, and never omitted by any Aſſembly of Chriſtians whatſoever. In ſo much that ſome

[b] Conc. Antioch. can. 2. [c] Conc. Laodic. can. 19. & 49. [d] Vide Conc. Nicen. can. 11. & 13. Conc. Ancyr. can. 4, 5, 6. κοινωνήτωσαν λίχα προσφορᾶς. [e] Chryſ. Hom. 3. in Epheſ. p. 1051. [f] Conc. Eliber. Can. 28. Placuit ab his qui non communicant, Epiſcopos munera accipire non debere. [g] Conc. Tolet. 1. can. 13. De his qui intrant in Eccleſiam, & deprehenduntur nunquam communicare, admoneantur. Quod ſi non communicant, ad Pœnitentiam accedant. [h] Vid. Conc. Matiſcon. 2. can. 4. Conc. Antiſſiodor. can. 39. [i] Ignat. Ep. ad Epheſ. n. 13. συνέρχεσθε πυκνότερον συνέρχεσθε εἰς εὐχαριστίαν. &c. [k] Plin. lib. 10. Ep. 97. [l] Juſtin. Apol. 2. p. 97, & 98. [m] Clem. Strom. 1. p. 318. Vid. Conc. Laodic. can. 49. Innocent. Ep. 1. ad Decent. Gaudent. Ser. 2. de Paſcha.

have have obſerved [n] out of Chryſoſtom [o], that Sunday was antiently among other Names called Dies Panis, the Day of Bread, becauſe the Breaking of Bread was ſo general a Cuſtom in the Church on that Day.

SECT. III. The Euchariſt celebrated on other Days beſides the Lord's Day, in many Churches.

As to other Days, we may obſerve out of Tertullian, that in his Time they not only received the Euchariſt on Sundays [p] in their Morning Aſſemblies before Day, but alſo at other Times on other Days; particularly on the Anniverſary Feſtivals of the Martyrs; and the fifty Days between Eaſter and Pentecoſt, which were but one continued Feſtival; and all their Stationary Days, that is, Wedneſdays and Fridays in every Week throughout the Year. Theſe Things are not commonly obſerved by Writers on this Subject, but they add conſiderably to the Argument about frequent Communion. Tertullian ſays expreſsly of theſe Stationary Days, that they were always obſerved with Receiving the Euchariſt. For he tells ſome, who objected againſt it on theſe Days, That their Station would be ſo much the more ſolemn [q] for their Standing at the Altar. And whereas they ſcrupled to communicate becauſe they were afraid that Receiving the Euchariſt would be a breaking of their Faſt: (For theſe were Semijejunia, Half Faſts, which they obſerved till three in the Afternoon:) He takes away [r] this Scruple alſo, and tells them, that Receiving the Euchariſt would be ſo far from breaking their Faſt, that it would the more recommend it to God, and by doing this they would perfectly perform both Duties together. St. Baſil [s] agrees with Tertullian in making the Stationary Days not only Faſt Days, but Days of Communion. For reckoning four Days in the Week on which they received the Communion, he counts Wedneſdays and Fridays with Saturdays and Sundays, to compleat the Number. And Socrates [t] notes it as a peculiar Cuſtom in the Church of Alexandria, that though they had religious Aſſemblies on theſe Days, and all other Divine Service performed on them, yet they had not the Communion. Which Exception implies, that to receive the Communion on thoſe Days, was the general Cuſtom of other Churches.

Tertullian as plainly intimates that they received the Communion upon all the Feſtivals of the Martyrs [u]. And the ſame is noted by Cyprian [x], and Chryſoſtom [y], and Sidonius Apollinaris [z]. The Paſſages have been cited at large in another Place [*], and therefore I need not here repeat them. Tertullian [a] ſays farther, that the fifty Days of Pentecoſt, or all the Days between Eaſter and Pentecoſt, were one continued Feſtival. And ſince all Feſtivals were Communion Days, we may conclude that the Communion was celebrated every Day during this Interval.

Saturday alſo, or the Sabbath, in every Week, was obſerved as a religious Feſtival in many Churches. And therefore on this Day likewiſe they generally received the Communion. This is expreſsly ſaid by Socrates [b], and Caſſian [c], and St. Baſil [d], and Timothy of Alexandria [e], and St. Auſtin [f], and the Author of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions [g], and the Council of Laodicea [h]. I have already [†] produced the ſeveral Teſtimonies of theſe Writers at large upon another Occaſion, and therefore it is ſufficient here to make a ſhort Reference to them. By all this it appears undeniably, that in many Churches they had the Communion four times every Week, on Wedneſdays, Fridays, Saturdays, and Sundays, beſides incidental Feſtivals, which were very frequent, for as Chryſoſtom [i] tells us, there was ſcarce a Week paſſed in the Year but they had one or two Commemorations of Martyrs.

SECT. IV. And in ſome Places every Day.

BUT we are aſſured farther, that in ſome Places they received the Communion every Day. St. Auſtin ſays [k] in ſome Places only on the Saturday and the Lord's Day; and in other Places only on the Lord's Day. For this was left to the Liberty of every Church: But they that communicated the ſeldomeſt, did it at leaſt every Lord's Day. So again [l], The Sacrament of his Body, the Church and its Unity, is in ſome Places prepared and taken every Day at the Lord's Table; in other Places only on certain Days with an Interval of Time between them. In the greater Churches probably they had it every Day, in the leſſer only once or twice a Week. Carthage ſeems to have been one of thoſe Churches which had it every Day [m] from the Time of Cyprian. For Cyprian and Auſtin [n] after him ſpeak of it as the Cuſtom of that Church to receive it Daily, unleſs they were under ſome ſuch grievous Sin as ſeparated them [n] See Biſhop Taylor's conſtant Commun. p. 462. [o] Chryſ. Hom. 5. de Reſur. in Edit. Latinis. [p] Tertul. de Coron. Mil. cap. 3. Antelucanis cœtibus Euchariſtiam ſumimus, &c. [q] Tertul. de Orat. cap. 14. Nonne ſolennior erit ſtatio tua, ſi & ad aram Dei ſteteris? [r] Ibid. Ergo devotum Deo obſequium Euchariſtia reſolvit, an magis Deo obligat? [s] Baſil. Ep. 219. ad Cæſaream Patriciam. T. 3. p. 278. [t] Socrat. lib. 5. cap. 22. [u] Tertul. de Coron. cap. 3. [x] Cypr. Ep. 12. al. 37. Ep. 39. al. 34. [y] Chryſ. Hom. 59. de Martyr. T. 5. p. 779. [z] Sidon. lib. 5. Ep. 17. [*] Book XIII. Chap. ix. n. 5. [a] Tertul. de Coron. cap. 3. De Idololat. cap. 14. [b] Socrat. lib. 5. cap. 22. lib. 6. cap. 8. [c] Caſſian. Inſtit. lib. 3. cap. 2. [d] Baſil. Ep. 289. [e] Timoth. Can. 13. [f] Aug. Ep. 118. [g] Conſtit. lib. 2. cap. 59. [h] Conc. Laodic. Can. 49. [†] Book XIII. Chap. ix. n. 3. [i] Hom. 40. in Juventin. T. 1. p. 546. Hom. 65. de Martyr, &c. [k] Aug. Ep. 118. ad Januar. cap. 2. Alii quotidie communicant corpori & ſanguini Dominico, alii certis diebus accipiunt: alibi nullus dies intermittitur quo non offeratur, alibi Sabbato tantum & Dominico: alibi tantum Dominico, &c. [l] Id. Tract. 26. in Joan. p. 94. Hujus rei Sacramentum, id eſt, unitatis corporis & ſanguinis Chriſti alicubi quotidie, alicubi certis intervallis dierum in Dominica menſa præparatur & ſumitur. See alſo Aug. Ser. 29. de Verb. Dom. al. 5. in Appendice. It. lib. 2. de Serm. Dom. in monte. cap. 7. T. 4. [m] Cypr. de Orat. Dom. p. 147. Euchariſtiam quotidie ad cibum ſalutis accipimus, &c. [n] Aug. de Dono Perſeverantiæ. cap. 5.

from

from the Body of Chriſt, and kept them as Penitents from Communicating. Therefore Cyprian gives this as one Senſe of that Petition in the Lord's Prayer, Give us this Day our Daily Bread, as if it might be underſtood in the ſpiritual Senſe, as well as the natural, as a Petition to be Daily fed with the Fleſh of Chriſt in the Euchariſt, which was the Bread of Life. In another Place [o] he exhorts the Martyrs to prepare themſelves for the Fight of Perſecution, conſidering that they therefore drink the Cup of Chriſt's Blood every Day, that they may be able to ſhed their Blood for Chriſt. Therefore, ſays he [p] a little after, Let us arm our Hand with that ſpiritual Sword, that it being mindful of the Euchariſt, (the Chriſtian Sacrifice) may valiantly refuſe thoſe abominable and deadly Sacrifices of the Heathen; Let that Hand, which has received the Body of the Lord, embrace the Lord himſelf, being afterward to receive the Reward of an eternal Crown from the Lord in Heaven. To which may be added what he ſays in another Place [q], That the Prieſts who celebrated the Daily Sacrifices of God, did alſo prepare the Martyrs to offer themſelves as Victims and Oblations unto God. Where by the Daily Sacrifice he certainly means the Euchariſt, which is often called the Daily Sacrifice [r] by the Ancients, for the ſame Reaſon as the Lord's Prayer is called the Daily Prayer, becauſe they were both daily celebrated at the Altar. St. Jerom aſſures us [s] it was the Cuſtom at Rome for the Faithful to receive the Body of Chriſt every Day. Which he neither abſolutely commends, nor diſallows, but leaves every Man to abound in his own Senſe, only requiring Men to receive it with due Preparation. In another Place [t] he ſays, it was not only the Cuſtom at Rome, but of the Spaniſh Church to communicate every Day. And to one who propoſed the Queſtion to him as a Caſe of Conſcience, Whether he ought to communicate every Day? he gives this Anſwer, That the Cuſtoms and Traditions of every Church, which did not prejudice the Faith, were to be obſerved in ſuch manner as they were handed down by their Forefathers; and the Cuſtom of one Church was not to preſcribe to, or overthrow the contrary Cuſtom of another. And he wiſhes that all Men might receive the Euchariſt every Day, provided they might do it with Condemnation and Pricks of Conſcience for unworthy Receiving. Which is the ſame Reſolution as St. Auſtin gave in the Queſtion: For having ſtated the Arguments on both Sides, for and againſt daily Receiving; the one Pleading, That Men ought to abſtain for a few Days, that they might prepare to receive more worthily when they came to it: And the orther arguing, That unleſs their Sins were ſuch as deſerved Excommunication, and the Cure of a more ſolemn Repentance, they ought not to ſeparate themſelves from the Daily Medicine of Chriſt's Body; he divides the Matter between them, determining that each Party might act according as their own Judgment and Faith in this Caſe piouſly directed them. For neither of them [u] intended to diſhonour the Body and Blood of the Lord, whilſt they ſtrove earneſtly who ſhould do the greateſt Honour to the Holy Sacrament of their Salvation. In like manner as Zacchæus and the Centurion were at no Variance between themſelves, neither did the one prefer himſelf before the other, when the one received the Lord into his Houſe Rejoycing, and the other ſaid, Lord, I am not worthy that thou ſhouldſt come under my Roof: For they both really honoured their Saviour, though in a different, and as it were, in a contrary Way, being both miſerable in their Sins, and both alike obtaining Mercy. So it is with Pious Chriſtians in this Caſe; The one out of Honour dares not receive the Sacrament every Day, and the other out of Honour dares not let any Day paſs without Receiving it. This was an holy Strife indeed, and we ſee the Diſpute was not, Whether they ſhould receive it only once or twice a Year, but whether they ſhould receive it once or twice a Week, or rather every Day. We have heard Gennadius ſay before [x], that he neither praiſes nor diſpraiſes Receiving the Euchariſt every Day, but he perſuades and exhorts all to receive it every Lord's Day, if their Minds be pure from Affections to Sin. St. Ambroſe was more peremptory in his Advice to receive it every Day. If it be our daily Bread [y], ſays he, why doſt thou receive it once a Year only, as the Greeks are uſed to do in the Eaſt? Receive that daily, which is for thy daily Advantage: And ſo live that thou mayſt deſerve daily to receive it. He that does not deſerve to receive it every Day, does not deſerve to receive it after a Year. Again [z], I ought always to receive that which is ſhed for the Remiſſion of Sins, that my Sins may always be forgiven me: I that am always ſinning, ought always to have my Medicine at hand, as he that has a Wound, ſeeks without delay for a Cure. St. Ambroſe here is very plain, that the Communion was adminiſtred daily in the Weſtern Church, but he ſeems to reflect upon the Greek Church, as if they had left off that Cuſtom. But he is to be interpre[o] Cypr. Ep. 36. al. 38. ad Thibaritanos. p. 120. Conſiderantes idcirco ſe quotidie calicem ſanguinis Chriſti bibere, ut poſſint & ipſi propter Chriſtum ſanguinem fundere. [p] Ibid. p. 125. Armemus dexteram gladio ſpiritali, &c. [q] Cypr. Ep. 54. al. 57. ad Cornel. p. 118. Sacerdotes qui ſacrificia Dei quotidie celebramus, hoſtias Deo & victimas præparemus. [r] So Chryſ. Hom. 3. in Epheſ. p. 1051. Θυσία καθημερινὴ, καθ' ἑκάστην. &c. [s] Hieron. Ep. 50. ad Pammachium. cont. Jovin. cap. 6. Scio Romæ hanc eſſe conſuetudinem, ut fideles ſemper Chriſti corpus accipiant: quod nec reprehendo nec probo. Unuſquiſque enim in ſuo ſenſu abundat. [t] Ep. 28. ad Lucinium Bœticum. De Euchariſtia quod quæris, an accipienda quotidie, quod Romanæ Eccleſiæ & Hiſpaniæ obſervare perhibentur, &c. [u] Aug. Ep. 118. ad Januar. cap. 3. [x] Gennad. de Dogmat. Eccleſ. cap. 53. See the laſt Chapter. n. 3. [y] Ambroſ. de Sacram. lib. 5. cap. 4. Si quotidianus eſt Panis, cur poſt annum illum ſumis, quemadmodum Græci in Oriente facere conſueverunt? &c. [z] Id. lib. 4. c. 6. Qui ſemper pecco, ſemper debeo habere Medicinam, &c.

ted

ted by St. Auſtin [a], who ſpeaks the ſame Thing, but does not charge the whole Greek Church, nor any Part of it with this Innovation, but only ſome particular Men in ſome Parts, who did not think themſelves under any Obligation to receive it daily. And indeed it appears from St. Chryſoſtom and others, that about this time many began ſcandalouſly to neglect frequent Communion, and contented themſelves to receive once or twice a Year upon ſome ſolemn Feſtival. But the Church was far from encouraging this Contempt: For ſhe kept ſtill to the Cuſtom of daily Communion in many Places, and in all Places to the Celebration of it on Saturday and the Lord's Day, and in many Places on Wedneſdays and Fridays alſo; and they that were piouſly diſpoſed, were conſtant Communicants at theſe Times; and they that were negligent and prophane, were earneſtly invited to be more frequent in communicating; and there are many ſevere Invectives againſt their Remiſsneſs. Euſebius [b] ſays expreſsly, that they celebrated the Memorial of Chriſt's Body and Blood, ὁσημέραι, every Day. And it appears from the Council of Laodicea [c] that they had it twice in the Week, on Saturdays and Sundays, in Lent, and at all other Times of the Year more frequently. St. Baſil [d] ſpeaks of four Days in the Week on which it was uſual to receive the Communion, beſides incidental Feſtivals of Martyrs. And he commends it as good and uſeful to communicate and participate of the Holy Body and Blood of Chriſt every Day, καθ' ἑκάστην ἡμέραν. Palladius tells us [e] how Macarius adviſed a Woman that had been under the Power of Inchantment, never to omit receiving the Communion, telling her, that that Judgment had befaln her becauſe that for five Weeks ſhe had neglected to partake of the Holy Myſteries. But none is more expreſs in this Matter, nor more vehement againſt the Neglect of frequent Communion, than St. Chryſoſtom. He tells us ſometimes that they had Communions every Day for thoſe that were more devoutly diſpoſed; ſometimes on the three more ſolemn Days in the Week, Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays, on which Days the whole Church was expected: though for all this many came not above once a Year. In vain, ſays he [f], is the daily Sacrifice, καθημερινὴ θυσία, in vain do we ſtand at the Altar: There is none to participate. He ſpeaks this againſt thoſe who came but once a Year out of mere Cuſtom at ſome ſolemn Feſtival, whilſt in the mean time the Sacrifice was daily offered, though they refuſed to partake of it. In another place diſcourſing of the Difference between the Jewiſh and Chriſtian Paſſover [g], he ſays, The Jewiſh Paſſover comes but once a Year, but the Chriſtian Paſſover is celebrated in every Synaxis or Aſſembly. And a little after, Lent comes but once a Year, but the Paſſover is celebrated three times a Week, and ſometimes four, or as often as we pleaſe. Again, This is what deſtroys [h] all Religion, that Men meaſure their Worthineſs not by the Purity of their Souls, but by the length of Time, and take this for Piety and Reverence, that they come not frequently to the Lord's Table; not conſidering that if they come unworthily, though but once a Year, they are worthy of Puniſhment. It is not Boldneſs to come frequently, but to come unworthily, though a Man do it but once in all his Life. But we are ſo ſtupid and inſenſible as to think, that when we have wallowed in Sin all the Year without any Care to repent, it is ſufficient that we have not daily preſumed in a contumelious manner to touch the Body of Chriſt: Not conſidering that the Jews who crucified Chriſt, but it did once. But was their Sin ever the leſs for that? And Judas betrayed him but once. But did that excuſe him? Why therefore do we meaſure this Matter by Time only? Let the ſeaſonable Time of our coming be a pure Conſcience. The Communion is the ſame now as it is at Eaſter, there is the ſame Grace of the Spirit, it is the Paſſover every Day. The ſame Sacrifice is offered on Fridays, and Saturdays, and Sundays, and the Feſtivals of the Martyrs. It is plain by all this, that the Communion was celebrated ordinarily three or four times a Week, if not every Day; tho' ſome were ſo vain as to think, they were the more reſpectful to it, in not coming above once a Year, out of a pretended Reverence for it; who yet when they did come, came only to eat it to their Condemnation, for want of a Mind duly prepared to receive it. Whom he thus reflects upon in another Place: Many partake of this Sacrifice only once a Year, others twice, and others frequently. Which of theſe are the moſt acceptable? They only who do it with a pure Conſcience, with a pure Heart, with a Life unblameable. With this Qualification come [i] always; without it come not ſo much as once. For they that do ſo, take only Judgment, Condemnation and Puniſhment to themſelves. This he repeats over and over again in his Homilies. He that is conſcious to himſelf of no Crime, ought to come to the Lord's Table: But if Men are laden with Sin, and do not repent [k], it is not ſafe for them to come even once upon a Feſtival. The Jews have their annual Memorials of God's Benefits on their Feſtivals, but thou who art a Chriſtian, haſt a daily [l] Memorial, as I may ſay, in theſe holy Myſteries. The beſt Preſerver of Kindneſſes is the Remembrance of them, and perpetual Thankſgiving for them. Therefore thoſe venerable and ſalutary Myſteries, which we celebrate every Day [m] in our Aſſemblies,

[a] Aug. de Sermone Dom. in monte, lib. 2. cap. 7. t. 4. Plurimi in Orientalibus partibus non quotidie cœnæ Dominicæ communicant, cum iſte panis Quotidianus dictus ſit. [b] Euſeb. Demonſtr. Evangel. lib. 1. cap. 10. p. 37. [c] Conc. Laodicen. can. 49. [d] Baſil. Ep. 289. ad Cæſaream. [e] Pallad. Hiſt. Lauſiac. cap. 19. Bibl. Patr. Gr. Lat. t. 2. p. 923. See alſo Caſſian. Collat. 7. cap. 30. Where he ſpeaks of Daily Communion. [f] Chryſ. Hom. 3 in Eph. p. 1051. [g] Chryſ. Hom 52. in eos qui Paſcha jejunant, t. 5. p. 705, & 709. [h] Hom. 5. in 1 Tim. p. 1548. [i] Chryſ. Hom. 17. in Hebr. p. 1872. [k] Chryſ. Hom. 31. de Philogon, t. 1. p. 403. [l] Hom. 51. in Mat. p. 455. [m] Hom. 26. in Mat. p. 259.

ſemblies, are called the Euchariſt or Thankſgiving: Becauſe they are the Memorial of God's Kindneſs to us. It were eaſy to collect Abundance more ſuch Paſſages out of this ancient Writer, but I will only add one Place more, where he thus ſharply taxes the Peoples Negligence of frequent Communion: I often obſerve, ſays he, a great Multitude flock together [n] to hear the Sermon, but when the Time of the Holy Myſteries comes, I can ſee few or none of them: Which makes me ſigh from the Bottom of my Heart, that when I your Fellow-Servant am diſcourſing to you, you are ready to tread upon one another for Earneſtneſs to hear, and continue very attentive to the End; but when Chriſt our common Lord and Maſter is ready to appear in the holy Myſteries, the Church is in a manner empty and deſerted. What Pardon or Excuſe can be allowed for this? By this Neglect you loſe all the Praiſe that is due to your Diligence in Hearing. If you had laid up in your Hearts what I preach to you, it would retain you in the Church, and prompt you to receive the Holy Myſteries with Piety and Veneration: But now, as if you were hearing one play upon an Inſtrument, the Preacher has no ſooner done, but ye are all gone out of the Church. This, I confeſs, proves that in Chryſoſtom's Days there was a great Abatement of the Primitive Zeal, and a great Declenſion from the Original Practice: But ſtill it is evident that frequent and daily Communions were in ſome meaſure kept up by the Clergy and devouter Sort of Laity, who conſtantly frequented them, though many careleſs Chriſtians had no other Regard to them, but only to come formally once or twice a Year, and that with Superſtition enough inſtead of Religion, at ſome of the ſolemn Feſtivals.

SECT. V. When firſt it came to be ſettled to Three Times in the Year.

WHEN Matters were come to this Degeneracy, ſome Councils inſtead of reviving the antient Diſcipline, and quickning Men by juſt Cenſures to frequent Communion, contented themſelves to oblige the Laity to receive three Times a Year, at the three great Feſtivals, Chriſtmas, Eaſter, and Pentecoſt, under the Penalty of not being reputed Catholick Chriſtians, if they neglected to communicate at thoſe three noted Seaſons. Thus it was firſt determined in the Council of Agde [o] about the Year 506. And ſo Things continued to the Time of Charles the Great, when the third Council of Tours [p] made a Decree to the like Purpoſe, An. 813. That all Laymen, who were not under the Impediment of greater Sins, ſhould receive three Times a Year at leaſt, if not more frequently. And yet the Clergy continued to communicate frequently with ſome of the devouter Laity every Lord's Day, as appears from the Writers of that Age, particularly Rabanus Maurus [q], and Bertram [r], who ſays the Sacrament was adminiſtred not only at the Paſchal Solemnity every Year, but on every Day throughout the Year, when as yet the Corruption of private and ſolitary Maſs did not prevail, which came not in till ſome Ages after. And it is remarkable, that even in this Age the Council of Aix la Chapelle [s] made ſome Attempt to reſtore the antient Practice to its Primitive Luſtre, by reviving the Decree of the Council of Antioch, which orders all ſuch as come to Church to hear the Scriptures, but refuſe to receive the Holy Communion, to be caſt out of the Church, till they ſhould amend their Fault by Confeſſion and Repentance.

SECT. VI. And afterward to once a Year by the Council of Lateran.

BUT the Diſeaſe was grown too epidemical and inveterate to be eaſily corrected; and therefore in a degenerate Age the Corruption went on and increaſed, and the Council of Lateran under Innocent the IIId added Strength and Confirmation to it; reducing the Obligation to communicate ſtill within narrower Bounds. For whereas before all Men were obliged to communicate at leaſt three Times a Year, this Council made it neceſſary to do it no more than once at Eaſter, when every Man and Woman that was come to years of Diſcretion, was bound to make Auricular Confeſſion of all his Sins to his own Prieſt, and receive the Communion [t], unleſs the Prieſt adviſed that for ſome reaſonable Cauſe he ſhould abſtain from it. This Rule was afterward taken into the Body of their Canon Law [u]. And here we may Date the utter Ruin of the Antient and Apoſtolical Practice of frequent and general Communions. For from this time People began to think themſelves diſcharged of the Duty of frequent communicating, and contented themſelves with receiving once a Year at Eaſter, leaving their Prieſts to communicate alone; which quickly was attended with another Corruption of private and ſolitary Maſſes, which uſurped the Room of the antient general Communions of the whole Church one with another, and made the antient Prayers a perfect Heap and Maſs of Abſurdities, whilſt they prayed and gave Thanks to God for the whole Congregation as Communicants, when there was not ſo much as one Communicant properly ſpeak-

[n] Hom. 3. de Incomprehenſibili. t. 1. p. 362.

[o] Conc. Agathen. can. 18. Seculares, qui in Natali Domini, Paſcha, & Pentecoſte, non communicaverint, Catholici non credantur, nec inter, Catholicos, habeantur.

[p] Conc. Turon. 3. can. 50. Ut ſi non frequentius, vel ter Laici homines in anno communicent, niſi forte quis majoribus criminibus impediatur.

[q] Raban. de Propriet. Sermonis. lib. 1. cap. 10. It. de Inſtit. Cleric. lib. 1. cap. 31.

[r] Bertram. de Corp. & Sanguine Dom. in Præfat. Sacramenta — non ſolum per omnes Paſchæ ſolennitates celebrantur ſingulis annis, verum ſingulis in anno diebus.

[s] Conc. Aquiſgran. cap. 70. ex Conc. Antioch. can. 2.

[t] Conc. Lateran. 4. can. 21. Omnis utriuſque Sexus fidelis, poſtquam ad annos diſcretionis pervenerit, omnia ſua ſolus peccata confiteatur fideliter ſaltem ſemel in anno proprio Sacerdoti, & injunctam ſibi pœnitentiam ſtudeat pro viribus adimplere, ſuſcipiens reverenter ad minus in Paſcha Euchariſtiæ Sacramentum, &c.

[u] Decretal. Gregor. lib. 5. tit. 38. de Pœnitent. & Remiſſion. cap. 12.

ing among them, but all mere Spectators of the Prieſt pretending to act in the Name of the whole Church, and communicate in Pageantry without any real Communion. This was the general State of the Romiſh Service at the time of the Reformation, except in ſome few Collegiate Churches, where, if Bona [x] ſay true, the Clergy continued to communicate with the officiating Prieſt, according to antient Cuſtom, without which, he confeſſes, it is hard to make intelligible Senſe of many of their Prayers that are daily uſed in their Service.

SECT. VII. What Attempt was made to reſtore frequent and full Communions at the Reformation.

SOME Attempt was made by the firſt Reformers to rectify theſe Abuſes, and reſtore frequent and general Communions in many Places. And they happily carried their Point ſo far, as to aboliſh private Maſſes in all Places: But the reſtoring the antient Way of the whole Church's communicating every Lord's Day, was a Matter not ſo eaſy to be effected; partly by reaſon of the Prejudices which Men had imbibed by the Prevalency and long Duration of contrary Cuſtom; and partly by reaſon of that Affection which Men retain for their Vices, which will not ſuffer them to comply with an Inſtitution, that requires a conſtant Purity of Soul, and a Conſcience always void of Offence, to qualify them for a worthy Reception of a weekly or daily Communion. Calvin laboured hard at his firſt coming to Geneva to eſtabliſh a monthly or a weekly Communion, as moſt agreeable to the Practice of the Apoſtles and the primitive Church: He pleads earneſtly for it in his Inſtitutions [y], where he cenſures the Popiſh Cuſtom of communicating only once a Year, as moſt certainly the Invention of the Devil: Yet after all he could not prevail to have ſo much as a monthly Communion ſettled among the People, but was overborn in his Endeavours, and forced to yield to a Rule, which requires the People to communicate only four times a Year. However, he ſays, he took Care to have it entred [z] upon Record, that this was an evil Cuſtom, to the Intent that Poſterity might with more Eaſe and Liberty correct it. But whether it ever was corrected to this Day, is what I am ignorant of: Moſt probably it never was, ſince I have had occaſion to ſhew in another Work [*], communicating only four times a Year continued to be the general, ſtanding Cuſtom in the French Church. Their Diſcipline required no more, though they encouraged more frequent Reception. The Church of England was a little happier in her Attempts of this Kind. For though her Rules require the People in general to receive but three times a Year, as of neceſſary Eccleſiaſtical Obligation; yet in our Cathedral Churches the Euchariſt is ordinarily celebrated every Lord's Day; as it is alſo in ſome of the London Pariſh-Churches; and others both in City and Country have monthly Communions. Yet there remains a great deal ſtill to be done, to bring this Matter to the primitive Standard. For even in our Cathedrals the Communions are very thin, and there is ſtill room for thoſe Complaints of St. Chryſoſtom, In vain do we ſtand at the Altar, in vain is the daily Sacrifice offered, there are none, in a manner, that communicate. The Churches are crowed to hear the Sermon, but when the time of the Holy Myſteries comes, they are empty and deſerted. Men are earneſt to hear their Fellow-Servant preach an eloquent Diſcourſe, but when Chriſt the common Lord and Maſter of all is ready to appear, and entertain them, they fly, though never ſo kindly invited, from his Table. This muſt needs grieve the Hearts of all pious Servants of Chriſt, who ſtand there to miniſter in his Name, whilſt few hearken to their Admonitions, and the generality excuſe themſelves from communicating, as if it were no Chriſtian Duty. And in Country Pariſhes the Matter is ſtill more deplorable, where the Deſpair of Succeſs deters the Miniſter from attempting it. For here Men are generally ſo averſe to a weekly Communion, that they will not be prevailed upon with all the ſerious Exhortations that can be uſed, to comply with the ſtanding Rules of the Church, which oblige them to communicate three times a Year, though the Miniſter himſelf be under an Obligation to Preſent every ſuch Non-Communicant as a notorious Delinquent. But if the Foundations be caſt down, what can the Righteous do? Experience tells us, it is as much Labour in vain to Preſent a negligent People for not communicating three times a Year, as it is gravely to exhort them to a weekly Communion. This Diſcouragement which Miniſters commonly meet with, in trying to bring Men to comply with the ſtated Rules of communicating three times a Year by Church-Cenſures, which are wholly neglected, makes them deſpair of going any higher towards the Perfection of the primitive Practice: Since they who cannot be prevailed upon by the preſent Diſcipline to communicate three times a Year, are too Obſtinate and Stubborn to hearken to any the moſt ſerious Admonitions that can be uſed to incline them to a weekly Communion.

SECT. VIII. Wherein this is ſtill deficient, and what ſeems yet neceſſary to be done in order to reduce Communion to the Primitive Standard.

WHAT effectual Remedy can be applied to this inveterate Diſeaſe, is not very eaſy to determine. Yet certainly the Regaining of that which was ſo much the Glory of the primitive Church, and the great Support of Chriſtian Innocence and Piety (as frequent weekly Communion moſt certainly was) muſt be a Thing worthy the moſt ſerious [x] Bona Rer. Liturg. lib. 2. cap 17. n. 2. Sine quo vix poſſunt intelligi, quæ in Liturgicis Orationibus quotidie recitantur.

[y] Calvin. Inſtit. lib. 4. cap. 17. n. 46. [z] Calvin. Reſponſ. de quibuſdam Eccleſ. Ritibus, p. 206. [*] French Churches Apology for the Church of England. Book III. Chap. xiv.

Thoughts

Thoughts and Conſideration of all thoſe, into whoſe Hands God has put Power and Authority by a ſuperior Influence to redreſs Abuſes, when they can ſafely do it to Edification, and not to Deſtruction. If I were worthy to give any Advice in the Caſe, it ſhould be this, Firſt to reſtore the Practice of the true antient Diſcipline, and after that the Way would lie open to revive the Practice of the true primitive Way of communicating weekly every Lord's Day. But it will be ſaid, there lies an inſuperable Difficulty againſt the Reſtoration of the antient Diſcipline in the preſent Poſture of Affairs: The State of the preſent Times, and the general Corruption of Mens Morals, will not admit of it: The Church of England has for two hundred Years wiſhed for the Reſtoration of this Diſcipline, and yet it is but an ineffective Wiſh; for nothing is done towards introducing it, but rather Things are gone backward, and there is leſs Diſcipline for this laſt ſixty Years, ſince the Times of the unhappy Confuſions, than there was before. To which it may be anſwered, That the Difficulty is certainly great, but not inſuperable: For Diſcipline is one of God's Ordinances in his Church, and he appoints nothing but what is practicable in it ſelf, if Men be not wanting on their Part to contribute toward the Exerciſe of it. But to give Rules in this Caſe is a nice and tender Point, and I had rather it ſhould be done by the Wiſdom of others than my ſelf. Something has already been ſuggeſted by a late learned Writer [†] on this Subject, very uſeful for obtaining the End now propoſed; and therefore I ſhall content my ſelf at preſent to refer to his Suggeſtions, and put an End to this Diſcourſe.

[†] Penitential Diſcipline of the Primitive Church. Cap. 4. London. 1714.

An INDEX of the PROVINCES.

A.

Achaia Page 375
Adiabene Aſſyriæ 363
Ægyptus prima 354
Ægyptus ſecunda Ibid.
Æmilia 385
Africa Proconſularis 353
Alpes Cottiæ 385
Alpes Graiæ 388
Alpes Maritimæ Ibid.
Apuleia 384
Aquenſis, Vide Narbonenſis ſecunda.
Aquileienſis, Vid. Venetia.
Aquitania prima 388
Aquitania ſecunda Ibid.
Arabia Petræa, al. Palæſtina tertia 358
Arabia Philadelphiæ 357
Arcadia 354
Arelatenſis, Vid. Viennenſis ſecunda.
Armenia prima 367
Armenia ſecunda Ibid.
Armenia quarta 360
Armenia magna, al. Perſica 363
Aſia Proconſularis 369
Aſſyria 363
Auguſtamnica prima 354
Auguſtamnica ſecunda Ibid.
Axumitis, Vid. India.
Axumitica 365

B.

Bœtica 390
Belgica prima 389
Belgica ſecunda Ibid.
Bithynia prima 369
Bithynia ſecunda Ibid.
Bracarenſis, Vid. Gallæcia prima.
Bituricenſis, Vid. Aquitania prima.
Burdigalenſis, Vid. Aquitania ſecunda.
Britannia prima 393
Britannia ſecunda Ibid.
Brutia 384
Byzacena 353

C.

Calabria 384
Campania 383
Cappadocia prima 366
Cappadocia ſecunda 367
Cappadocia tertia Ibid.
Caria 370
Carthaginenſis Hiſpania 390
Chaldæa 363
Cilicia prima 372
Cilicia ſecunda Ibid.
Comagene, Vid. Euphratenſis 360
Corſica Inſula 385
Creta Inſula 375
Cyclades Inſulæ 373
Cyprus Inſula 360

D.

Dacia Mediterranea 376
Dacia Ripenſis Ibid.
Dacia Antiqua ſive Gothia Ibid.
Dalmatia Ibid.
Dardania Ibid.
Dioſpontum, Vid. Helenopontus.

E.

Ebredunenſis, Vid. Alpes Maritimæ.
Eluſana, Vid. Novempopulania.
Emeritenſis, Vid. Luſitania.
Eubœa Inſula, Vid. Achaia.
Epirus Vetus Page 375
Epirus Nova Ibid.
Ethiopia 365
Euphratenſis 360
Europa Thraciæ 373

F.

Flaminia 385
Flavia Britanniæ.

G.

Galatia prima 368
Galatia ſecunda Ibid.
Gallæcia prima 390
Gallæcia ſecunda Ibid.
Germanica prima 389
Germanica ſecunda Ibid.
Gothia, al. Dacia Antiqua 376

H.

Hagiopolitana, Vid. Euphratenſis.
Hæmimontis 374
Helenopontus 368
Helleſpontus 369
Hellas, Vid. Achaia & Theſſalia.
Hiſtria 386
Hiſpalenſis, Vid. Bœtica.
Homeritarum Regio 364
Honorias 368
Hybernia 391

I.

Iberia 365
Illyricum Occidentale 376
Illyricum Orientale 374
Immerinorum Regio 364
India Axumitica ſub Ægypto 365
Iſauria 372

L.

Latium 382
Lariſſena, Vid. Theſſalia.
Lazica 373
Lesbus Inſula Ibid.
Liguria 386
Lucania 384
Lugdunenſis prima 389
Lugdunenſis ſecunda Ibid.
Lugdunenſis tertia Ibid.
Lugdunenſis quarta Ibid.
Lugdunenſis quinta, Vid. Maxima Sequanorum.
Luſitania 390
Lybia Marmarica, ſive ſecunda 355
Lybia Pentapolis, ſive Cyrenaica Ibid.
Lycaonia 371
Lycia Ibid.
Lydia 370

M.

Macedonia prima 474
Macedonia ſecunda Ibid.
Mauritania Cæſarienſis 353
Mauritania Sitifenſis Ibid.
Mauritania Tingitana.
Maxima Cæſarienſis Britanniæ.
Maxima Sequanorum 389
Mediolanenſis, Vid. Liguria.
Meſopotamia Page 360
Mœſia prima ſive ſuperior 376
Mœſia ſecunda ſive inferior 374

N.

Narbonenſis prima 388
Narbonenſis ſecunda Ibid.
Nicopolitana, Vid. Epirus Vetus.
Noricum Mediterraneum 377
Noricum Ripenſe Ibid.
Notitia Imperii 341
Notitia Eccleſiæ 342
Novempopulania 388
Numidia 353

O.

Oſrhoena 360

P.

Palæſtina prima, al. Salutaris 357
Palæſtina ſecunda 358
Palæſtina tertia, al. Arabia Petræa Ibid.
Pamphylia prima 371
Pamphylia ſecunda Ibid.
Pannonia ſuperior 377
Pannonia inferior Ibid.
Paphlagonia 368
Peloponneſus, Vid. Achaia.
Perſia 364
Phœnicia prima 360
Phœnicia Libani Ibid.
Phrygia Pacatiana prima 372
Phrygia Salutaris Ibid.
Phrygia Pacatiana ſecunda Ibid.
Picenum Annonarium 385
Picenum Suburbicarium 381
Piſidia 371
Pontus Polemoniacus 367
Prævalitana 375

R.

Ravanenſis, Vid. Flaminia.
Rhœtia prima and ſecunda 386
Rothoma genſis, Vid. Lugdunenſis ſecunda.
Rhodope 374
Remenſis, Vid. Belgica ſecunda.

S.

Samnium 383
Sardinia 385
Saracenorum Regio 364
Savia 376
Scotia 392
Scythia cis Danubium in Thracia 373
Scythia trans Danubium 376
Senonenſis, Vid. Lugdunenſis quarta.
Sicilia 384
Syria prima 360
Syria ſecunda Ibid.

T.

Tarraconenſis 389
Thebais prima 354
Thebais ſecunda Ibid.
Theodorias 360
Theſſalia 375
Theſſalonicenſis, Vid. Macedonia.
Thracia 374
Tripolitana 354

Tuſco-

Turonenſis, Vid. Lugdunenſis tertia
Tuſcia Page 379
Trevitenſis, Vid. Belgica prima.

V.

Valeria 381
Venetia Page 386
Viennenſis prima 388
Viennenſis ſecunda Ibid.
Umbria 379

Z.

Zeugitana, Vid. Africa Proconſular.

An INDEX of EPISCOPAL SEES.

A.

ABaradira, in Bizacena.
Abdara, in Bœtica Page 390
Abdera, in Rhodope 374
Abdia, vel Ada, incertæ poſit, in Hiſpan.
Abellinum, in Campania 383
Abrinca, Auranches, in Lugdunenſis ſecunda 389
Abritum, in Mœſia ſecunda 374
Abula, in Luſitania 390
Abyda, in Phœnicia Libani.
Abydus, in Helleſpont 369
Abyla, in Phœnicia Libani 360
Acelum, in Venetia 387
Acerra, in Campania 383
Acci, Guadix, in Carthaginenſis Hiſpania 390
Acherontia, Acerenza, in Apulia 384
Achrida, in Prævalitana 376
Acmonia, in Phrygia Pacatiana 372
Acraba, in Meſopotam.
Acraſſus, in Lydia 370
Acraſſus, in Lycia 371
Acropolis, in Lucania 384
Adada, in Piſidia 371
Adana, in Cilicia prima 372
Adra, in Arabia Philadelphiæ 357
Adramytium, in Aſia 370
Adriana, in Helleſpont 369
Adriana, in Pamphylia ſecunda 371
Adrianopolis, in Epirus Vetus 375
Adrianopolis, in Honorias 368
Adrianopolis, in Piſidia 371
Adrianopolis, in Hæmimont. 374
Adrianotheræ, in Helleſpont 369
Adulis, in Ethiopia 365
Æcæ, in Apulia 384
Æclanum, in Samnium Ibid.
Ælia, Vid. Hieruſalem 357
Æmi, idem cum Æno.
Ægæ, in Cilicia ſecunda 372
Ægea, in Aſia 370
Ænos, in Rhodope 374
Æmonia, in Hiſtria 387
Æſis, in Picenum Annonar 385
Agatha, Agde, in Narbonenſis prima 388
Agdamia, incertæ poſitionis, in Phrygia.
Aginnum, Agen, in Aquitannica ſecunda 388
Agrigentum, in Sicilia 384
Agrippina, in Germanica ſecunda 389
Agraga, incertæ Provinciæ, in Hiſpania.
Aila, in Palæſtina tertia 358
Alabanda, in Caria 370
Alæſa, in Sicilia 384
Alalis, in Phœnicia Libani.
Alba Pompeia, in Alpes Cottiæ 386
Albanum, in Latium 382
Alba, in Latium Ibid.
Albenſium Civitas, Vivaria, in Viennenſis Page 388
Albienſium Civitas, Alby, in Aquitan. prima Ibid.
Albigaunum, Abenga, in Alpes Cottiæ 386
Aleria, in Corſica 385
Aletium, in Calabria 384
Aletrium, Aletri, in Latium 382
Aletum, Alet, in Lugdunenſis tertia 389
Alexandria, in Ægyptus prima 354, 356
Alexandria, Scanderon, in Cilicia ſecunda 372
Alexandria, Aleſſano, in Calabria 384
Algiza, Vid. Argiza, in Aſia.
Alicarnaſſus, in Caria 370
Alinda, in Caria Ibid.
Aliona, in Phrygia Pacatiana 372
Alipha, in Samnium 384
Altinum, in Venetia 387
Amadaſſa, in Phrygia Salutar 372
Amalphia, in Campania 383
Amantia, in Epirus Nova 375
Amaſia, in Helenopontus 368
Amaſtris, in Paphlagonia Ibid.
Amathus, in Cyprus 360
Amathus, in Palæſtina ſecunda 358
Ambianenſium Civit. Amiens, in Belgica ſecunda 389
Amblada, in Lycaonia 371
Ambura, Vid. Amphora.
Ameria, in Umbria 380
Amida, in Meſopotamia 360
Amiſus, in Helenopontus 368
Amiternum, in Valeria 381
Amorium, in Phryg. Salut. 371
Amyzon, in Caria 370
Anagnia, in Campania 382
Anapolis, incertæ poſitionis ex Concil. Sardicenſi.
Anaſtaſiopol. in Caria 370
Anaſtaſiopol. in Galat. prima 368
Anaſtaſiop. in Phryg. Pacat. 372
Anazarbus, in Cilicia ſecunda Ibid.
Anchialus, in Hæmimont 374
Anchiaſmus, in Epirus Vet. 375
Ancona, Picen. Suburbicar. 381
Ancyra, in Phrygia Pacat. 372
Ancyra, in Galat. prima 368
Andera, in Aſia 370
Andicavorum Civitas, Angers, in Lugdunenſis tertia 389
Andrapa, in Helenopontus 368
Andropolis, in Ægypt. prima 354
Anœa, in Aſia 370
Anenyſia, forſan Anæa.
Anemurium, in Iſauria 372
Anitha, in Arabia 357
Anicium, Vid. Vellava.
Aninetum, in Aſia 370
Antandrus, in Aſia Page 370
Anthyſa, Urbs incertæ poſit.
Antardus, in Phœnicia prima 360
Antæum, in Thebais prima 354
Anthedon, in Palæſt. prima 358
Antinoe, in Thebais prima 354
Antiochia Mæandri, in Caria 370
Antiochia Mygdoniæ, Vid. Niſibis, in Meſopotomia.
Antioch, in Piſidia 371
Antioch, in Syria prima 360, 361
Antioch ad Tragum, in Iſauria 372
Antigatris, in Palæſt. prima 357
Antiphellus, in Lycia 371
Antiphra, in Libya 355
Antipolis, Antibe, in Narbon. ſecunda 388
Antipyrgus, in Libya 355
Antiſſiodorum, Auxerre, in Lugdun. quarta 389
Antithou, in Auguſtamnica ſecunda 354
Antium, in Latium 382
Antrum, incertæ poſitionis, in Theſſalia, vel Samothracia.
Apamea, in Piſidia 371
Apamea, in Bithyn. ſecunda 369
Apamea, in Syria ſecunda 360
Aphroditopolis, in Arcadia 354
Aphrodiſias, in Caria 370
Aphnæum, in Auguſtamnica prima 354
Apira, in Phryg. Pacat 372
Apiaria, in Mœſia ſecunda 374
Apollinis Civitas, in Thebais prima 354
Apollinis Fanum, in Lydia 370
Apollonia, in Epirus Nova 375
Apollonia, in Lydia 370
Apollonias, in Caria Ibid.
Apollonias, in Bithyn. 369
Apta Julia, Apt, in Narbon. ſecunda 388
Aptuchi Fanum, in Pentapolis 355
Aqua viva, in Tuſcia 379
Aquæ, in Dacia Ripenſis 376
Aquæ, Acs, in Novempopul. 388
Aquæ Sextiæ, Aix, in Narbon. ſecunda Ibid.
Aquæ Statiellæ, Acqui, in Alpes Cottiæ 386
Aquileia, in Venetia 387
Aquinum, in Latium 382
Aquitana, incertæ Prov. in Africa.
Arabyſſus, in Armenia ſecunda 367
Araclia, in Palæſtina prima 358
Arad, in Palæſt. tertia Ibid.
Aradus, in Phœnic. prima 360
Arana, in Lycaonia 371
Arauſio, Orange, in Vienna ſecunda 388
Araxa, in Lycia 371
Arca, in Armenia ſecunda 367
Arcadiopolis, in Europa 374

An INDEX of the Epiſcopal Sees.

Arca, in Armen. ſecunda page 367
Arcabrica, Arcos, in Carthaginenſis Hiſpan. 390
Arcadiopolis, in Aſia 370
Archelais, in Palæſt. prima 358
Ardona, in Apulia 384
Area, in Phœnic. prima 360
Arelatum, Arles, in Viennenſis ſecunda 388
Areopolis, in Lydia and Aſia 370
Arethuſa, in Syria ſecunda 360
Aretium, in Tuſcia 379
Argentoratum, Strasburg, in Germanica prima 389
Argiza, in Aſia 370
Argos, in Achaia 375
Ariarathia, in Armen. ſecunda 367
Ariaſſus, in Pamphyl. ſecunda 371
Ariminum, in Picen. Annon. 385
Arindela, in Palæſtina tertia 358
Ariopolis, in Palæſtina tertia Ibid.
Ariſita, in Aquitan. prima 388
Ariſtium, in Bithynia 369
Arlana, in Phœnicia Libani 360
Armaquetius, Urbs incertæ poſit. ex Conc. Sardicenſi.
Arpi, in Apulia 384
Arſinoe, in Arcadia 354, 356
Arſinoe, in Cyprus 360
Arverni, Clermont, in Aquitan. prima 388
Aſana, in Phrygia Pac. 372
Aſcalon, in Palæſtina prima 358
Aſculum, in Picen. Suburb. 381
Aſcnemſala, Vid. Senemſala
Aſindum, Medina Sidonia, in Bœtica 390
Aſpendus, in Pamphylia prima 371
Aſpona, in Galatia prima 368
Aſſiſium, in Umbria 380
Aſſus, in Aſia 370
Aſta, Aſti, in Alpes Cottiæ 386
Aſtigi, in Carthaginenſis Hiſpan. 390
Aſturica, Aſtorga, in Gallæcia Ibid.
Aſtygis, Ecija, in Bœtica 390
Aſuna, Vid. Saſima 367
Arella, in Campan. 383
Aternum, Peſcara, in Picen. Suburb. 381
Athanaſſus, in Phrygia Pacatiana 372
Athenæ, in Achaia 375
Atina, in Campan. 382
Athribis, in Auguſtamn. ſecunda 354
Attalia, in Lydia 370
Attalia, in Pamphyl. ſecunda 371
Attudi, in Phryg. Pacat. 372
Aturum, Aire, in Novempopulania 388
Avara, in Arabia 357
Auca, in Tarracon 389
Aucanda, in Lycia 371
Avenio, in Vien. ſecunda 388
Auſinia, Oſena, in Picen. Suburb. 381
Aventicum, Avenche, in Maxima Sequanor. 389
Auguſta Rauracorum, Auſt. in Maxima ſequan. Ibid.
Auguſta Sueſſonum, Soiſſens, in Bulgica ſecunda Ibid.
Auguſta, in Cilicia prima 372
Auguſta Auſciorum 388
Auguſta Taurinorum, Turin, in Alpes Cottiæ 386
Auguſta Trevirorum, Trier, in Belg. prima 389
Auguſta Veromanduorum Ibid.
Auguſta Vindelicorum, Ausburg, in Rhœtia ſecunda 386
Auguſtodunum, Autun, in Ludg. prima page 389
Auguſtopolis, in Palæſtina tertia 358
Auguſtopolis, in Phrygia Salutaris 372
Aulium, in Aſia 370
Aulon, in Epirus Nova 375
Aureliopolis, in Aſia 370
Aurelia, Orleance, in Lugd. quarta 389
Auria, Orenſe, in Gallæcia 390
Auſciorum Civitas, Aucſh, in Novempopulania 388
Auſona, Viquc, in Tarracon. 390
Auximum, Oſmo, in Picen. Suburb. 381
Azana, in Phryg. Pac. 372
Axumis, in Ethiopia 365
Azotus, in Palæſt. prima 358
Azuga, Vid. Vaga.

B

Babylon, in Auguſtamnica ſecunda 354
Bactra, eadem cum Bacatha, in Palæſtina tertia, or in Arabia 357, 358
Balcea, Urbs incertæ poſit.
Bætiræ, Beziers, in Narbon. prima 388
Baioca, Bayeux, in Lugd. ſecunda 389
Balanæa, in Theodorias 360
Balandus, in Lydia 370
Balbura, in Lycia 371
Balia, Urbs incertæ poſit.
Balneum Regis, Bagnarea, in Tuſcia 379
Bana, in Lydia 370
Bapara, in Maurit. Cæſ.
Baptinum, Urbs incertæ poſitionis
Baratta, in Lycaonia 371
Barce, in Pentapol. 355
Barcino, Barcelona, in Tarraconenſis 389
Barcuſa, Urbs incertæ poſit.
Bares, in Helleſpont. 369
Bargaza, in Aſia 370
Bargyla, in Caria Ibid.
Bariſſara, forſan Beriſſa, in Armen. prima Baris, in Piſidia 371
Barium, in Apulia 384
Baſilca, in Maxima Sequan.
Baſilinopolis, in Bithyn. 369
Baſti, in Carthag. Baza 390
Baſcath, Vid. Bacatha 358
Batava Caſtra, Vid. Patavia, in Noricum 377
Batnæ, in Oſrhoena 360
Belica, Belley, in Max. Sequan. 389
Bellavacorum Civ. Beauvais, in Belgica ſecunda Ibid.
Bellunum, Belluno, in Venetia 387
Beneventum, in Samnio 384
Berenice, in Pentapolis 355
Berinopolis, in Galatia prima 368
Bergomum, in Liguria 386
Berinopolis, in Lycaonia 371
Beriſſe, in Armenia prima 367
Berrhæa, in Macedon. 375
Berrhæa, in Syria prima 360
Berytus, in Phœnic. prima Ibid.
Bethauna, Urbs incertæ poſitionis, in Syria
Bigaſtrum, in Carthag. 390
Bindeum, in Piſidia 371
Biſuntio 389
Biturigæ, Bourges, in Aquitan. prima 388
Bivinum, al. Vibinum, Bovino, in Apulia page 384
Bizacium, in Bizacena
Blacena, al. Blatea, Urbs incertæ poſit. in Dacia vel Achaia
Blanda, in Lucania 384
Bleandrus, in Phrygia Pacatan. 372
Blemmyes, in Ethiopia 365
Blera, Bieda, in Tuſcia 379
Bobium, in Alpes Cottiæ 386
Bolica 389
Bononia, in Æmylia 385
Bononia, Bologne, in Belg. ſecundæ 389
Boræum, in Pentapolis 355
Boſſa, Urbs incertæ poſit.
Boſphorus, in Scythia Trans Dan.
Boſtra, in Arabia 357
Botolium, Urbs incertæ poſitionis
Botrys, in Phœnicia prima 360
Bova, in Brutia 384
Bovianum, Boiano, in Samnium Ibid.
Bracara, in Gallæcia 390
Briocum, in Lugdunenſis tertia 389
Britonium, in Gallæcia 390
Brixellum, Breſſello, in Æmylia 385
Brixia, Breſcia, in Liguria 386
Brixino, Brixen, in Rhœtia ſecunda Ibid.
Brizum, in Phrygia Salut. 372
Brullena, in Aſia 370
Brunduſium, in Calabria 384
Bubaſtus, in Auguſtamnica ſecunda 354
Bubon, in Lycia 371
Budinc, in Dacia 376
Bullidum, in Epirus Nova 375
Buna, incertæ poſitionis, in Lycia
Bura, forſan, in Achaia
Burdigala, Bourdeaux, in Aquit. ſecunda 388
Buſiris, in Egypt. ſecunda 354
Buthrotum, in Epirus Vetus 375
Butus, in Ægypt. ſecunda 354
Buxentum, in Lucania 384
Byblus, in Phœnicia prima 360
Byzia, in Europa Thrac. 374
Byzantium, in Europa Ibid.

C.

Cabaſa, in Ægypt. ſecunda 354
Cabellio, Cavaillon, in Vien. ſecunda 388
Cabillonum, Chalons ſur Saone, in Lugd. prima 389
Cabula, Urbs incertæ poſit.
Cadi, in Phryg. Pacat. 372
Cadurci, Cahors, in Aquit. prima 388
Cæna, Urbs incertæ poſit.
Cæſarauguſta, Saragoſa, in Tarrac. 389
Cæſarea, in Bithynia 369
Cæſarea, in Cappadocia prima 367
Cæſarea, in Euphratenſis 360
Cæſarea, in Palæſtina prima 357
Cæſarea Philippi, Vid. Paneas, in Phœnic. prima 360
Cæſena, in Flamin. 385
Calagurris, Calahorra, in Tarrac. 389
Calatia, Calazzo, in Campania 383
Calenum, Calvi, in Campan. Ibid.
Calinda, in Lycia 371
Callinicus, in Oſrhoena 360
Callipolis, in Calabria 384
Callipolis, in Europa Thrac. 374
Callium, Cagli, in Picen. Anon. 385
Camarina, in Sicilia 384

Camaracum,

Camaracum, Cambray, in Belg. ſecunda page 389
Camerinum, in Umbria 380
Camuliana, in Cappad. prima 367
Candida Caſa, Whitern, in Valentia Britan. 392
Candas, Urbs incertæ poſit.
Canna, in Lycaon. 371
Cannæ, in Apulia 384
Canotha, in Arabia 357
Cantanum, in Creta 375
Canuſium, in Apulia 384
Caparcotia, in Palæſt. ſecunda 358
Capitolias, in Palæſtina ſecunda Ibid.
Caprula, in Venetia 387
Capua, in Campan. 383
Caput Cillanum, in Maur. Cæſ.
Caradea, Vid. Corada
Caralis, in Sardinia 385
Carallus, in Pamphyl. prima 371
Carcaſo, in Narbon. 388
Careſſia, in Achaia 375
Carina, in Brutia 384
Caerleon, in Britan. ſecunda 394
Cariſſa, in Paphlagon. incertæ poſitionis.
Carnutum, Chartres, in Lugd. quarta 389
Caropti, forſan Carothus, in Cyrenaica.
Carpaſia, in Cyprus 361
Carpathus, in Inſula Cyclad. 373
Carpentoracte, Carpentras, in Vien. ſecunda 388
Carpis, in Pannon. Inferior 377
Carræ, in Oſrhoena 360
Carteriopolis, in Cyprus Ibid.
Carthago, in Afric. Proconſul. 353
Carthago, in Carthag. Hiſpan. 390
Caryſtus, in Achaia 375
Caſatana, Urbs incertæ poſit.
Caſchara, in Meſopotamia 360, 363
Caſſandria, in Macedon. 375
Caſſinum, in Latium 382
Caſſium, in Auguſtamn. prima 354
Caſſus, in Pamphyl. prima 371
Caſtabala, in Cilicia ſecunda 372
Caſtrum Martis, in Mœſia prima 376
Caſtrum Valentini, in Tuſcia, 379
Caſtrum Ucecienſe, Uzes, in Narbon. prima 388
Caſtulo, Gazlona, in Carthag. Hiſpan. 390
Caſulæ, Carianenſes, in Byzacena.
Cathaquenſa, in Numidia
Catana, in Sicilia. 384
Catuellaunorum Civitas, Chalons, in Champagne, in Belg. ſecunda 389
Caunus, in Lycia 371
Cauria, Coria, in Luſitania 390
Celenderis, in Iſauria 372
Celia, in Pannon. Infer. 377
Celina, in Venetia 387
Cemelinenſis Civitas, Cimies, in Alpes Maritim. 388
Centumcellæ, Civita Vecchia, in Tuſc. 379
Ceneta, Ceneda, in Venetia 387
Cenomanorum Civitas, Le Mans, in Lugd. tertia 389
Cepha, in Meſopotam. 360
Cephalenia Inſula 375
Ceraſa, in Lydia 370
Ceramus, in Helleſpont. 369
Ceramus, in Caria 370
Ceraſus, in Pontus Polemon. 367
Cerillus, in Brutia 384
Ceſtrus, in Iſauria 372
Cetharquenſuſca, Vid. Cathaquenſa
Chalcedon, in Bithynia page 369
Chalcis, in Achaia 375
Chalcis, in Syria prima 360
Charadra, in Iſauria 372
Chatimæa, Urbs incertæ poſitionis, ex Conc. Sard.
Cheretapa, in Phrygia Pacat. 372
Cherroneſus, in Creta 375
Cherſonneſus, in Europa Thrac. 374
Cherſonneſus, in Scythia Ibid.
Chios Inſula Cyclad. 373
Chytrus, in Cyprus 360
Choma, in Lycia 371
Chonochara, Vid. Comoara.
Cibalis, in Pann. Infer. 377
Cibyra, in Caria 370
Ciciſſa, in Cappad. prima 367
Cidiſſi, in Phryg. Pacat. 372
Cilina, Urbs incertæ poſitio. ex Conc. Epheſ.
Cinna, in Galatia prima 368
Cingulum, in Picen. Suburb. 381
Circeſia, in Oſrhoena 360
Citæum, in Creta 375
Citium, in Cyprus 360
Civitas Albenſium 388
Cius, in Bithynia 369
Claudiopolis, in Honorias 368
Claudiopolis, in Iſauria 372
Clazomene, in Aſia 370
Cleopatris, in Ægypt. prima 354
Clyſma, in Arcadia Ibid.
Cluſium, in Tuſcia 379
Clypea, in Africa Procon.
Cnidus, in Caria 370
Cocilianum, in Lucan. 384
Cocuſus, in Armen. ſecunda 367
Codrus, in Pamphyl. 371
Cœlos, al. Cyla, in Europa 374
Colibraſſus, in Pamphylia ſecunda 371
Colonia Londinenſium, Vid. Colonia Lindi, in Britan. 393
Colonia, in Cappadocia tertia 367
Colonia Agrippina, in Germ. ſecunda 389
Colophon, in Aſia 370
Coloſſæ, Chone, in Phrygia Pacat. 372
Comacula, Comacchio, in Flaminia 385
Comæa, in Mœſia ſecunda 374
Comana, in Armenia ſecunda 367
Comana Pontica, in Pontus Polemon. Ibid.
Commacum, in Pamphyl. ſecunda 371
Comoara, in Phœnicia Libani, al. Chonochara 360
Complutum, Alcala de Henares, in Carthag. Hiſpan. 390
Comum, Como, in Liguria 386
Conimbra, in Gallæcia 390
Conſentia, in Brutia 384
Conſorannorum Civ. Conſerans, in Novempopulania 388
Conſtantia, Coutance, in Lugd. ſecunda 389
Conſtantia, Conſtance, in Maxima Sequanorum, Vid. Vindoniſſa.
Conſtantina, in Arabia 357
Conſtantia, in Cyprus, Famagoſta, al. Salamis 360
Conſtantina, al. Cirta, in Numidia 353
Conſtantinopolis 374
Convenarum Civ. Cominges, in Novempop. 388
Coprithis, in Ægypt. prima 354
Coptus, in Thebais ſecunda Ibid.
Coraceſium, in Pamphylia ſecunda page 371
Corada, in Phœnicia Libani 360
Corbaſa, in Pamphylia ſecunda 371
Corcyra, Corfu, in Epir. Vet. 375
Corduba, in Bœtica 390
Cordylus, in Pamphyl. ſecunda 371
Corfinium 384
Coricus, in Cilic. prima 372
Corinthus, in Achaia 375
Coriſſia, in Achaia Ibid.
Coriſopitum, in Lugd. tertia 389
Corna, in Lycaonia 371
Cornetum, in Tuſcia 379
Corniculana, in Maur. Cæſ.
Corone, in Achaia 375
Corone, in Bœotia Ibid.
Cortona, in Tuſcia 379
Corydalla, in Lycia 371
Cos, in Inſul. Cyclad. 373
Coſilianum, in Lucania 384
Corana, in Pamphyl. prima 371
Cotena, in Phryg. Salut.
Cotenopolis incertæ poſit. in Ægypt. 355
Cotiaium, in Phrygia Salut. 372
Cratia, al. Flaviopolis, in Honorias 368
Cremona, in Liguria 386
Crotona, in Brutia 384
Cruſa, Inſula Doridis, in Sinu Ceramico
Cteſiphon and Seleucia, in Aſſyria 364
Cucuſus, in Armenia ſecunda 367
Cuma, al. Cyme, in Aſia 370
Cumæ, in Campania 383
Cuperſanum, in Apulia 384
Cures, St. Anthimo, in Valeria 381
Curia, Coire, in Rhœtia prima 386
Curium, in Cyprus 360
Curta, in Panon. Infer. 377
Cuſa, in Thebais prima 354
Cybira, in Caria, Vid. Cibyra 370
Cybiſtra, in Cappadocia ſecunda 367
Cydonia, in Creta 375
Cyla, Vid. Cœlos, in Europa 374
Cynaborium, in Phryg. Salut. 372
Cynopolis, in Arcadia 354
Cynus, in Ægypt. ſecunda Ibid.
Cypera, in Theſſalia 375
Cypſela, in Rhodope 374
Cyrene, in Pentapolis 355
Cyrus, al. Cyrrhus, in Comagene 360, 362
Cyſamus, in Creta 375
Cyzicus, in Helleſpont 369

D.

Dablis, in Bithynia 369
Dadibra, in Paphlagonia 368
Daldus, in Lydia 370
Daliſandus, in Iſauria 372
Damaſcus, in Phœnicia Libani 360
Danaba, in Phœnic. Lib. Ibid.
Dardanum, in Helleſpont. 369
Darnis, in Libya 375
Dauſara, in Oſrhoena 360
Deborus, in Macedonia 375
Delos Inſula 373
Demetrias, in Theſſalia 375
Derbe, in Lycaonia 371
Dertona, Tortona, in Alpes Cottiæ 386
Dertoſa, Tortoſa, in Tarracon 389
Debeltus, vel Develtus, in Hæmimont. 374

An INDEX of Episcopal Sees.

Dia, Die, in Vienn. secunda p. 388
Dianium, Denia, in Carthag. Hispan. 390
Dicæsarea, in Thessalia 375
Diciozanabrus, in Pamphylia 371
Dinia, Digne, in Alpes Maritimæ 388
Diocæsarea, in Isauria 372
Dioclea, in Phrygia Pacat. 372
Diocletiana, in Dardan. 376
Diocletianopolis, in Thracia 374
Dionysias, in Arabia 357
Dionysiopolis, in Mœsia secunda 374
Dionysiopolis, in Phryg. Pacat. 372
Diospolis, in Thracia 374
Diospolis, in Ægypt. secunda 354
Diospolis Magna, in Theb. secund. 354
Diospolis parva, in Theb. secund. 355
Diospolis, al. Lidda, in Palæst. prima 357
Diospontum, Name of a Province, not of a City 367
Disthis, in Pentapolis 355
Dium, in Macedonia 375
Doara, in Cappad. tertia 367
Doberus, in Macedon. 375
Docimæum, in Phryg. Salut. 371
Doclia, in Dalmatia 376
Dodonia, in Epirus Vet. 375
Dola, in Lugd. tertia 389
Dolicha, in Comagene 360
Domitiopolis, in Isauria 372
Dora, in Palæstina prima 357
Dorchina, in Britan. prima 394
Dorlanis, Urbs incertæ posit. ex Conc. Sardic.
Doryiæum, in Phryg. Salut. 372
Dorovernum, in Britan. prima 394
Druspara, in Europa 374
Duasfedemtai, Vid. Selemsal.
Dumium, in Gallæcia 390
Dummok, in Britan. 394
Dyrostorum, in Mœsia secunda 374
Dyrrachium, Durazzo, in Epirus Nova 375

E.

Ebora 390
Eboracum, in Britan. 393
Ebrodunum, Ambrun, in Alpes Marit. 388
Ebroica, Eureux, in Lugd. secunda 389
Ebusus Insula 391
Echinus, in Thessalia 375
Echinœota, incertæ posit. in Ægypt.
Edessa, in Osrhoene 360, 363
Egabra, Cabra, in Bœtica 390
Egara, Tarrassa, in Tarracon. 389
Egara, in Phryg. Pacat. 372
Egita, in Lusitan. 390
Egnatia, in Apulia 384
Egnatia, in Byzac.
Elana, in Arabia 357
Elatea, in Achaia 375
Elæa, in Asia 370
Elbora, Avora, in Lusitania 390
Elearchia, in Ægypt. secund. 354, 356
Elesma, Vid. Clysma, in Arcadia 354
Eleuthera, in Creta 375
Eleutheropolis, in Palæstina prima 358
Elia, in Palæst. prima 358
Eliberis, in Bœtica 390
Eliocrota, Lorca, in Carthaginensis Hispan. 390
Elipla, Niebla, in Bœtica Ibid.
Elusa, Eause, in Novempop. 388
Elusa, in Palæst. tertia 358
Emerita, Merida, in Lusitan. 390
Emesa, in Phœnic. Libani 360
Eminium, incertæ posit. in Hispan.
Emmaus. Vid. Nicopolis pag. 357
Emona, in Histria 387
Emporiæ, Ampurias, in Tarracon. 390
Engolismensium Civitas, Angoulesme, in Aquitan. secunda 388
Epala, al. Epula, Urbs incertæ posit.
Epidaurus, Ragusa, in Dalmatia 376
Ephesus, in Asia 370
Epiphania, in Syria secunda 360
Epiphania, in Cilicia secunda 372
Eporedia, in Liguria 386
Ergavica, Alcaniz, in Carthag. 390
Erymni, in Pamphyl. prima 371
Erisi, in Caria 370
Erra in Arabia 357
Erythra, in Pentapolis 355
Erythræ, in Asia 370
Esbus, in Arabia 357
Etede, in Pamphyl. prima 371
Evaria, al. Justinianopolis, in Phœnicia Libani 360
Evaza, in Asia 370
Eucarpia, in Phryg. Salutar. 372
Eudoxias, in Lycia 371
Eudoxias, in Pamphyl. secunda 371
Eugubium, Gubbio, in Umbria 380
Eulandra, Urbs incertæ positionis.
Eumenia, in Phryg. Pacat. 372
Euria, in Epirus Vet. 375
Europus, in Euphratensis 360
Euusum, Vid. Ebusus Insula.

F.

Falerona, Faleroni, in Picen. Suburb. 381
Fæsulæ, in Tuscia 379
Fanum Jovis, in Asia 370
Fanum Fortunæ, Fano, in Picenum Annonar. 385
Faventia, Faenza, in Flaminia 385
Faustinopolis, in Cappadocia secunda 367
Feltria, in Venetia 387
Ferentinum, in Latium 382
Ferentinum, in Tuscia 379
Ficoclæ, Cervia, in Flaminia 385
Fidenæ, in Valeria 381
Firmum, Firmo, in Picenum Suburbicar. Ibid.
Flagonea, Vid. Fragonea, in Ægypt. secunda 354
Flavona, Vid. Fragonea
Flaviopolis, in Cilicia secunda 372
Florentia, Florence, in Tuscia 379
Formiæ, in Latium 382
Forontoniana, in Bizac.
Forum Cassii, Forcassi, in Tuscia 379
Forum Flaminii, For-flammo, in Umbria 380
Forum Claudii, Oriolo, in Tuscia 379
Forum Novum, Vescovio, in Umbria 380
Forum Sempronii, in Picen. Annon. 385 Forum Cornelii, Imola, in Flaminia Ibid.
Forum Livii, Forli, in Flaminia ib.
Forum Popilii, in Flaminia 385
Forum Julii, Friuli, in Histria 387
Forum Trajani, in Sardinia 385
Forum Julii, Frejuz, in Narbon. secunda 388
Fragonea, in Ægypt. secunda 354
Frequentum, Fricento, in Samnium page 384
Fulginum, Foligno, in Umbria 380
Fundi, in Latium 382
Furconium, in Valeria 381

G.

Gabala, in Lydia 370
Gabala, in Theodorias 360
Gabalum, Mande, in Aquitan. prima 388
Gabbus, in Syria prima 360
Gabii, in Latium 382
Gadamautus, Vid. Hydmautus, in Lycaonia 371
Gadamusa, in Maur. Sitif.
Gadara, in Lycaonia 371
Gadara, in Palæstina secunda 358
Gaiopolis, forsan Gæapolis, in Arabia
Gangra, in Paphlagonia 368
Gannarina, Glandeve, in Alpes Maritimæ 388
Gargara, in Asia 370
Gaucea, incertæ posit. in Ægypt. 355
Gazula, incertæ posit. in Ægypt Ibid.
Gaza, in Palæst. prima 358
Gegita, in Maur. Sitif.
Geneva, in Viennens. 388
Genua, in Alpes Cottiæ 386
Geone, in Pamphyl. secunda 371
Gerasa, in Arabia 357
Gerara, in Palæst. prima 358
Germa, in Hellespont. 369
Germanicia, in Euphratensis 360
Germanicopolis, in Isauria 372
Geronta, vel Gerus, vel Geranus Locus, Urbs incertæ posit. in Armenia, vel Macedonia.
Gerrum, in Augustamn. prima 354
Gerunda, Girone, in Tarracon. 390
Gilsata, in Pamphylia secunda 371
Gindarus, in Syria prima 361
Girba, in Tripolis 354
Gomphi, in Thessalia 375
Gnidas, in Caria 370
Gnossus, in Creta 375
Gordus, al. Juliggordus, in Lydia 370
Gordus, in Bithynia 369
Gortena, in Pisidia 371
Gortyna, in Creta 375
Gradus, Grado, in Venetia 387
Gratianopolis, Grenoble, in Viennensis 388
Gravisca, in Tuscia 379
Grumentum, Agrimonte, in Lucania 384

H.

Hadria, in Picenum Suburbicar. 381
Hadria, in Flaminia 385
Hadriana, in Bithyn. 369
Hadrianopolis, in Hæmimont. 374
Hagulstade, in Britan. 394
Halicarnassus, in Caria 370
Harpasa, in Caria Ibid.
Hebrides Insulæ
Helena, Elna, in Narbonensis 388
Helice, in Achaia 375
Heliopolis, in Augustam. secund. 354
Heliopolis, in Phœnicia Libani 360
Hellene, in Lydia 370
Helenopolis, in Bithyn. 369
Helmham, in Britan. 393
Hephæstia, in Macedon. 375
Hephæstus, in Augustamnica prima 354
Heraclea, in Augustamnica prima Ib.
Heraclea, in Macedon. 375
Heraclea, in Europa Thracica 373

Heraclea, in Lydia page 370
Heraclea Latmi, in Caria Ibid.
Heraclia Ponti, in Honorias 368
Heraclea Salbaci, in Caria 370
Heraclea, in Arcadia 354
Herdonea, Ardona, in Apulia 384
Herefordia, in Britan. 394
Hermontes, in Thebais secunda 354
Hermopolis parva, in Ægypt. prima Ibid.
Hermopolis, in Thebais prima Ibid.
Hermopolis, in Isauria 372
Hierapetra, in Creta 375
Hierapolis, in Phryg. Pacat. 372
Hierapolis, in Isauria Ibid.
Hierapolis, in Euphraten. 360
Hierico, in Palæst. prima 358
Hierocæsarea, in Lydia 370
Hierusalem, in Palæst. prima 357, 359
Himerius, in Osrhoene 360
Hippo-Zarito, al. Diarritorum, in Afric. Procon. 353 Hippo-Regius, in Numid. Ibid.
Hippus, in Palæst. secunda 358
Hipsele, in Thebais prima 354
Hipsus, in Phryg. Salut. 372
Hircanis, in Lydia 370
Hispalis, Sevil, in Bœtica 390
Hispellum, Spello, in Umbria 380
Honomada, in Lycaonia 371
Hortanum, Orta, in Tuscia 379
Hyda, in Lycaonia 371
Hydmautus, in Lycaonia Ibid.
Hydrax, in Pentapolis 355
Hydruntum, Otranto, in Calabria 384
Hypæpa, in Asia 370

I.

Jabruda, in Phœnic. Liban. 360
Jadera, in Dalmatia 376
Jamnia, in Palæst. prima 357
Jamna, in Minorc. 391
Iassus, in Caria 370
Ibonium, Vid. Bivinum
Iborea, in Helenopontus 368
Iconium, in Lycaonia 371
Ignatia 384
Ilerda, Lerida, in Tarracon. 389
Ilipa, al. Elipla, in Bœtica, Niebla 390
Illici, Alicante, in Carthaginensis Hispan. Ibid.
Ilistra, in Lycaonia 371
Illiturgi, incertæ posit. in Hispan.
Ilium, in Hellespont. 369
Illuzi, in Phryg. Pacat. 372
Ingilon, Urbs incertæ posit.
Insulæ, Vid. Hebrides
Interamnia, Terni, in Umbria 380
Interamnia, Teramo, in Picenum Suburb. 381
Jonopolis, Vid. Junopolis, in Paphlagonia 368
Joppa, in Palæst. prima 358
Jotape, in Isauria 372
Irenopolis, in Cilicia secunda Ibid.
Iria Flavia, El. Padron, in Gallæcia 390
Isaura, in Lycaonia 371
Iscus, in Dacia Ripensis 376
Isindus, in Pamphylia secunda 371
Istonium, in Samnium 384
Italica, Sevilla la Vieia, in Bœtica 390
Iroana, in Phryg. Pacat. 372
Juliopolis, in Galat. prima 368
Junopolis, in Paphlagon. Ibib.
Juritum, Urbs incertæ posit.
Justiniana prima, in Prævalitana 376
Justinopolis, al. Mociissus, in Cappad. tertia page 367
Juvavia, in Noricum 377

L.

Labdia vel Lapda
Lacedæmon, in Achaia 375
Lacobriga, incertæ posit. in Hispan.
Lactoratium, Lectoure, in Novempop. 388
Lagania, in Pamphyl. secunda 371
Lamecum, Lamego, in Gallæcia 390
Lamia, in Thessalia 375
Lampsacus, in Hellesp. 369
Lamphania, Urbs incertæ posit.
Lamus, in Isauria 372
Landava, Landaff, in Britan. secunda 394
Laniobra, incertæ posit. in Hispan.
Laodicea, in Phryg. Pacat. 372
Laodicea, in Pisidia 371
Laodicea, in Theodorias 360
Laodicea, in Phœnicia Libani Ibid.
Lapithus, in Cyprus Ibid.
Lappa, in Creta 375
Laranda, in Lycaonia 371
Larima, in Caria 370
Larissa, in Thessalia 375
Larissa, in Syria secunda 360
Lærus, Urbs vel Insula, incertæ posit. in Ægæo Mar.
Lascara, Lescar, in Novempopulania 388
Latopolis, in Thebais secunda 354
Laudunum, Laon, in Belgica secunda 389
Laverica, incertæ posit. in Hispan.
Lavici, in Latium 382
Laureacum, Lork, in Noricum 377
Laus Pompeia, Lodi, in Liguria 386
Lauzada, in Isauria 372
Lebedus, in Asia 370
Ledra, in Cyprus 360
Legecestria, in Britan. 394
Legio, Leon, in Gallæcia 390
Lemandus, in Pentapolis 355
Lemovica, Limoges, in Aquitan. prima 388
Leontini, in Sicilia 384
Leontopolis, in Augustamn. secunda 354
Leptis magna, in Tripolis Ibid.
Lete, in Macedonia 375
Letus, in Ægypt. prima 354
Lexovium, Lisieux, in Lugd. secunda 389
Libias, in Palæst. prima 358
Lichfeldia, in Britan. 394
Limenopolis, in Pisidia 371
Limyra, in Lycia Ibid.
Lindisarnia, in Britan. 394
Lindocolina, al. Lindum-Colonia, Lincoln, in Britan. 393
Lingonum, Civ. Langres, in Lugd. prima 389
Linoe, in Bithynia secunda 369
Lipara Insula 384
Lirbæ, in Pamphyl. prima 371
Lissus, Alessio, in Prævalitana 376
Lisia, Urbs incertæ posit.
Lista 381
Lisinia, in Pisidia
Liturnum, in Campan. 383
Locri, in Brutia 384
Londinum, in Britan. 393
Lorium, in Tuscia 379
Lorima, in Caria
Luca, in Tuscia page 379
Lucus Augusti, Lugo, in Gallæcia 390
Luetum, Urbs incertæ posit.
Lugdunum, Lion, in Lugd. prima 389
Luna, in Tuscia 379
Lutevensium Civitas, Lodove, in Narbon. prima 388
Lybias, in Isauria 372
Lycopolis, in Thebais prima 354
Lychnidus, in Epirus Nov. 375
Lydda, Vid. Diospolis 357
Lydde, in Palæst. prima 358
Lylibæum, in Sicilia 384
Lypia, in Calabria Ibid.
Lysias, in Phryg. Salut. 372
Lysimachia, in Europa 374
Lysinia, in Pamphylia secunda 371
Lystra, in Lycaonia Ibid.

M.

Macedonopolis, Urbs incertæ posit. in Mesopotamia
Magalona, Isle of Magalone, in Narbon. secunda 388
Magidis, in Pamphyl. secunda 371
Magnesia Mæandri, in Asia, 370
Magnesia Sipyli, in Asia Ibid.
Magnetum, incertæ posit. in Hispan.
Majorca Insula 390
Maiuma, in Palæst. prima 358
Malaca, Malaga, in Bœtica 390
Malleotana, Urbs incertæ posit. forsan Malliattha, in Arabia
Mallus, in Cilicia prima 372
Malus, in Pisid. 371
Manturanum, in Tuscia 379
Mœonia, in Lydia 370
Marcelilanum, Vid. Cosilianum
Marciana, in Lycia 371
Marcopolis, in Osrhoene 360
Mareotis, in Ægypt. prima 354
Margus, in Mœsia prima 376
Mariana, in Corsica 385
Mariama, in Syria secunda 360
Marianopolis, in Euphratesia Ibid.
Marianum, in Venetia 387
Marmarica, in Libya 355
Maronia, in Rhodope 374
Marathon, in Achaia 375
Marrubium, al. Marsi, in Valeria 381
Martianopolis, in Mœsia secunda 374
Martyropolis, in Mesopotamia 360
Massilia, Marseilles, in Viennensis secunda 388
Mastaura, in Asia 370
Mastaura in Lycia. 371
Matelica, in Picen. Suburbicar. 381
Matisco, Mascon, in Lugd. prima 389
Mauriana, St. Jean de Maurienne, in Viennens. 388
Maximianopolis, in Arabia 357
Maximianopolis, in Rhodope 374
Maximianopolis, in Pamph. secunda 371
Maximianopolis, in Palæst. secunda 358
Maximianopolis, in Thebais secunda 354
Medaba, in Arabia 357
Mediolanum, Milan, in Liguria 386
Mediomatricum, Metz, in Belg. prima 389
Megalopolis, in Achaia 375
Megara, in Achaia Ibid.
Melda, Meaux 389

Melsia,

Melſia, in Apulia page 384
Melita Inſula Ibid.
Melitene, in Armenia ſecunda 367
Melitopolis, in Helleſpont. 369
Melos Inſula 373
Memphis, in Arcadia 354
Menelai, in Ægypt. prima Ibid.
Menevia, St. David's in Britan. 394
Mennith, in Palæſt. ſecunda 358
Menteſa, Mentexa, in Carth. Hiſpan. 390
Meſenbria, in Hæmimont. 374
Meſſana, in Sicilia 384
Meſſene, in Achaia 375
Metelis, in Ægypt. prima 354
Methymna, in Lesbos 373
Metrocomia, Vid. Bacatha, in Palæſt. tertia
Metropolis, in Aſia 370
Metropolis, in Theſſalia 375
Metropolis, in Piſidia 371
Mevania, Bevagna, in Umbria 380
Midaium, in Phryg. Sal. 372
Migirpa, in Proconſul. Africa.
Mignenia, Urbs incertæ poſit. forſan Magniana, in Illyricum Occidentale.
Miletus, in Caria 370
Milcum, al. Milevi, in Numidia 353
Minizus, al. Mnizus, in Meſopotamia 360
Minoida, al. Menith, in Palæſtina ſecunda 358
Minorica Inſula 391
Minturnæ, in Campan. 383
Miſenum, in Campan. Ibid.
Miſthium, in Lycaonia 371
Mociſſus, Vid. Juſtinopolis, in Cappad. tertia 367
Mocta, Vid. Mopta vel Mozota.
Moguntia, Ments, in Germ. prima 389
Molitianum, Urbs incertæ poſit.
Mopſueſtia, in Cilicia ſecunda 372
Morea, al. Famagorca, Urbs incertæ poſitionis
Moſthena, in Lydia 370
Moſynus, in Phryg. Pac. 372
Muranum, in Brutia 384
Murſa, in Pannonia Inferior 377
Mutina, Modena, in Æmylia 385
Myndus, in Caria 370
Myra, in Lycia 371
Myrrhina, in Aſia 370
Myriangelus, Urbs incertæ poſitionis
Myrum, al. Merum, in Phrygia Salutaris 372
Mytilene, in Lesbos 373

N.

Nacolia, in Phryg. Salut. 372
Naiſus, in Dacia Ripenſis 376
Namnetum Civitas, Nantes, in Lugd. tertia 389
Narbo, in Narbonnenſis prima 388
Narnia, Narni, in Umbria, 380
Naucratis, in Ægypt. prima 354
Naulochus, in Aſia 370
Naupactus, Lepanto, in Achaia 375
Naxus Inſula 373
Nazianzum, in Cappadocia tertia 367
Nea, Vid. Sanea, in Phryg. Pacat. 372
Neapolis, Naples, in Campania 383
Neapolis, in Macedon. 375
Neapolis, in Caria 370
Neapolis, in Arabia 357
Neapolis, Sichem, in Palæſtina prima page 358
Nebium, in Corſica 385
Necla, Vid. Elana, in Arabia 357
Nemauſus, Niſmes, in Narbonnenſis 388
Neocæſarea, in Pontus Polemon. 367
Neocæſarea, in Bithynia 369
Neocæſarea, Vid. Cæſarea, in Euphratenſis 360
Nepe, in Tuſcia 379
Nephelis, in Iſauria 372
Neritum, Nardo, in Calabria 384
Neſſyna, in Dardania 376
Neſus, in Lycia 371
Nibe, in Arabia 357
Nicæa, Nice, in Alpes Maritimæ 388
Nicæa, Nice, in Bithynia 369
Nicephorium, in Oſrhoene, 360
Nicium, in Ægypt. prima 354
Nicomedia, in Bithynia 369
Nicopolis, in Epir. Vet. 375
Nicopolis, in Mœſia ſecunda 374
Nicopolis, in Thracia Ibid.
Nicopolis, in Armen. prima 367
Nicopolis, Emmaus, in Palæſt. prima 357, 359
Nicotera, in Brutia, 384
Nilopolis, in Arcadia 354
Niſibis, in Meſopotamia 360, 363
Niſilectum, Urbs incertæ poſit.
Nitria, in Ægypt. prima 354
Nivernum, Nevers, in Lugd. quarta 389
Nola, in Campan. 383
Nomentum, Lamentano, in Valeria 381
Noſalena, Urbs incertæ poſit. forſan, in Armenia Minor
Nova, in Venetia 387
Nova Aula, in Aſia 370
Novæ, in Mœſia ſecunda 374
Novaria, in Liguria 386
Noviodunum, in Pannonia Inferior 377
Noviodunum, Noyon, in Belgica ſecunda 389
Nuceria, Nocera, in Umbria 380
Numana, Humana, in Picen. Suburb. 381
Nurſia, in Valeria Ibid.
Nyſa, in Aſia 370
Nyſſa, in Cappad. prima 367

O.

Oaſis, in Thebais prima 354
Occa, in Helleſpont. 369
Ocriculum, in Umbria 380
Octodurum, Martenach, in Alpes Graiæ 388
Odeſſus, in Mœſia ſecunda 374
Oea, in Tripolis 354
Oeneanda, in Lycia 371
Olbia, in Pamphyl. ſecunda Ibid.
Olbiæ, in Pentapolis 355
Olbus, in Iſauria 372
Olero, Oleron, in Novempopulania 388
Oliva, in Maur. Sitif.
Olympus, in Lycia 371
Olyſippo, Lisbon, in Luſitan. 390
Onoſada, in Lycaonia 371
Onoſarta, in Syria prima 360
Onium, in Auguſtamnica ſecunda 354
Onuphis, in Ægypt. prima Ibid.
Opitergium, Oderzo, in Venetia 387
Opita, Urbs incertæ poſit.
Opus, in Achaia 375
Orcades, in Britan. 392
Orciſtus, in Galatia ſecunda 368
Oreſtis, in Brutia 384
Oretum, Oreto, in Carthag. 390
Oreum, in Achaia 375
Orgellum, in Tarracon. 390
Orthoſias, in Phœnicia prima 360
Orthoſias, in Caria 370
Ortona, in Samnium 384
Oſca, in Tarracon. 389
Oſſiſimorum, in Lugdunenſis tertia Ibid.
Oſſonaba, Eſtoi, in Luſitan. 390
Oſtia, in Latium 378, 382
Oſtracina, in Auguſtamn. prima 354
Otrum, in Phrygia Salut. 372
Ovilabis, in Noricum 377
Oximum, Hieſmes, in Lugdunenſis ſecunda 389
Oxirinchus in Arcadia 354
Oxoma, al. Uxama, Oſma, in Carthaginenſis 390

P.

Pachneumenis, in Ægypt. ſecunda 354
Palladianum, Urbs incertæ poſit.
Palæopolis, in Aſia 370
Palæopolis, in Pamphylia ſecunda 371
Palebiſca, in Pantapol. 355
Pallentia, in Carthag. 390
Palma, in Majorca 391
Palmyra, in Phœnic. Libani 360
Paltos, in Theodorias, al. Syria prima Ibid.
Pampilona, in Tarracon. 389
Panæphyſus, in Auguſtamn. prima 354, 356
Paneas, al. Cæſarea Philippi, in Phœnic. prima 360
Panemoticus, in Pamphylia ſecunda 371
Panium, in Europa 373
Panopolis, in Thebais prima 354
Panormus, Palermo, in Sicilia 384
Paphos, in Cyprus 360
Papa, in Lycaonia 371
Paretonium, in Libya 355
Paralais, in Piſidia 371
Parallus, in Arcadia 354
Paralus, in Ægypt. ſecunda Ibid.
Paraxia, Urbs incertæ poſit. in Macedonia
Parembola, in Arabia 357
Parentium, in Hiſtria 387
Pariſii, Paris, in Lugdunenſis quarta 389
Parium, in Helleſpont. 369
Parma, in Æmylia 385
Parnaſſus, in Cappadocia tertia 367
Paræcopolis, in Macedonia 375
Paros Inſula 373
Paroſithus, Urbs incertæ poſitionis
Parus, Urbs incertæ poſitionis in Piſidia.
Partenium, in Maur. Sitif.
Patara, in Lycia 371
Patavia, al. Batavia Caſtra, Paſſaw, in Noricum 377
Patavium, Padua, in Venetia 387
Patavium, in Bithynia 369
Paternum, Urbs incertæ poſitionis, in Cappadocia ſecunda, forſan Parnaſſus

An INDEX of Episcopal Sees.

Patræ, in Achaia Page 375
Pausola, in Pisen. Suburb. 381
Pautalia, in Dardania 376
Pæstum 384
Pella, in Pamphylia secunda 371
Pella, in Palæst. secunda 358
Pelte, in Phryg. Pac. 372
Peluſium, in Auguſtamnica prima 354
Penteneſus, al. Pedneliſſus, in Pamphyl. ſecunda 371
Pepere vel Perpere, in Aſia 370
Perga, in Pamphyl. ſecund. 371
Pergamus, in Aſia 370
Perre, in Euphratenſis 360
Periorcis, Urbs incertæ poſitionis, in Libya vel Ægypto.
Perte, in Lycaonia 371
Peruſcia, in Tuſcia 379
Perſinus, in Galatia ſecunda 368
Petavia, Petow, in Pannonia 377
Peteniſſus, in Galatia ſecunda 368
Petuiſſus, in Galatia ſecunda Ibid.
Petra, in Lazica 373
Petra, in Palæſt. prima 358
Petra, in Palæſt. tertia Ibid.
Petræ, in Achaia 375
Petricorium, Petigueux, in Aquitan. ſecunda 388
Phacuſa, in Auguſtamnica prima 354
Phalaris, in Tuſcia 379
Pharan, in Palæſt. tertia 358
Pharbæthus, in Auguſt. ſecunda 354
Pharnacea, Urbs incertæ poſit. in Pontus, al. Cilicia.
Phaſelis, in Lycia 371
Phaſis, in Lazica 373
Phauſania, in Sardinia 385
Phellus, in Lycia 371
Phenon, in Palæſtina tertia 358
Philadelphia, in Lydia 370
Philadelphia, in Iſauria 372
Philadelphia, in Arabia 357
Philæ, in Thebais ſecunda 355
Philippi, in Macedonia ſecunda 374
Philippopolis, in Phryg. Pac. 372
Philippopolis, in Thracia 374
Philippopolis, in Arabia 357
Philomeum, in Piſidia 371
Phocæa, in Aſia 370
Phœnicia, in Epir. Vet. 375
Photica, in Epir. Vet. Ibid.
Phragonea, in Ægypt. ſecund. 354, 356
Phthenoti, in Ægypt. prima 354
Phuphena, Urbs incertæ poſitionis, in Iſauria vel Armenia Minor
Pictavi, Poictiers, in Aquitania ſecunda 388
Pinna, in Picenum Suburb. 381
Pionia, in Helleſpont. 369
Piſa, in Tuſcia 379
Piſaurum, Peſaro, in Piſenum Annonar. 385
Piſinda, in Pamphyl. ſecunda 371
Pitane, in Aſia 370
Pitius in Pontus 368, 373
Pitinum, in Valeria 381
Placentia, in Æmilia 385
Platææ, in Achaia 375
Placia, Urbs incertæ poſitionis, in Galatia vel Bithynia.
Platanus, Urbs incertæ poſit. in Syria vel Phœnicia
Plutinopolis, in Hæmimont. 374
Podalæa, in Lycia 371
Pœmanium, in Helleſpont. 369
Pœſtum, in Lucania 384
Pola, in Hiſtria 387
Polemonium, in Pontus Polemoniacus Page 367
Polybutus, in Phryg. Salut. 372
Polymartium, Bomaſo, in Tuſcia 379
Pompeiopolis, in Paphlagon. 368
Pompeiopolis, in Silicia prima 372
Populonia, in Tuſcia 379
Poroſolene Inſula 373
Porphyrium, in Phœnicia prima 360
Porthmus, in Achaia 375
Portus Oreſtis, in Brutia 384
Portucale, El Puerro, in Gallæcia 390
Portus Auguſti, Porto, in Tuſcia 379
Potentia, in Picenum Suburbicarium 381
Potentia, in Lucania 384
Præconneſus, in Helleſpont. 369
Prænceſte, Palæſtrina, in Valeria 381
Præneſte, in Latium 382
Prænetum, in Bithyn. 369
Præpeniſſus, in Phrygia Salutaris 371
Priene, in Aſia 370
Primopolis, in Pamphylia ſecunda 371
Primula, in Macedon. 375
Prine, in Epirus Nova Ibid.
Priſta, al. Triſta and Sexantapriſta in Mœſia ſecunda 374
Privatum, in Maur. Sitif.
Proſolene Inſula, Vid. Poroſol.
Proſtama, in Piſidia 371
Pruſa, in Honorias 368
Pruſa, in Bithynia 369
Prymneſia, in Phrygia Salutaris 372
Pſynchus, Vid. Oxyrinchus 355
Ptolemais, in Thebais ſecunda 354
Ptolemais, in Phœnicia prima 360
Ptolemais, in Pentapolis 355
Ptyuſa, in Lazica vel Pontus Polemon. 373
Pugla, in Pamphyl. ſecunda 371
Puteoli, Puzzolo, in Campania 383
Pylæ, in Cherſoneſus Ibid.

Q.

Quintanæ, in Rhœtia ſecunda 386

R.

Rabba, Vid. Petra 358
Rachlæna, Urbs incertæ poſitionis, in Phœnicia
Raphanea, in Syria ſecunda 360
Raphia, in Palæſt. prima 358
Rapta, Urbs incertæ poſit. in Africa
Ratiſponia, in Rhœtia ſecunda 386
Ravenna, in Flaminia 385
Reate, in Valeria 381
Redonum Civitas, Renes in Lugdunenſis tertia 389
Regium Lepidi, Reggio, in Æmylia 385
Regium, or Reij, Riez, in Narbon. ſecunda 388
Remiſſiana, in Dacia 376
Remi, Remes, in Belgica ſecunda 389
Rhegium, Rezo, in Brutia 384
Rheſina, in Meſopotamia 360
Rhinocorura, in Auguſtamnica prima 354
Rhizinium, in Prævalitana 376
Rhodia, in Lycia 371
Rhodus Inſula 373
Rhofi, Rocheſter, in Britan. 394
Rocus, Urbs incertæ poſit.
Roma, in Latium and Tuſcia 377
Romatiana, Vid. Remiſſiana
Roſſus, in Cilic. ſecund. Page 372
Rothomagum, Rouen, in Lugd. ſecunda 389
Ruſella, in Ruſcia 379
Rutena, Rhodes, in Aquit. prima 388
Rubi, Ruvo, in Apulia 384

S.

Sabaria, in Pannon. prima 377
Sabatra, in Lycaonia 371
Sabiona, in Venetia 387
Sabrata, in Tripolis 354
Sabrita in Creta 375
Sæpinum, in Samnium 384
Sagalaſſus, in Piſidia 371
Sais, in Ægypt. prima 354
Sagium, Seez, in Lugdunenſis ſecunda 389
Salamis, Vid. Conſtantia
Salapia, Salpe, in Apulia 384
Salaria, in Carthagin. 390
Salernum, in Campan. 383
Salmantica, Salamanca, in Luſitan. 390
Salona, in Dalmatia 376
Salpis, in Tuſcia 379
Samnium, in Samnium 384
Samos Inſula 373
Samoſata, in Euphrat. 360
Sanaſer, in Sardinia 385
Sanicienſium Civitas, Senez, in Alpes Marit. 388
Sanis, in Phryg. Pacat. 372
Santonum, Civ. Saintes, in Aquit. ſecunda 388
Sarcina, in Flaminia 385
Sardica, in Dacia 376
Sardis, in Lydia 370
Saracene, incertæ poſit. in Arabia 360
Sarta, Urbs incertæ poſit.
Saſima, in Cappad. ſecunda 367
Satala in Lydia 370
Satala, in Armen. prima 367
Savona, in Alpes Cottiæ 386
Sæpinum in Samnium 384
Sbide, in Iſauria 372
Scampes, in Epir. Nov. 375
Scarabantia, in Pannon. 377
Scarphia, in Theſſalia 375
Scenæ Mandrorum, in Auguſtamnica ſecunda 354
Scepſis, in Helleſpont. 369
Schedia, in Ægypt. prima 354, 356
Scodra, in Prævalitana 376
Scupi, in Dardania Ibid.
Scyllatium, in Brutia 384
Scythopolis, in Palæſt. ſecunda 358
Sebaſta, in Phryg. Pac. 372
Sebaſte, in Cilic. prima Ibid.
Sebaſte, in Armen. prima. 367
Sebaſte, Samaria, in Palæſt. prima 358
Sebaſtopolis, in Armenia prima 367
Sebennytus, in Ægypt. ſecunda 354
Secobia, Segovia, in Carthag. 390
Secorus, in Achaia 375
Sedunum Valeſiorum, Syon en Valez, in Alpes Graiæ 388
Segeſtero, Ciſteron, in Narbonnenſis ſecunda Ibid.
Sagobrica, Segorbe, in Carthag. 390
Segonti, al. Saguntum, Sigueuſa, in Carthag. Ibid.
Sela, in Auguſtam. prima 354
Selenus, in Iſauria 372
Seleucia and Cteſipon, in Aſſyria 364

Seleucia Ferrea, in Pisidia page 371
Seleucia, in Pamphyl. secunda Ibid.
Seleucia Pieria, in Syria prima 360
Seleucia Beli, in Syr. secunda Ibid.
Seleucia, in Isauria 372
Selga, in Pamphyl. prima 371
Selembria, in Europa 374
Sellæ, Urbs incertæ posit.
Semneum, in Pamphylia prima 371
Sene, Siena, in Tuscia 379
Senna, in Pamphyl. secunda 371
Senia, Segna, in Dalmatia 376
Senogallia, Senogaglia, in Picenum Annon. 385
Senonum Civitas, Sens, in Lugd. quarta 389
Seolseia, in Britan. prima 394
Septe, in Lydia 370
Septempeda, S. Severino, in Picen. Suburb. 381
Serræ, al. Philippi, in Macedonia 375
Sergiopolis, in Euphratensis 360
Settus, in Hellespont.
Serra, in Lydia 370
Setabis, Xativa, in Carthaginensis 390
Sexantaprista, in Mœsia secunda 374
Sibindus, in Phryg. Salutar.
Sichem, Vid. Neapolis 358
Sida, in Pamphylia 371
Sidon, in Phœnicia prima 360, 362
Sidonia, in Creta 375
Sidnacester, in Britan. 394
Sidyma, in Lycia 371
Signia, Segni, in Latium 382
Silandus, in Lydia 370
Silbium, in Phryg. Pac. 372
Silva Candida, Sancta Ruffina, in Tuscia 379
Silvanectum, Senlis, in Belgica secunda 389
Silvium, in Pamphylia secunda 371
Simidica, in Afric. Procon.
Singidunum, in Pannonia Inferior 377
Siniandus, in Pisidia 371
Sinuada, in Phryg. Salut. 372
Sinna Municipium, in Africa Procon. incertæ posit.
Sinnai, in Phryg. Pac. 372
Sinope, in Helenopontus 368
Sion, in Asia 370
Sipontum, in Apulia 384
Sirmium, in Pan. Infer. 377
Siscia, in Pannon. Infer. Ibid.
Sisdra, in Pamphyl. prima 371
Siteum, in Creta
Smyrna, in Asia 370
Sobara, in Lycaonia 371
Sodera, in Jona Insula
Sodoma, in Palæst. tertia 358
Soli, in Cyprus 360
Solva, in Noricum 377
Sophene, in Armen. Magna 367
Sora, in Latium 382
Sora, in Paphlagonia 368
Sozopolis, in Hæmimont. 374
Sozopolis, in Pisidia 371
Sozusa, in Pentapolis 355
Sozusa, in Palæst. prima 357
Spira Nemetum, in German. prima 389
Spoletum, Spoleto, in Umbria 380
Stabiæ, in Campania 383
Standita, in Lydia 370
Stauropolis, in Caria Ibid.
Stectorium, in Phrygia Salutaris 372
Stephane, Urbs incertæ posit. in Phocide vel Galatia.
Stobi, in Macedonia 375
Strategis, in Achaia Ibid.
Stratonice, in Caria 370
Stratonicia, in Lydia Ibid.
Stridon, Gran, in Pannonia Inferior 377
Suana, in Tuscia 379
Subaugusta Helena, in Latium 378, 382
Subrita, in Creta
Subsadia, in Europa 374
Suessa, in Campania 383
Sulchi, in Sardinia 385
Sulmo, in Samnium 384
Sura, in Euphratensis 360
Surrentum, in Campan. 383
Sutrium, in Tuscia 379
Sycamazon, in Palæst. prima 358
Sycaminon, in Phœnicia prima 360
Synnada, Vid. Sinnada, in Phryg. Salut. 372
Syracusæ, in Sicilia 384

T.

Tabæ, in Caria 370
Tabia, in Galatia prima 368
Tacape, in Tripolis 354
Tadinum, in Umbria 380
Talbonda, in Pamphylia secunda 371
Tamassus, in Cyprus 360
Tamita, in Corsica 385
Tanagra, in Achaia 375
Tanis, in Augustamnica prima 354
Tarantasia, in Alpes Graiæ 388
Tarba, al. Bigorra, Tarbes, in Novempopulania 388
Tarentum, Taranto, in Calabria 384
Tarquina, in Tuscia 379
Tarentum, Taricina, in Campania 382
Tarracona, in Tarraconénsis 389
Tarsus, in Cilicia prima 372
Taruana, Teruenne, in Belgica secunda 389
Tarvisium, Treviso, in Venetia 387
Tathyris, in Thebais secunda 355
Taua, in Ægyptus prima 354
Taurianum, Semmara, in Brutia 384
Tauromenium, Taormina, in Sicilia 384
Teanum, in Campania 383
Teate, in Samnium 384
Tegea, in Achaia 375
Tegula, in Sardinia 385
Telmessus, in Lycia 371
Temenothyræ, in Phrygia Pacatiana 372
Temnus, in Asia 370
Tempsa, in Brutia 384
Tenedos, Insula 373
Tentyra, al. Tenchira, in Thebais secunda 354
Tenus Insula 373
Teos, in Asia 370
Tephra, in Homeritarum Regione Arabic. 364
Tergestum, Trieste, in Histria 387
Termessus, in Pamphylia secunda 371
Teuchira, in Pentapolis 355
Teuchira, in Thebais secunda 354
Thamiate, in Arcadia Ibid.
Thassus, in Macedon 375
Theatea, in Samnium, Vid. Teate
Thebæ Phthioticæ, in Thessalia 375
Thebæ, in Achaia prge 375
Thebais, in Thebais secunda 354
Themissus, in Phryg. Pacat.
Themisonium, in Phrygia Pacatiana 372
Thennesus, in Augustamnica prima 354, 356
Theodosiopolis Nova, in Europa 374
Theodosiopolis, in Cappadocia prima 367
Theodosiopolis, in Arcadia 354
Theodosiopolis, in Pisidia 371
Theodosiopolis, in Phryg. Pacat. 372
Thera Insula 373
Therenunthis, in Theb. secund. 355
Thermæ, in Sicilia 384
Thermæ Regiæ, in Hellespont. Vid. Germæ 369
Thermæ, in Cappadocia prima 367
Thespiæ, in Achaia 375
Thessaloniea, in Macedonia prima 374
Thiatira, in Phryg. Salutaris
Thinis, in Thebais secunda 354
Thmuis, in Augustamnica prima Ibid.
Thoi, in Thebais secunda 355
Thou, in Augustamnica secunda 354
Thurium, in Brutia 384
Thymbria, in Asia 370
Thyatira, in Lydia Ibid.
Tiberias, in Palæstina secunda 358
Tiberiopolis, in Phrygia Pacatiana 372
Tiberiopolis, in Cyprus 360
Tibur, Tivoli, in Valeria 381
Ticelia, in Pentapolis 355
Ticinum, Pavia, in Liguria 386
Tiella, Vid. Zella, in Bizacena
Tifernum Tiberinum, Citta di Castello, in Umbria 380
Tifernum Metaurense, in Picenum Annonar. 385
Tindarium, in Sicilia 384
Titiopolis, in Isauria 372
Titua, in Pamphylia secunda
Tium, in Honorias 368
Tios, in Lycia 371
Tityassus, in Pisidia Ibid.
Tolentinum, in Picenum Suburbicarium 381
Toletum, Toledo, in Carthag. 390
Tolonium, Tolon, in Viennensis 388
Tolosa, Tholouse, in Narbonnensis Ibid.
Tomi, in Scythia 373
Topiris, in Rhodope 374
Torcellum, in Venetia 387
Torone, in Macedonia 375
Tornaeum, Tournay, in Belgica secunda 389
Trajanopolis, in Rhodope 374
Trallis, in Asia 370
Trallis, in Lydia Ibid.
Tranopolis, in Phrygia Pacatiana 372
Tranum, in Apulia 384
Trapezopolis, in Phryg. Pacat. 372
Trapezus, Trebisond, in Pontus Polemon. 367
Trebia, in Umbria 380
Trecæ, Troyes, in Lugdunensis quarta 389
Tremenothyri, in Phrygia Pacatiana, Vid. Temenothyræ 372
Tremithus, in Cyprus 360
Tres Tabernæ, Cisterna, in Latium 382
Tricastinorum Civitas, St. Paule des Trois Chasteau, in Vien. secunda 388

Triccæ, in Thessalia page 375
Tridentum, Trent, in Venetia 387
Triocata, in Sicilia 384
Tripolis, in Phœnicia prima 360
Tripolis, in Lydia 370
Troas, in Hellespont. 369
Trocmi, in Galatia secunda 368
Tropia, in Brutia 384
Truentum, in Picenum Suburbicarium 381
Tucci, Martos, in Bœtica 390
Tude, Tuy, in Gallæcia Ibid.
Tuder, Todi, in Umbria 380
Tullum, Toul, in Belgica prima 389
Tugronorum Civitas, Tongeren, in German. secunda Ibid.
Turonorum Civ. Tours, in Lugdunensis tertia Ibid.
Turre Blandis, in Bizac.
Turris Libisonis, in Sardinia 385
Tuscania, in Tuscia 379
Tusculum, Frescati, in Latium 378, 382
Tyana, in Cappadocia secunda 367
Tymbria, in Asia.
Tyrassona, Tarazona, in Tarraconnensis 389
Tyrus, in Phœnicia prima 360, 362

V.

Valencia, Valence, in Viennensis prima 388
Valentia, Valencia, in Carthaginensis 390
Valentia ad Minium, Valenzia al. Menno, in Gallæcia Ibid.
Valentinianopolis, in Asia 370
Valeria, Valera le Vieia, in Carthaginensis 390
Valva, in Samnium 384
Vantena, Vid. Antinoe, in Thebais prima 355
Vapincum, Gap, in Narbonnensis secunda 388
Vasada, Vide Lauzada, in Cilicia secunda
Vasatæ, Basas, in Novempopulania page 388
Vasio, Vaison, in Viennensis secunda Ibid.
Ucecience Castrum, Uzes, in Narbonensis prima Ibid.
Velia, in Lucania 384
Velia, Veleia, in Tarraconensis 390
Velitræ, Velitri, in Latium 382
Vellava, al. Anicium, La Puy en Vellay, in Aquitannia prima 388
Venafrum, in Campania 383
Vencienſium Civitas, Vence, in Alpes Maritimæ 388
Venetia, Vennes, in Lugdunensis tertia 389
Venta, Wincheſter, in Britannia 394
Venusia, in Apulia 384
Vercellæ, Vercelli, in Liguria 386
Verodunum, Verdun, in Belgica prima 389
Verona, in Venetia 387
Verulæ, Veroli, in Latium 382
Vettonium, Bittona, in Umbria 380
Vibo-Valentia, Bivona, in Brutia 384
Vicentia, Vicenza, in Venetia
Vicohabentia, Vicovenza, in Flaminia 385
Vienna, in Viennensis prima 388
Vigiliæ, in Apulia 384
Vigintimilium, Vintimiglia, in Alpes Cottiæ 386
Vindobona, Vien, in Pannonia superior 377
Vindoniſſa, Winich, in Maxima Sequanorum 389
Viseum, Viseo, in Gallæcia 390
Visontium, Bezanson, in Maxima Sequan. 389
Ulpianum, in Dardania 376
Unnogorita, Urbs incertæ positionis.
Unzela, in Pamphylia secunda 371
Volaterra, in Tuscia 379
Volscæ, al. Vulci, in Tuscia Ibid.
Volsinium, Bolsena, in Tuscia Ibid.
Urbinum, in Picenum Annonarium 385
Urbs Salvia, Urbisaglia, in Picenum Suburbicarium page 381
Urbs Vetus, Orvieto, in Tuscia 379
Urci, Orce, in Carthaginensis 390
Urcinium, in Corsica 385
Uria, in Calabria 384
Urima, in Euphratensis 360
Vulturnum, in Campania 383
Uxentum, Ugento, in Calabria 384

W.

Wigornia, in Britan. 394
Wintonia, Vid. Venta.
Wormatia Vangionum, Worms, in Germ. prima 389

X.

Xanthus, in Lycia 371
Xoes, in Ægyptus secunda 354

Z.

Zabulon, in Palæstina prima 358
Zagylis, in Libya 355
Zapara, in Macedonia 375
Zarmizegethusa, in Gothia 376
Zela, in Helenopontus 368
Zelona, Idem 367
Zenopolis, in Lycia 371
Zena, forsan Zenopolis.
Zephyrium, in Cilicia prima 372
Zerabena, in Arabia 357
Zerta, in Numidia.
Zeugma, in Euphratensis 360
Zicchia, in Scythia.
Zichna, Urbs incertæ posit. in Macedonia.
Zigga, Vid. Sicca Venerea.
Zoara, in Palæstina tertia 358
Zaropassa, Urbs incertæ posit. in Cilicia vel Isauria.
Zuchabari, Vid. Suburb.
Zygris, in Libya 355

The End of the FIRST VOLUME.